"And, another thing, I am only restrained from discussing what I regard as the most unfortunate incident by the ordinary amenities which should obtain between one gentleman and another. I allude to the fact of the opportunity seized by the Chief Citizen of the Republic to send a member of his family across the water for the purpose of participating in the coronation of a king. I shall not discuss that, because, of necessity, it involves matters I do not care to go into here. I will say in passing that it is a most unfortunate circumstance. It is unprecedented in our history, and is to-day deeply lamented on the part of every country-loving man in the Union. I am sorry he did it. It is establishing a precedent that ought not to be recognized, and it is but one more link in the chain showing toward what end we are drifting.

"One other matter I wish to advert upon. In the next few days we are to have a brother of a ruler come over to this country and take charge of a little tug, ship, vessel or yacht, whatever you please to term it, built by some people up in New York. We are appropriating thousands of dollars, and the Anglomaniacs, the European maniacs, are falling over each other to get to see a little Dutchman come and take charge of a little ship. (Applause on the Democratic side).

"What difference does it make whether he is Prince Henry or not? There are thousands of citizens of this Republic following the plough as noble, as honest, as intelligent as Prince Henry or Prince anybody else. (Applause on the Democratic side).

"Why do the American people give heed to this foolish and disgraceful flunkeyism enacted by the present Administration? What difference does it make to us whether he is a brother of the Emperor, a sister of the Emperor or a mother of the Emperor? It is evidence of our good will, they say. What do we care about the good will of the German people? Let us treat them politely, as one honest man treats another, but why should we bow down to these people any more than to any other citizen?"

BURGHERS WANT TO SURRENDER.

London, Feb. 21.—The correspondent of the Times at Pretoria says the demoralization of the Boers in Eastern Transvaal is marked, and the attitude of the leaders leaves no doubt they consider the situation critical. Reports from north and south of the Delagoa Railway line show that the burghers reluctantly continue the struggle.

Intercepted messages from Commandant Piet Viljoen to Acting President Schalkburger urge the latter to try to counteract the spirit of surrender rife among the burghers. Viljoen, remarks the Times' correspondent, has long been a firebrand, encouraging the Boers with false hopes. He adds that the fact that Commandant-General Botha and Schalkburger are trying to arrange a meeting indicates that they believe the moment has arrived for decisive action.

The correspondent does not predict an immediate general surrender. He says the strong influence of the Boer leaders over their followers may prevail. Even if resistance in the Eastern Transvaal should collapse, the war would continue, though a large number of British troops would be free for service elsewhere.

A despatch from The Hague to the Times says the Standard, formerly the journal of Premier Kuyper, denies the press interviews representing that the Dutch Government acted on its own initiative and not at the instance of Boer leaders and not at the instance of Boer delegates in approaching the British Government.

THE QUESTION OF A HOUSE OF REFUGE

Came Up Before the Town Council Last Night

A BEET SUGAR CONVENTION

A Delegation will Probably Represent the Town Next Tuesday when the Dominion Government will be Asked for Aid

The Town Council met in special session last night, when there were present Mayor T. H. G. Denne and Aldermen Rush, Batten, Shortly, Corkery, McGregor, Roger, Best, Morrison, Edgcumbe and Clinkscale.

BEET SUGAR DELEGATION.

A communication was read from N. B. Gash, Hon. Secretary of the Ontario Beet Sugar Association, in which he asked that Peterborough send a delegation to attend the Beet Sugar convention at Ottawa next Tuesday, when the Dominion Government will be asked to aid, either by bounty or tariff, the establishment of beet sugar industries in Canada. Mr. Gash also pointed out that the Ontario Legislature had promised an appropriation, on the strength of which the Ontario Association had voted $150 towards paying the expenses of delegations, Peterborough being named as one. The C.P.R. and Grand Trunk railways have also agreed to issue to delegates return tickets at single fare rates.

On motion of Ald. Roger, seconded by Ald. Corkery, this matter was left in the hands of the Manufacturers' Committee, with power to act.

ANOTHER TOWN VAULT.

The vault in the town buildings being too small for present purposes, the Property Committee was authorized to lease a room over C. N. Brown's store on Simcoe street, in which to store the overflow of books, documents, etc.

CHANGE OF ROUTE.

In order to avoid confliction with the Bell Telephone Co., the Otonabee Power Co. was empowered to run their wires from King street down Stewart street instead of along Aylmer, as originally agreed upon. By this arrangement the Otonabee Power Co. will, with the consent of the Auburn Power Co., use the latter's poles from King to Dalhousie street.

TELEPHONE RATES.

A communication was read from Mayor Howland, of Toronto, suggesting that the Council sign a petition to the Dominion Government praying that the Bell Telephone Co. be restrained from increasing their present rates. The Council decided to have the petition properly signed and forwarded.

ELECTRIC ENERGY.

Town Clerk Armstrong read a copy of a bill at present before the local house, which will, if passed, authorize any city of 100,000 population to generate or develop electric energy by means of water power or otherwise, either within such city or elsewhere and further, to enter into agreements with any company or persons for the purchase of electric energy, and its transportation or development.

The council did not agree with such privileges being restricted to cities of 100,000 and over, and authorized a memorial being prepared and forwarded to the Hon. J. R. Stratton, asking that legislation be made in this respect to apply to all municipalities, regardless of population.

The bill has already had its first reading, and will probably come up again on Tuesday for its second reading.

A HOUSE OF REFUGE.

This important matter was resurrected by Ald. Geo. M. Roger, who thought something definite should be arrived at. For years past, each successive grand jury has recommended that a home for aged and infirm persons be provided, and this has always resulted in committees being appointed by both the Town and County Councils to consult together on the question. However, nothing definite has ever resulted from these conferences, and the jail continues to be a retiring place for Peterborough paupers. The letter of Mr. D. W. Dumble, published on Wednesday last, was pretty freely commented upon. In this letter, Mr. Dumble quoted an amendment of the Criminal Code, and concluded as follows:

"Under this law I am forbidden to send persons coming within its purview to the county gaol, and hereafter will not do so. It will rest with the town and county to make proper provisions for such cases, as humanity will not suffer you to let them perish, and I am helpless to afford them the desired relief."

Mayor Denne remarked, that the Town was exceedingly liberal in the matter of charity.

The case of Evans, alluded to by Mr. Dumble was discussed, and Ald. Roger said that any case properly chargeable to the Town should be attended to.

No decisive action was taken in this respect, and no explanation was forthcoming as to why the two committees had not recommended the adoption of some charitable institution to meet the requirements. In the course of general comment, however, the County was accused of posing as philanthropists in contradistinction to the attitude of the Town.

Here is a Pointer

Because you haven't used Catarrhozone is the best reason why you should use it right away. It will cure the catarrh that makes your breath so heavy and your hearing so poor. Catarrhozone is a scientific cure for catarrh, bronchitis and asthma, recommended by doctors and druggists as a certain cure. Mr. Henry A. Taylor, the oldest druggist in Halifax, says, "Catarrhozone gives satisfaction wherever it goes. It is simple and convenient to use, and enjoys fully three times the sale of any other catarrh remedy sold in the city." Catarrhozone is guaranteed to cure, and if it fails you can have your money returned. Price $1.00 for two months' treatment. Small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

REVOLUTION THREATENS THE WHOLE SPANISH KINGDOM

Large Numbers of Anarchists and Revolutionists Arrested in Barcelona

ABOUT FORTY PERSONS HAVE BEEN KILLED.

Ordinary Necessaries of Life Failing and Distress is Increasing--- Disturbances Spreading to Other Cities

London, Feb. 21.—Advices received here direct from Bilbao, Valladolid, Corunna, Gijon, and other industrial centres of Spain show that the attitude of the miners and other workers is distinctly threatening. The crisis is as much revolutionary as industrial, and may imperil the dynasty. The greatest excitement prevails everywhere, and the general situation is extremely grave. The garrisons of Braganza, and Vittoria have been ordered to be in readiness to start for Saragossa at a moment's notice. All the railroads are guarded by troops. The civil administration of the whole Province of Saragossa has been taken over by the military authorities.

SITUATION IS SERIOUS.

Madrid, Feb. 21.—According to this morning's advices from Barcelona, the situation there is improving, though it is still threatening. An effort will be made to-day to resume ordinary avocations. The movement is not entirely a labor one, but is rendered serious owing to its revolutionary character. The most stringent measures have been prepared to protect traffic and business. The strikers have few rifles, but they were well supplied with revolvers and daggers. The search of suspected houses continues, resulting in the arrest of large numbers of anarchists and revolutionists of all kinds, who are considered to be the prime movers in the troubles. The cosmopolitan character of Barcelona makes it a resort for representatives of all the revolutionary elements in Europe, and the ranks of the malcontent workmen have been swelled by French and other foreign political agitators. The Republicans are busy among the troops, urging them not to use their arms against their own class in defence of plutocrats. The working people of Madrid favor the strikers. Martial law has been proclaimed at Tarragona. The strike is spreading in the Lobregat and Cardona valleys. There is a general cessation of work at Castellon de la Plana and Garve, and much excitement prevails at Bateau. Forces of gendarmerie have been despatched to those places. Delegates from the labor societies of Saragossa have visited the governor, and declared themselves opposed to the strikers.

KILLED THE RIOTERS.

Barcelona, Feb. 22.—Forty persons have been killed since the disturbances broke out here. The strikers to-day attacked the jail in an attempt to rescue their imprisoned comrades, but they were repulsed by the troops after a number of rioters had been killed or wounded. The ordinary necessaries of life are failing, and the distress is accumulating. The strikers are said to be receiving large sums of money from London. In the neighboring towns the disturbances are spreading and are increasing in gravity.

CONFLICTS ELSEWHERE.

Saragossa, Spain, Feb. 21.—A number of rioters attacked the Jesuit College here last night. The fathers fired on the mob, believing their assailants to be thieves.

SENSATION DENIED.

London, Feb. 21.—Despatches received here from Madrid and Barcelona, and from various frontier towns in close touch with the scenes of the disturbances in Spain, quite discredit the sensational despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company, saying that a fierce battle had been fought between troops and rioters in a suburb of Barcelona, that the artillery raked street after street, and that five hundred persons were reported to have been killed or wounded on both sides. As a matter of fact, up to yesterday, the total number of persons killed throughout the disturbances was only forty.

THREE WOUNDED.

Valencia, Spain, Feb. 21.—In a conflict here yesterday between rioters and the police, three persons were wounded. Fourteen arrests were made.

Bilbao, Spain, Feb. 21.—A number of anarchists have arrived here with the object of inciting a strike. The Socialists have refused to co-operate in the movement.

Castellon de la Plana, Spain, Feb. 21.—The employees and their employers reached an understanding this afternoon, and the strike here is ended.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 22.—The Russian official view of the Anglo-Japanese treaty was given out to-day, as follows:

"We accept the news of the entente with the most complete equanimity, and are very happy to ascertain that England and Japan are pledged to maintain the integrity of China and the independence of Corea, two principles which Russia was the first to establish as the basis of her foreign policy in the Orient.

"Russia would willingly have subscribed to the agreements in the preamble. The English-Japanese say their convention has only essentially pacific aims. This makes it all the more astonishing when they speak of war and coalitions. What power they have in view we cannot say. But, in any case if peace is menaced in the extreme Orient, Russia, for her part, will not fail to take all the measures necessary to safeguard her interests."

Peterborough 10 Newmarket 4

The first game in the finals for the Intermediate O.H.A. championship was played last night at the Charlotte st. rink between Newmarket and Peterborough. The game was called for 8.15 sharp, but as the visitors were delayed in reaching town, the game did not start until 9.05.

The visitors were rather lighter than the home team, and are good skaters and stick handlers, but were not very well up in combination play, although at times they could get the right swing and make it warm for the Peterborough goal.

The teams lined up as follows:

Peterborough		Newmarket.
Wasson	Goal	Kennedy
Glover	Point	Brandrette
Armstrong	Cover	Kelly
Graham	Forwards	Branton
Armstrong		Flannigan
Morgan		O'Halloran
Whitcroft		Cameron

Referee—Mr. Schooley.

Mr. J. Ross Robertson, president of the O.H.A., was at the rink and placed the puck for the face off.

From start to finish, the game was very fast, the visitors holding the home team down in good shape during the first half. Very little rough play was indulged in, and consequently the fence was not decorated very often.

At half-time the score stood 3-1 in favor of Peterborough, and at the finish of the game was 10-4 in favor of the home team.

NOTES.

The work of the Peterborough forwards was excellent. They played a splendid combination game.

Harold Armstrong at cover point put up a good game. His long lifts were all very dangerous to the Newmarket goal.

Rolly Glover at point played an excellent game, as did also Ernie Wasson in goal.

On the Newmarket team, the goalkeeper Kennedy, played a splendid game, but was unable to stop the hailstorm of shots rained on his goal.

Brandrette, an old Peterborough boy, showed the training he got when here and put up a good game. In the first half, however, he had the misfortune to fall and hurt a knee that was injured some time ago, and was obliged to leave the ice for a few minutes, Roy Armstrong going off with him.

The decisions of Mr. Schooley, the referee, were satisfactory to all.

Mr. W. Buchanan, of Toronto, formerly of town, took in the match.

After the game, the visitors were entertained to a grand supper at McCallum's, which was put up in his usual first-class style. Among the visitors present at the supper were President Robertson of the O. H. A., and W. A. Buchanan, both of Toronto.

HEED THE WARNINGS OF DISEASE

Paine's Celery Compound

The Prompt Banisher of Every Ailment

BEGIN ITS USE TO-DAY TO-MORROW MAY BE TOO LAT

It should be borne in mind that diseases of the nervous system do not come without marked warnings. Your neuralgia, rheumatism, sleeplessness, liver and kidney troubles and dyspepsia are all strong appeals for a prompt increase of nourishment for the nerve centres and brain.

Paine's Celery Compound thoroughly nourishes these vital parts, and it is upon its marvellous power of nourishing all the nerve tissues and purifying the blood that its wonderful cures depend. No other medicine in the world possesses such power over obstinate cases of disease; when other medicines fail, Paine's Celery Compound makes sick people well. Begin to-day with Paine's Celery Compound and you will avoid days and weeks of anxiety and suffering.

Mrs. M. J. Walsh, Gerrard street, Toronto, says, "I consider it a duty to tell what Paine's Celery Compound has done for me. For ten years I was a sufferer from kidney disease, piles and heart trouble. I had tried everything that doctors could prescribe but never was relieved until I used Paine's Celery Compound. All pains have left me and I now sleep well—a blessing I had not enjoyed for years. No one should be without Paine's Celery Compound when they are weak and sick. If people would keep a bottle of the compound near them, we would hear of fewer deaths from heart disease."

AN EXCELLENT REPORT

Statement Presented at the Annual Meeting of the Sun Saving and Loan Co.

We congratulate the Managing Director and Board of Directors of the Sun Saving and Loan Company on the financial statement presented at the annual meeting, which took place at the head office, Toronto, on 17th instant. This company has a large and lucrative business throughout Eastern Ontario, and the report will therefore be read with a great interest and satisfaction. It is not necessary to reprint the figures in this column; suffice it to say they show the affairs of the company to be in safe hands, and the future exceedingly bright and hopeful.

In his remarks the President stated that the loans were made on the periodical repayment system, of interest and principal, and the very prompt payments made by borrowers, was proof that great care was being exercised in the section of loans. The securities held by the Company are of the safest character, on productive property, and in localities where values are increasing.

PRIZE SUGAR BEETS

The Calcutt Prize Awarded to the Three Highest Tests in the County

Some months ago Mr. H. Calcutt stated that he would give a prize of $25.00 to be divided between the three men who grew the best beets. Mr. Wm. Collins, Secretary of the Farmer's Institute has received from Prof. Shuttleworth, the analyist who tested the beets, a letter stating who are entitled to the prizes. They are as follows:—

1st, John Riddell, South Monaghan, test 17 per cent.

2nd, C. D. Moore Smith, test 16 per cent.

3rd, A. McGregor, Smith; Wm. Stewart and Joshua Smithson, Otonabee; test 15 per cent.

The letter also stated: "Owing to the fact that certain parties pulled their beets before the Inspector arrived, the beets could not be scored."

PRESENTATION TO MISS ROSE

Splendid Mark of Appreciation by Her Art Needle Work Class

The session of the art needlework class at the Beehive, which has been conducted for the past two weeks by Miss M. Rose, representing Belding Paul & Co., of Montreal, has just closed. The class was the largest of any which Miss Rose has had in the five seasons during which they have been held, and speaks highly of her methods of teaching. About 140 ladies of the town have taken the course of study this winter.

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Rose was genuinely surprised, when, in the presence of about 60 of the class, Mrs. T. Emmerson read the following address, while Miss Maud Breeze presented to her a beautiful gold brooch, formed of three crescents, and a wishbone set with pearls:

Miss Rose,—

The ladies who have been attending this class for art needlework, wish to thank you for the trouble you have taken with them. They also wish to bear testimony to your efficiency as a teacher in this branch of art.

Outside of your widely known talent for fancy needlework, your clear explanations and your patience in rectifying our mistakes, have made learning under you an easy and pleasant task. We feel that our time in attending these classes has been well spent and, thanks to you, we have learned as much as was possible during the limited time.

While again sincerely thanking you, we would wish you to accept this brooch, accompanied as it is by our best wishes for your future, as a memento of what has been to us a pleasant and profitable time.

(Signed by the class.)

That she fully appreciates this mark of thoughtfulness on the part of the ladies of her class, Miss Rose trusts they will all understand, though, under the circumstances, it was difficult for her to fully express those feelings. In the interests of art needlework, it is to be hoped this may not be the last of the classes which Miss Rose may conduct.

Out of the Shadow

The discouragement, the despair of ill-health, out into the noon-tide glory of health, vigor and strength. Are you seeking this way? Are you wishing to replace weakness by strength, despondency by hope and expectation, pale cheeks and lustreless eyes by the rose's bloom and sparkling eyes. If you but use Ferrozone, you will make rich, red blood, your nerves will grow strong. Old-time vigor will return and with it endurance that will enable you to live an active, energetic and successful life. Remember the name, Ferrozone. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

ANNUAL STATEMENT

Satisfactory Showing for the Year.

The annual meeting of this company was held at the head office, Toronto, Feb. 17th, with a large attendance of stockholders. Among those from outside the city were:—Messrs. Peter H. McKenzie, Lucknow; J. W. Henderson, Whitechurch; Alex. McDonald, Acton; W. E. Stimers, Trenton; Dr. Jackes and Mr. Robson, Eglinton; and the Rev. Dr. Murdoch, Simcoe.

The President, Whitford Vandusen, occupied the chair, opening the meeting by reading notice calling the same, after which he asked the Manager to read the Financial Statement, which Statement, after explanations and satisfactory comments by several stockholders present, was approved. From this statement the following interesting facts and figures are taken

Total Assets, December 31st, 1901	$[illegible],911 72
Loans on Mortgage	[illegible] 51
Value of real estate upon which above loans were made	[illegible] 00
Paid up stock	[illegible] 33
Gross earnings of the Company for the year	41,414 58
Carried to credit of maturing stock	14,000 00
Added to Reserve and Contingent Funds	[illegible] 64
New loans made during the year	116,378 46
Total Subscribed Capital	1,[illegible] 00

The President, in his remarks upon the statement, congratulated the stockholders upon what he termed the very excellent showing of the past year. He referred to the fact of the loans being made all on the periodical repayment system, of interest and principal, ad nto the fact of the very prompt payments made by borrowers, evidencing great care in the selection of loans. Our securities for moneys loaned being of the best and safest character, on productive property, and in localities where values are increasing.

He also referred to the taking over of the City and County Loan Association during the past year, which added materially to our growing business, the result being very satisfactory to this company, and also to the stockholders of the other company, as they were receiving now, with the stockholders of our own company, regular dividends of 6 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly on their stock, many of them having increased their stock holdings since the amalgamation.

After the reading of the reports, remarks were made by several of the stockholders present, all expressing themselves well pleased with the past year's business, and confidence in the future of the Company, also their satisfaction with the investments they have made in the Company's stock, which brought them good dividends, with regular and prompt payments of the same.

The General Agents, Mr. George F. Davis, of Toronto, and A. Murdoch, M.A., LL.B., Simcoe, being present, were called upon, and referred at some length to their work through the country, and the growing confidence that was being shown by investors in the stock of companies of this kind. Also referred to the securities of properties on which loans had been taken, many of these properties having been personally inspected by them. Coming in contact with the public throughout the province, they expressed themselves as highly satisfied with the outlook for the coming year, and promised better results from their departments than ever before.

The Manager called attention to the fact that the Company was now offering Debentures, drawing from 4 per cent. to 5 per cent., according to term of Debentures. Debentures sold in sums of $100 and upwards to suit purchasers. Also that deposits were taken upon which interest is paid of from 4 per cent. to 4 1-2 per cent.

The election of Officers and Directors for the ensuing year resulted as follows:—Whitford Vandusen, Toronto, President; Ambrose Kent, J.P., Toronto, Vice-President; J. T. Gilmour, M.D., H. H. Dewart, K.C., H. Wilberforce Aikins, M.D., G. T. Bastedo, Esq., W. J. Fawcett, Banker, Brigden; and W. Pemberton Page, Manager and Secretary; Auditors, J. F. Lawson and J. L. Atkinson.

THE MOST POPULAR COLOR

DIAMOND DYE FAST BLACKS ARE THE BEST.

No color is so serviceable or so generally worn as black, and the Diamond Dye Fast Blacks have saved the women of this country thousands of dollars yearly by making handsome black dresses, wraps, capes and blouses from garments that otherwise would have been thrown away. No other black dyes equal the Diamond either in beauty or strength of color, and those who use the Diamond Dyes once can never be induced to buy other dyes. Please remember, that goods dyed with Diamond Dye Fast Blacks can be washed with soap without in the least changing the color.

Thousands of ladies are now making up pretty mats and rugs. They are buying the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns. These patterns are colored on heavy Scotch Hessian, and all ready for working. THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

Letters from the People on Interesting and Timely Topics.

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—The Prohibitionists have, I understand, secured a candidate, and one in every way fitted (if my information be correct) to carry their standard to battle. His record as a citizen is irreproachable, and his capabilities as a fighter and leader are undoubted. His view of the question, I believe, is that if the coming generation is not educated in the art of drinking whiskey it will grow up free from its baneful and pestilential influence. Of the present generation he has little hope. This view of the case has the merit of being reasonable, and I must confess that since the desire to drink ardent spirits is not a national one, the absence of the opportunity of cultivating it must work in favor of abstinence. With a youth unlearned in the pleasures of the bottle, temptations to break the law will not arise, and where, under the Crooks Act, a hundred would have known the taste of whiskey, under prohibition not more than five will be able to distinguish it. The opportunity of getting drunk and rolling about the streets in a frenzy of foolishness and impudence will disappear with the advent of such a law, and twenty years hence people will look back, pretty much as we look back to-day, and say, "What beasts these people must have been!" The improvement of the people of the townships where local option has been taken advantage of has been without parallel. I can remember the time when wayside inns were centres of debauchery and disturbance, and travelling at night was attended with difficulty and danger. It must be confessed that a sober is, after all, a happier people, and if partial prohibition is good perhaps total prohibition will be better. At any rate the present administration of the license law is ten times worse than prohibition can be. We shall await the future with some degree of uncertainty, since it will take strong leadership and determined men to set at defiance the tactics of politicians and of their satellites. If prohibition will do away with suicide by drink, the people are in favor of it. If it would likewise do away with the craving for government offices and subordinate governmental positions, which disturbs the equilibrium of our public affairs and threatens the integrity of our public life, we should vote for it both early and often. Even if it fail a change will effect an airing and is bound to do us good. Whoever it was that first thought of the cry, "Rum, Rum and Referendum," will rank in history with the great makers of party war cryo and shibboleths. Before this such things have proved fatal. That the possible failure of a prohibition law will demoralize the people, considering what influences at present are in the ascendant, is a little too thin for general consumption. "They who would speak of virtue must have practiced it," is an old and true proverb. The affectation of virtue displayed by a man who has climbed to prominence through the back door, deceives no one at any time. As for compensation, a wise man would have long ago have seen the signs arising, and have provided for what they signified. To ask for compensation now would be to put whiskey-sellers in a class by themselves. What other victims of the law get compensation or even commiseration? As a means of holding off prohibition, if it should carry at the polls, we know of nothing like it. Not four but forty years would see the end of the debate upon it, at the expiration of which time Ross and his cabinet will have gradually passed away, leaving their entanglements of their legislation to a new generation to unravel. "Who seeks to stand on two stools will fall to the ground."

If we are to judge by Father Murphy's now famous sermon delivered a fortnight or so ago in St. Peter's Cathedral, Catholics will support the prohibition movement. If all religious bodies declare themselves so unequivocally in its favor the Conservatives and the Liberals will have a holiday on election day.

VERITAS

A PROCLAMATION

We possess all the modern and up-to-date facilities for conducting a reliable and first-class drug business. When you favor us with your doctor's prescription, our best efforts are put forth to make that prescription what it should be—professionally correct in the minutest details.

This medicine is giving marvellous results to sick people all over Canada. The wonderful cures affected by Paine's Celery Compound during the past year speaks volumes in favor of the popular medicine. Thousands who have suffered from rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous troubles and dyspepsia now sing the praises of the medicine that has given them such happy results. JOHN NUGENT, Druggist

MORE TROOPS AT COLON

Government Troops Now Expected to Attack the Insurgents

Colon, Feb. 21.— The political situation here is quiet. The garrison here was increased yesterday by 500 men from Savanilla. It is now expected that the Government forces will go to attack the insurgent stronghold.

It is reported that the insurgent steamer Padilla is aground near Punta Chame.

The commission to take over the steamer Pinto, recently purchased by the Colombian Government, is proceeding south.

There is a lively speculation in building lots here. The boom is caused by the expectation that the United States will purchase the Panama Canal.

The Government has issued orders fo the raising of the steamer Lautaro, which was sunk by the insurgents in the naval engagement in Panama Bay.

WE LOOK FOR YOUR TRADE

Serving the public with care, attention, honest goods and low prices, has given us a high position amongst druggists of Canada. We look for your trade, and will use every endeavor to make you a regular customer.

Our supplies of pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Preparations, Perfumes, Brushes, Combs, Sponges, etc., will interest you.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

We are fully prepared to fill your orders for this popular disease-banishing medicine. Knowing its powers and virtues, we strongly recommend it as a blood purifier, nerve bracer and flesh builder. Paine's Celery Compound is no new remedy. It has been tested and successfully used in all parts of Canada by tens of thousands, and has never failed. H. H. EDMISON, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

DOURO

A very pretty wedding took place at St. Joseph's Church, Douro, last Tuesday morning, when Miss Loretta Leahy, daughter of Mr. John P. Leahy, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Samuel G. O'Brien, one of Douro's most popular young men. Rev. Father Kelly, P.P., tied the nuptial knot. The bridesmaid was Miss Martha Leahy, sister of the bride, and the groom was supported by his cousin, W. J. O'Toole. The happy couple repaired to the residence of the bride's father, where a sumptuous dinner dinner was partaken of, after which the evening was spent in dancing and other amusements. The bride was the recipient of many useful and costly presents. Among them was a beautiful gold bracelet from the groom. The young couple will take up their residence in Otonabee, where their many friends will wish them a happy future.

A SUBJECT FOR THOUGHT

Rich Gold Finds on African Coast

London, Feb. 21.—Reports multiply of the extraordinary value of the gold discoveries on the French Ivory Coast of Africa. The alluvial deposits have now been traced and a quartz reef, which has been opened, is eight feet wide and is yielding crushings of from two to eight ounces to the ton.

Jealous Rivals cannot turn back the tide. The demand for Dr. Agnew's Little Pills is a marvel. Cheap to buy, but diamonds in quality—banish nausea, coated tongue, water brash, pain after eating, sick headache, never gripe, operate pleasantly. 10 cents.—37

A Dubious Forecast

"What do you think the weather will be next month?" wrote a subscriber to the Boston editor of this g. f.j., and the editor replied, "I think it will be very much like your subscription." The subscriber happened to think of the word "unsettled," and sent in the amount next day.

Kidney Cry.—Pain in the back is the cry of the kidneys for help. To neglect the call is to deliver the body over to a disease cruel, ruthless, and finally life destroying. South American Kidney Cure has power akin to miraculous in helping the needy kidneys out of the mire of disease. It relieves in six hours.—38

How many mothers realize that when the baby's advent is expected they need strength for two instead of one. Women, weak, nervous, "just able to drag around," find themselves confronted with coming maternity. They have not strength enough for themselves, how can they have strength to give a child? We don't look for the birth of strong ideas from a weak mind. Why should we expect the birth of strong children from weak mothers?

The way to ensure health and strength to mother and child is to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a preparative for motherhood. It brings the mother's strength up to the requirements of nature, so that she has strength to give her child. It nourishes the nerves and so quiets them. It encourages a natural appetite and induces refreshing sleep.

"Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong and sick women well.

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription" and it is free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

"I wish to let you know the great benefit my wife derived through taking your 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes Mr. Robert Harden, of Brandon, Manitoba, Box 223. "It was when her baby came. We had heard so much of your medicine that my wife decided to try it (I may say my wife's age was thirty-three and this was her first child). She commenced to take 'Favorite Prescription' five months before her child was born. We have a fine healthy girl, and we believe that this was mainly owing to the 'Favorite Prescription,' taken faithfully according to directions. We shall certainly recommend it wherever we can."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

Not long ago a Western Kansas politician was asked by his wife to lay aside politics long enough one day to dig the potatoes in the garden. He consented, and, after digging for a few minutes, went into the house and said he had found a coin. He washed it off, and it proved to be a silver quarter. He put it in his jeans and went back to work. Presently he went to the house again and said he had found another coin. He washed the dirt off of it, and this time it was a silver half-dollar. He put it in his jeans. "I have worked pretty hard," said he to his wife; "I guess I'll take a short nap." When he awoke, he found that his wife had dug all the rest of the potatoes. But she found no coins. It then dawned upon her that she had been "worked."

At the Lotus Club dinner to Ambassador Choate, Senator Chauncey M. Depew told a story on Mr. Choate which caused the assemblage to roar with laughter. The occasion he referred to was a dinner given in New York some years ago to the Earl of Aberdeen, Governor-General of Canada, and head of the Clan Gordon. The earl attended in full regalia, "the wearing of which," said the senator, "consists in leaving off some articles of dress we deem quite essential." He continued: "At the dinner I sat on the earl's right. Choate was next me. Just after the earl seated himself, Choate whispered to me: 'Chauncey, are Aberdeen's legs really bare?' I raised the table-cloth cautiously, and gave that scratch that all Scotchmen appreciate, and said: 'Yes, Joe, they are.' When Choate got up to speak, he said: 'Gentlemen, my invitation did not convey to me the information that the Earl of Aberdeen was to be here to-night in full regalia. If I had known it I would have left my trousers at home.' Well, you never saw a madder crowd of Scotchmen. They thought it a reflection on the national costume of the earl, who had done the diners honor to appear in it. Well, four years have passed since then, and now the earl regards that as a joke, and tells it at least once a day, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year."

Smoking-Cars For Women.

SMOKING seems to be growing in favor among the fair sex, especially on the Continent. So apparent has this become of late that the railroad authorities of Belgium have been seriously considering the advisability of introducing cars in which only women shall be allowed to travel. What has particularly served to bring the matter before the officials' notice is an incident that happened a few weeks since, when a young woman entered one of the carriages on the Southern Railroad reserved for ladies, and in a few minutes after the train had started from Brussels lit a cigarette and began to smoke it. Whereupon the other women in the compartment became very indignant, threatening to complain to the guard as soon as the train stopped. "I am in a carriage reserved for ladies," observed the smoker, blandly, "and I am not aware of any law which prohibits ladies from smoking." When the train stopped, the guard was informed of the proceedings, but was loath to interfere, and the result was that when the woman smoker arrived at her destination, she consulted a lawyer, who has now by an action in court raised the interesting question: Should railroad companies be compelled to provide separate smoking cars for women who wish to smoke while they are traveling? Some of the companies, however, appear to have taken time by the forelock, for it is understood that arrangements have already been made on some of the Belgian railroads to provide smoking compartments exclusively for women addicted to the use of tobacco.

Greeley's Editorial When Lincoln Died.

THE following very remarkable story is told in "James Russell Lowell and His Friends," by Edward Everett Hale. He is writing of Sidney H. Gay, then managing editor of the New York "Tribune:"

"I have never seen in print Gay's story of that fearful night when Lincoln was killed. But one hears it freely repeated in conversation, and I see no reason why it should not be printed now.

"With the news of the murder of Lincoln, there came to New York every other terrible message. The office of the 'Tribune,' of course, received echoes of all the despatches which showed the alarm at Washington. There were orders for the arrest of this man, there were suspicions of the loyalty of that man. No one knew what the morrow might bring.

"In the midst of the anxiety of such hours, to Mr. Gay, the acting editor of that paper, there entered the foreman of the typesetting-room. He brought with him the proof of Mr. Greeley's leading article, as he had left it before leaving the city for the day. It was a brutal, bitter, sarcastic, personal attack on President Lincoln—the man who, when Gay read the article, was dying in Washington.

"Gay read the article, and asked the foreman if he had any private place where he could lock up the type, to which no one but himself had access. The foreman said he had. Gay bade him tie up the type, lock the galley with this article in his cupboard, and tell no one what he had told him. Of course no such article appeared in the 'Tribune' the next morning.

"But when Gay arrived the next day at the office, he was met with the news that 'the old man' wanted him, and the intimation that 'the old man' was very angry. Gay waited upon Greeley.

"'Are you there, Mr. Gay? I have been looking for you. They tell me you ordered my leader out of this morning's paper. Is it your paper or mine? I should like to know if I cannot print what I choose in my own newspaper!' This in a great rage.

"'The paper is yours, Mr. Greeley. The article is in type upstairs, and you can use it when you choose. Only this, Mr. Greeley: I know New York, and I hope and believe, before God, that there is so much virtue in New York that, if I had let the article go into this morning's paper, there would not be one brick upon another in the "Tribune" office now. Certainly, I should be sorry if there were.'

"Mr. Greeley was cowed. He said not a word, nor ever alluded to the subject again. I suppose the type is locked up in the cupboard of the 'Tribune' office at this hour.

"It was by this sort of service that Mr. Gay earned Mr. Wilson's praise that 'he kept Mr. Greeley up to the war.'"

A Boom Town.

Bridgewater, Ontario, once a boom town of note, was brought into existence by one of the strangest gold finds and crazes in the history of this continent. Nearly thirty years ago a farmer's wife was searching the woods near their farm for a sow that had strayed, and, becoming thirsty, stopped to get a drink from a spring. Slipping, she fell upon a small, loose rock, which rolled to her feet, and which proved to be a twenty-pound nugget of almost pure gold. Bridgewater at that time was nearly forty miles from the nearest railroad, and the present site of the town was nothing but a wilderness, but inside of six months what had been a burned-over, barren wilderness was converted into a substantial city of nearly five thousand people.

In digging a shaft about a mile south of the town site, an immense quarry of the purest white marble was found, and the town was practically built of marble, for it has to-day the only hotel, church school, court house, and private dwellings constructed entirely of white marble in the world, and a mile north of the town are an abandoned axe factory and grist mill, whose foundations are built of the same beautiful material. And now comes the strangest part of the story. During the building of the town thousands of men prospected the entire country, and shafts and tunnels were driven—some of them nearly one hundred feet deep—but, strange as it may seem, there was never enough gold found to pay the cost of a single shaft or tunnel sunk or run in the entire district.

A Sensible Bishop.

The Italian Bishop of Fano, reports "La Science pour Tous," has sent out to the priests of his diocese the following circular:

"1. In all churches, immediately after feast days on which there have been very large congregations, the floors must be disinfected by means of wood sawdust soaked in one-tenth per cent. solution of corrosive sublimate. On ordinary days they must be frequently swept, after sprinkling them with water so as to raise no dust.

"2. Every week, and even oftener, the pews and confessionals must be cleaned with sponges and cloths moistened with pure water.

"3. Every week, and oftener if necessary, the grills of the confessionals are to be washed and polished.

"4. The holy water receptacles must be emptied every week, or oftener if necessary, and washed with hot water or a solution of corrosive sublimate."

The same journal comments as follows:

"That the provisions of the circular may be carried out, the bishop has instituted a service of inspection, and requires the payment of fines into the diocesan treasury for transgression of any of these hygienic rules. It is to be desired that the Bishop of Fano's example should be imitated by church authorities in other countries."

Great Things Probable.

A Chicago professor is lecturing on "How to Lie When Sleeping." The politicians are much interested. In the heat of a campaign, much time has been lost because lying has been limited to waking hours. The effects of the learned professor's discovery upon the next campaign are awaited with interest.—Nebraska City "Conservative."

Curious Bit of News.

Dr. G. L. Johnson, whose studies of the eyes of mammals have recently been published, calls attention to the fact that men and monkeys alone possess parallel and convergent vision of the two eyes. On the other hand, the lower mammals possess divergent and consequently very widely extended vision. Squirrels, for instance, and probably hares and rabbits as well, are able to see an enemy approaching directly from behind without turning the head.

One of Napoleon's Boasts.

WE who know the last as well as the first of Napoleon, who have read about Moscow, Leipzig, Elba, Waterloo and St. Helena as studiously as about the campaigns in Italy, and Marengo, Jena and Austerlitz, cannot fully comprehend with what reverence some of his apophthegms were received by the French when he was still unbeaten and apparently unbeatable. One of his boasts was that he was not governed by circumstances; that he made circumstances and was superior to them. When someone hinted that destiny might compass his defeat he replied that destiny would not dare. Even Victor Hugo, half a century after Waterloo, was blinded by the light of Napoleon's genius, and treated him as a Titan, fit to contend, though vainly, with high heaven. It was not Wellington, not Blucher who defeated Napoleon, says Hugo in his beautiful rhapsody on Waterloo; it was God. Napoleon, he declares, with blasphemous brilliancy, embarrassed God. "Waterloo was a change of front on the part of the universe"—the quotation is from memory—"in the new series of facts there was no room for Napoleon. Therefore a second-class commander won a first-class battle."

A good many believe with Napoleon that genius rises above circumstances. Napoleon's boastful epigram has been declared a rule of faith by successful men, who scout the idea of village Hampdens and mute, inglorious Miltons. But the epigram is nothing but a boast. It is not true. We are held fast in the vise of circumstances and are not completely masters of our fate. Luck enters into every game, even the game of life. No man can arrange the cards in the game with destiny, for destiny always deals. It may rain some day when the best laid plans call for sunshine, and the plans may be pulverized. At Austerlitz, which was fought at dawn, Napoleon said: "We have a rendezvous with the sun and both parties are on time." The Sun of Austerlitz became a superstition in the Grand Army.

But at Waterloo there was another rendezvous with the sun and the sun was tardy. Waterloo is the convincing answer to Napoleon's boast and to the precept that great men are superior to circumstances. Hugo points out that accidents defeated Napoleon. His plan, as experts admit, was a masterpiece. But he reckoned without luck. The battle was to have commenced at dawn, but rain fell the previous night, and the ground became too muddy for the manoeuvres of artillery. Napoleon therefore delayed the assault nearly six hours, until the ground became firmer. That delay gave Blucher time to come up when he was needed and to turn the tide of the fray. The rainfall defeated Napoleon and drove him to St. Helena. A peasant guide led Blucher aright, and he chanced to debouch on the field from the point and at the moment where and when he was supremely effective. Another peasant guide led Grouchy astray and he did not arrive. Had it not rained before the battle, had Blucher had a bad guide and Grouchy a good one, history might have been different. Napoleon was conquered by circumstances.—San Francisco "Bulletin."

A Damaging Defence.

Mark Twain, says "Life," has got support from an unexpected quarter in his efforts to demonstrate the impropriety of some things done by missionaries in China. In the "Forum" a missionary named Gilbert Reid has defended looting by missionaries with so much candor and jauntiness, and has so gloried in such looting as he did himself, as not to leave the critics of the looting missionaries much to do to prove their case. Anyone who was sorry for the American missionaries in China, because our Brother Mark found fault with some things that some of them did, will be doubly sorry for them when he reads their defence by the Rev. Gilbert Reid. They may have justly incurred Mark's strictures, but they never deserved the Rev. Reid's defence.

Annexing New Languages.

In the new editions of the dictionaries many thousands of new words are announced. The English-speaking nations are the growing nations, comments an exchange, and the English language is the expanding language; it is annexing everything useful from every other language of the world. The difference between the comparatively modest volume which Noah Webster got out and the ponderous unabridged work of to-day, representing the toil and the knowledge and the research of hundreds of the ablest scholars of the world, shows the marvelous development. One interesting feature of this expansion is the gradual elimination of italicising. Not many years ago it was the custom to put any word that had a foreign look about it in italics; now we use this as our own as coolly as we vote a naturalized immigrant in a close primary. The effect is rather curious. It has discouraged the use of foreign phrases, and the ambitious one who wants to display his smattering of French in an English article finds his importations supplanted by home products. The editor makes the change, unless there are special reasons why it should not be done. The gain to the average reader, who dislikes to stumble against such affectation without knowing what the strange words mean, is great. So marked, indeed, has been this change that the typesetting machines, by which the newspapers of the world are now set up, have no italic letters, except where they are especially required.

A cheap-Jack butcher brought his cart to a standstill in Petticoat Lane. A miserable old woman eyed closely the heap of bones and gristle which was referred to by the butcher as joints and steaks. She was evidently very poor indeed, as she hesitated to pay threepence for a scaleful of "selected bits." "'Ere, 'ave 'em for tuppence," growled the butcher. "Too much," said the woman. "'Ave 'em at a penny." Still the woman hesitated. There was a look of pity, mixed with disgust, on his face as he yelled: "Still too much? 'Ere, 'ang it! I'll turn me back while you sneak 'em!"—London "Spare Moments."

The newest floral wonder is the "Shasta daisy," originated by a flower-grower of California. It measures a foot in circumference, and, when one was exhibited recently in a florist's window in San Francisco, people literally flocked to see it. It is really a new kind of flower, and has been produced by several years of crossing and selection, three different kinds of daisies being used—the common American species, the larger and coarser European sort, and the Japanese daisy. There are three rows of petals of the purest white, and each blossom is upheld by a single strong and wiry stem which is nearly two feet long.

Anecdotal.

In an after-dinner speech at the London Savage Club recently on the purity of the English tongue, Winston Churchill remarked: "I have written five books, the same number as Moses—but I will not press the comparison."

Charles II. once granted an audience to the courtly Quaker, William Penn, who, as was his custom, entered the royal presence with his hat on. The humorous sovereign quietly laid aside his own, which occasioned Penn's enquiry: "Friend Charles, why dost thou remove thy hat?" "It is the custom," he replied, "in this place for one person only to remain covered."

Eben Jones, the crabbed millionaire lumberman of Minnesota, hired all his mill-hands himself. One day a Swede applied to the irritable old man, and secured a place on the saws. As he was leaving he said: "Mester Yones, in dess yob you geef me doaller and hallef a day. Besides dat, do you eat me or do I eat myself?" "Oh, eat yourself!" replied the old man. "I have dyspepsia."

Phil May, the noted English cartoonist, went into an oyster saloon in the East End of London one day and ordered a dozen natives, when another man entered and gave a similar order, enquiring anxiously of the proprietor if the oysters were fresh. "Fresh!" echoed the bivalve merchant. "Fresh! Why"—indicating Mr. May with a wave of his hand—"the first oyster that gentleman took up bit his lip!"

An Irishman who was charged with stealing a watch from a fellow-citizen, stoutly denied the impeachment in court, and brought a counter accusation against his accuser for assault and battery committed with a frying-pan. "Why did you allow the prosecutor, who is a smaller man than yourself, to assault you without resistance?" asked the judge; "had you nothing in your hand to defend yourself with?" "Bedad, your honor," said Pat, "I had his watch, but what was that against a frying-pan?"

The "Scotsman" tells of a Dublin man who insisted that a Scotch friend should stay at his house instead of a hotel, and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to all places of amusement, paying all the cab fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning to Dunedin, the Irishman saw him down to the steamer, and they went together to have a last cigar. "Now, look here," said the man from Dunedin, "I'll hae nae mair o' this. Here ye've been keepin' me at your house for a month, an' payin' for a' the amusements and cabs and so on—I tell you I'll stan' nae mair o' it! We'll just hae a toss for this one!"

One of the eccentricities of that most penurious of pedagogues, Dr. Barrett, was that he hardly ever appeared outside the walls of Trinity College, conducting his modest menage there with the help of a decrepit old housekeeper, who attended to all his wants, even to daily fetching from a nearby dairy the half-pennyworth of milk needed in the establishment. When one frosty morning, Mary, going on this errand, slipped and broke her leg, the worthy doctor for the first time in years left the college to pay her a visit in the hospital. On reaching her cot, it is related that his sympathetic greeting was: "Hello, Mary; so you broke your leg; I suppose you broke the jug, too, but where is the half-penny?"

Mr. Justice Mathew of England is a man of such mild and kindly exterior, with such gentle voice and manner, that almost invariably he gives the impression of being a simple country gentleman rather than a profound lawyer. This was evidently the idea of a professional seller of painted birds, who some years ago met him in the neighborhood of the law courts, and, exhibiting one of his birds, asked him if he could tell to what species it belonged. The judge stopped, examined the bird with great care, pretended to admire the gaudy plumage, examined it again, and then remarked: "I do not think I have ever seen a bird exactly like this, but, judging from the old proverb that 'Birds of a feather flock together,' I should say it was a jailbird."

Far Reaching Influence.

"OLD-FASHIONED Indian stories, the dime novels of years back which were within the reach of all the boys, were an important factor in building up the great West," said a typical Westerner. "These novels used to circulate in a neighborhood till they had been read by every boy and had fallen to pieces through handling. They fired the ambition of the youngsters, set them to practising shooting and riding, and sent many of them to the West in search of adventures. Some soon returned to their homes, others became bad men and were killed in time, but the great mass of them, too proud to return home, created the vigorous, widewake population of our Western States. I have talked to hundreds of our Western pioneers about the causes which brought them west, and a majority of them admit that dime novels had more to do with it than anything else."

A Heretic.

"The man is a driveling idiot," said the trust magnate.

"A plumb fool," agreed the coal baron.

"An unmitigated lunatic," asserted the steel king.

"Crazy as a March hare," asseverated the great financier.

"A hopeless imbecile," asserted the power in Wall street.

"Absolutely and utterly devoid of sense," chimed in the senator.

"As brainless as a barrel," added the corporation lawyer.

"But what has he done?" asked the ordinary citizen.

The crowd was convulsed with laughter.

"Why, he says," they replied, choking and gurgling, "he actually says that money isn't everything!"—"Smart Set."

Might be Worse.

One day, Mackintosh, having vexed him by calling O'Coigly "a rascal," Parr immediately rejoined, "Yes, Jamie, he was a bad man, but he might have been worse; he was an Irishman, but he might have been a Scotchman; he was a priest, but he might have been a lawyer; he was a republican, but he might have been an apostate."

The Shortcomings of Breadth.

WHEN I was a schoolgirl, with many definite opinions, I remember having a talk with a man of thirty, who happened to advance a theory—I forget about what—which aroused in me ardent dissent. I eagerly presented my view, which was the exact reverse of his, and paused for him to defend himself. He gave me a friendly look; then leaned back and gazed out of the window, with the remark, "Well, there's something in that, too."

I felt as if the bottom had dropped out of the room. For, I thought, if one really hold an opinion, how can he say there is "something in" the contrary view? But since then I have not only had many such experiences; I have myself become an offender. And I wonder if it is altogether a gain. It may be sheer contrariness, but I do get a little tired, sometimes, of broad-mindedness and tolerance, and long for good, bigoted narrowness that can be counted on. I should really like to be told: "No, you're totally wrong; what you have just said is false absolutely. The facts of the case are these, and if you don't believe it, so much the worse for you." How I should enjoy that! But I have not had the experience since my brothers grew up. Occasionally, in desperation, I have assumed the part myself, and taken my stand on positive assertion of a single half truth; but it does no good. I simply live over that early experience; again I am told, "There's something in that, too," and it gives me the feeling, to quote a figure used by a friend in another connection, of having come up against a soft curtain where I expected a wall.

"A plain categorical proposition," says Mr. Morley, "is becoming less and less credible to average minds. Or at least the slovenly willingness to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time is becoming more and more common." I do not think it is quite this. Men surely used to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time with the utmost ease. The point is that they did not know they were contradictory, whereas we do; and still we hold them—or rather, entertain them, as one would interesting guests. Our attitude toward every opinion we meet might be expressed thus: "Well, there's something in that, too. Come right in!" And the new opinion comes in, and draws a chair up to the hospitable fire, and finds a friendly circle of other opinions there; they shake hands all round, and each tells the others what good fellows they are.

This is amiable, but, in honesty, I don't like it. It is like the congress of religions, which I have never been able to understand, save on the assumption that each secretly hopes to convert the others by taking them off their guard, or that no one is in earnest about his religion except as regards its common moral basis. The old attitude used to be, "You think differently from me: therefore you're wrong, therefore you're bad, therefore I'll kill you." One by one these clauses have been dropped, beginning with the last one; thus reversing the system of "the House that Jack Built." First we stopped killing the other man, then we stopped thinking he was bad, and now we have nearly stopped thinking he is wrong. May this not be carried too far?—From the "Contributors' Club."

Defeated the Bicyclist.

"GO and hitch up the ostrich," is not at all an absurd command on an ostrich farm. There these great birds are often harnessed to a carriage, and make fairly good substitutes for horses. Although they cannot draw a heavy load, their speed is a recommendation.

At Jacksonville, Florida, there is a bird named Oliver W. that can run a mile in two minutes and twenty-two seconds. His owners claim that he is more satisfactory than a horse because he eats less, never shies at anything, never runs away, and goes steadily at a good pace without laziness or fatigue.

This particular ostrich appears to like his work. When the little carriage is brought out he comes running toward it at full speed, with both wings spread out, ready to have the harness put on.

On one occasion a cyclist tried to pass Oliver W. on a long, smooth stretch of road. He came up behind the carriage, thinking to get ahead and escape the dust. Oliver W. thought differently. He threw his head high in the air, gave a flap with his wings, and went forward with a speed that astonished the cyclist. Putting forth more effort, the latter made another attempt to pass the ostrich, but the faster the pedals of the bicycle moved the faster sped the long legs of the bird.

It so happened that the cyclist had a record as a fast rider, and to be distanced by an ostrich was not to his liking. For two miles he tried to pass his feathered rival, but was then obliged to give up the race, defeated.

Some fast horses have tried conclusions with Oliver W., who seems to like nothing better than testing their speed, starting slowly to make them think it easy to distance him, and then gradually increasing his pace.

Modest Fees.

LAWYERS do not usually get the small end of a bargain with their clients, but the "Green Bag" recalls two incidents where the clients had rather the best of it.

Sir Walter Scott's first client was a burglar. He got the fellow off, but the man declared that he hadn't a penny to give him for his services. Two bits of useful information he offered, however, and with these the young lawyer had to be content. The first was that a yelping terrier inside the house was a better protection against thieves than a big dog outside; and the second, that no sort of lock bothered his craft so much as an old rusty one.

Small compensation as this was, the first brief of the noted French lawyer, Monsieur Rouher, yielded still less. The peasant for whom Monsieur Rouher won the case asked how much he owed him.

"Oh, say two francs," said the modest young advocate.

"Two francs!" exclaimed the peasant. "That is very high. Won't you let me off with a franc and a half?"

"No," said the counsel; "two francs or nothing."

"Well, then," said his client, "I'd rather pay nothing."

And with a bow he left.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—There was no police court yesterday.

—Cheap reading at The Times Bookstore; two magazines for five cents.

—A school-bag awaits an owner at the police station.

—We want a messenger boy at The Times Bookstore.

—The sun is getting very strong. Spring time will soon be here.

—Live hogs are a good price on the market at present.

—Hay has been a very good price for the past few weeks and by all appearances will remain high.

—The labor strike at the Cereal Works was amicably settled, and the men returned to work yesterday.

—The sound of the axe is heard on the streets, removing ice from the sidewalks.

—The Canadian Pacific had seven ploughs and a rotary and two hundred extra men on duty in Ontario clearing the lines of snow during the recent big storms.

—The Times has to thank Mr. Carson LeBrun, of New York, for copies of New York papers. Carson's many friends in town will be pleased to know that he is well and doing well.

—The Times was presented with a very handsome diary by Mr. T. E. Bradburn, local representative of the Home Insurance Company, of New York.

—The citizens of Belleville are very hopeful of securing the Canadian branch of the Deering Harvester Works. Mr. Harry Corby has stated that he will put $50,000 into the business if it goes to Belleville.

—Mr. J. A. Culverwell, of the Burleigh Falls Power Co., passed through Peterborough en route to Burleigh Falls. Mr. Culverwell was accompanied by the surveyors, who have in hand the outlining of the Company's property on Perry's Creek.

Another Canadian Dead

Word has been received that Mr. Herbert Chubb, who for a number of years lived with his cousin, Mr. B. C. Gale, in Douro, died at Naauwpoort, S. A. on Jan. 11th. Deceased was a member of the South African Constabulary.

Mr. Carnegie's New Title

The "Honorable Andrew" is the title which his fellow-members are now applying to Mr. J. H. Carnegie, M.P.P. for East Victoria, and son of our esteemed townsman, Mr. John Carnegie. A few days ago he received from Ingersoll a letter addressed to "The Hon. Andrew Carnegie, M.P.P. for East Victoria, Parliament Buildings, Toronto." The letter came from a lady in Ingersoll who asked "the Hon. Andrew" for $10,000 to build houses on Carnegie street in the town named. She had, she said, read of the vast amounts "the hon." was giving away for libraries, charities, etc., and thought he could not do better than advance her the sum named. His generosity would not only give the lady delight and a source of income from the rent of the houses, but would keep her husband from drink. Just how a gift of $10,000 would quench the thirst of the lady's husband was not clear. The letter caused much amusement as it was passed from hand to hand in the House.

SEEKING SEPARATION

Mrs. Edwin Jury, of Douro, Taking Action Against Her Husband

Mrs. Edwin E. Jury, of Douro, is taking proceedings in the County Police Court against her husband, with whom she says she cannot live, and will ask for a separation allowance.

Mr. Jury took action against another party some time ago for alleged alienation of his wife's affections.

FIRE YESTERDAY

Occurred in the Boiler Room at the Central School at Noon

About 1.20 yesterday the fire brigade were called to the Central School from which place an alarm of fire had been sent in. On arrival it was found the fire was in the boiler room, and the cause is a mystery. A coat which was hanging on the wall was first ignited and then the fire caught in a partition. The blaze was in a good way to cause a lot of trouble when it was discovered.

The damage done was very slight, as the fire was extinguished before the brigade arrived.

KRINISEMENTFONTEIN
Jan. 6, 1902.

I may be home some time next summer, after the Coronation in June, that is providing I can possibly get away from here. There are so many trying to buy out for the purpose of going to the Coronation that it may be my lot to have to stay here for 6 months or a year longer, but if I stay it won't be my fault.

We are not killed with work as just now we do two hours work in the twenty four. Sometimes I have two horses but at present I have only one, and a good one too, as I am out on one of our posts with eight other men. I am supposed to go for a ride every day but am I am the only man at the post that has a horse, the others do the riding for me when it comes their turn. They also look after the horse when they want to use it, whenever I can get out of work I always do. When we are near the officers our work is much harder, we have six hours work then, instead of two.

The month of December is like June at home, so you can judge how warm it is here, it is warmer than I ever felt I in Canada.

With best respects to all, I remain
Yours &c,
FRED MORRISON,
S. A. C.

FRESH AND STRONG

Food That Sends One Along

"I found a food at last that I could work on and that would keep me fresh and strong. I have been a school teacher for eleven years, and every year toward the last have felt more or less worn out, and have been bothered particularly with my stomach and serious constipation.

Last year I used Grape-Nuts regularly at both morning and evening meals and the result was really wonderful. I have been entirely cured of the troubles spoken of and don't know what it is to take a dose of physic any more. The old nervousness and sleeplessness have gone. No more do I lie awake nights until my brain is in a whirl. Now I sleep all night long like a healthy child.

I was the only teacher out of fourteen, in our public school, who did not miss a day on account of sickness during the last session. I have been able to do more hard studying than ever before, and took up the teachers' state reading work, completed the course and passed a successful examination at the last institute.

Grape-Nuts in my case has proved the truth of the assertion that it is a brain and nerve builder. I would especially recommend it for tired, over-worked school teachers, or any other brain worker." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

It is far wiser to build up health and strength naturally with food than to crutch along on some kind of medicine and let the disease finally do its work.

THE PAINTERS' UNION

Scale of Wages Drawn Up at Their Last Meeting

An important meeting of Peterborough Union of the American Federation of Paper Hangers and Painters was held on Thursday night. A large number were present. The following scale of wages was drawn up:—$2.00 per day for nine hours work, $1.50 per day for apprentices, and only one for each shop.

A committee composed of the following members was appointed to wait on the contractors of the town to make known their terms, Messrs. R. Hawley, J. H. Heslip, James and S. Redding.

What Fifteen Cents Will Buy To Strengthen Body and Brain

Fifteen cents will buy a package of Malt Breakfast Food. The contents of one package will make from twenty-five to thirty meals for one person; cost per meal, from one-half to three-fifths of a cent.

Each morning dish of Malt Breakfast Food will nourish you with more true nutriment for body and brain than you could derive from ten cents' worth of beefsteak or lamb chops, and you will go out to the day's duties with better digestive vigor than after a meat diet.

In the past it has been conclusively proven that one package of Malt Breakfast Food costing fifteen cents will build up more solid flesh, muscle and tissue for man or woman than any other food product costing one dollar. Malt Breakfast Food is therefore the diet for all classes of our people. While it builds up the weak, it also keeps the well and strong in perfect health. Malt Breakfast Food at all grocers.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Catarrh Remedies and Doctors Failed—Pe-ru-na Cured.

MR. A. E. KIDD.

ELGIN, ILL.—In a very recent communication from this place comes the news that Mr. Arthur Ernest Kidd, a well-known architect of that city, has made complete recovery from catarrh of the head from which he had suffered for nearly a quarter of a century. He writes from 18 Hamilton ave.:

"I am 42 years of age, and have had catarrh of the head for over half of my life, as a result of scarlet fever, followed by typhoid fever. I got so bad that I was almost constantly coughing and clearing my throat. The catarrh greatly impaired my eyesight, and the hearing in one ear, and reduced my weight to 110 pounds.

"I tried nearly every catarrh remedy advertised, besides a great many different physicians' treatments, all of which failed.

"I had heard and read of Peruna, and finally decided to try it two months ago. I have now taken seven bottles, and weigh 172 pounds. Never felt happier or merrier. Feel tip top."—A. E. KIDD.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada.

"The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores, and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, O., U. S. A.

BRITAIN, RUSSIA, JAPAN TO CONTROL THE WORLD

It Looks as If This is to be the Next Great Combination of World Powers

LESSONS LEARNED FROM THE BOER WAR

England no Longer Fears an Invasion of India by Way of Afghanistan by Russia

London, Feb. 24—Now that Great Britain has made a formal treaty with Japan, it remains to secure another partner among the great powers to assure a dominant influence. But which of the Powers? Not Germany, to all present appearances; for on that side the interests involved seem far more irreconcilable than on any other. It is a common saying that England has not a friend among the nations of Europe. This can at the present time be said as regards Germany with especial truth. There is what is called the Anglo-German agreement as Chinese affairs, by which Germany was allowed a free hand in the seizure of Shantung with the port of Kiachau, and to participate in the trade of the Yangtse within the British sphere of influence. But this is futile. All the time the old policy of Prince Bismarck to keep on good terms with Russia under all circumstances remains paramount at Berlin. He made a secret treaty with Russia after the formation of the Triple Alliance. The public avowal by Count Bulow of the Yangtse agreement was preceded by a secret intimation to Russia that this agreement was not meant to interfere with Russian policy in the far east. The object was to persuade Russia that England was her enemy and Germany her friend.

What if the treaty with Japan should prove to be the prelude to a similar British compact with Russia? Under the strain of present European conditions a rapprochement in that quarter does not seem improbable. The Vienna despatch this morning is on purely academic lines, that militant Muscovites will revenge themselves by stirring up Afghanistan, while the Russian Government will lie low hoping that Japan will eventually unite with China to drive out foreigners. The defect in this theory is that Japan has for forty years been striving after western ideals in her whole civilization.

Britain's sudden resolve to abandon Wei-Hai-Wei, the port in the Pechili Gulf, which her fleet occupied as an offset to the Russian occupation of Port Arthur, nearly opposite, points at least to a modified apprehension. Instead of being fortified as a naval base that port is resigned to civil control. The scene of most strenuous international contention seems to have been transferred from Northern China to the Persian Gulf, where Germany, under the friendship of the Sultan of Turkey, is building railways from Asia Minor to the sea. Germany turned a blind eye to the Armenian massacres to gain the Sultan's favor, and forward schemes to acquire and open up the vast fertile and rich mineral regions there which have lain for ages fallow. Britain's war ships are there to prevent the Sultan from coercing the coast tribes for this purpose. And also in obedience to the old-standing dread, on the part of the Indian Government of Russian menace England is urged to maintain the neutrality of the chief gulf harbor of Koweit in order to keep the way open to her Indian possessions in case of invasion. But she is not looking for the acquisition of more territory.

But the dread of a Russian conquest of India is gradually passing away. This ambition was distinctly repudiated by the late Czar Alexander so long ago as 1877. He said that in the first place it was "an impossibility," and he gave the most solemn pledge that he entertained neither the wish nor the intention "to menace the interests of England, either with regard to Constantinople, or Egypt or India. With regard to India, His Majesty not only considers it impossible to do so, but an act of folly if practicable." After the war broke out, the Czar frankly said that he attached the greatest importance to the maintenance of good relations between the two countries. "He will make every effort to that end, but the English Cabinet, on their side, must do the same."

The experience of the Boer war must have largely moderated the fears of British Russophobes. If an army of 30,000 farmers, reduced by war to less than 10,000, can go on successfully engaging a trained army of 250,000 men, and defying the resources of the greatest empire in the world, what hope for a Russian army of invasion, wandering among the mountains, which are the natural ramparts of India, defended by martial tribes with the whole people of India behind them? If it was "impossible" in 1877, how absurd in this era of smokeless powder and improved long range weapons!

It is a plain conclusion that from Germany is the greatest menace. That country is busy in the creation of a vast navy. The secret of much of the hatred toward England lies in the feeling that England, by her command of the sea, is an obstacle to German expansion everywhere. While that supremacy lasts Germany cannot fulfil her imagined destiny as a world power. She feels herself cooped up with 56,000,000 of people, who are educated more than any other nation in those doctrines which seek a new heaven and a new earth in one, while they live. Industrial troubles have begun to loom up, and industrial troubles there are for this reason more dangerous than they are elsewhere. In France and Russia, the army conscripts remain very much under religious influence. In Germany this has lost its hold over the masses. Should these new doctrines continue to thrive as in past years, inoculating the army as well as gaining control of the legislative power of the Empire, a catastrophe might follow some severe period of industrial or agricultural distress, which would remodel existing institutions. The ambition of Germany is to strike out into new fields of enterprise, but wherever she goes she finds the land occupied by England and the English flag flying in every port. It makes the German angry to find the world so limited in proportion to her people's needs, and Britain athwart every path. To snatch from England the sceptre of the sea, is the aim to which Germany has surrendered herself, and to attain which she is ready to ally with Russia and France, one or both combined, awaiting the hour to strike. If Britain has at length awakened to the situation, and is preparing to shake hands with Russia to the end of dispersing the lesser of the clouds menacing her future, if the position of "splendid isolation" is found to be fraught with more responsibilities and dangers than "entangling" friendly alliances, we might regard a formal friendly engagement with Russia as by no means improbable.

EIGHTEEN PERSONS DEAD, OVER FIFTY INJURED.

Terrible Result of a Fire Which Started in a New York Regimental Armory--Spread to a Neighboring Hotel

New York, Feb. 22.—Eighteen persons lost their lives, and fifty or more were injured, in a fire which was communicated early to-day from the 71st Regiment N.Y.N.G. Armory to the Park Avenue Hotel. The armory was destroyed, entailing a loss estimated at $650,000. In the hotel the damage was principally in the tiers of rooms surrounding the elevator shafts. The loss to the hotel building is estimated at $100,000.

Shortly before 1 o'clock the fire was discovered bursting from the roof of the 71st Regiment armory, Park avenue and 34th street. The flames had gained tremendous headway, and by the time the firemen arrived on the scene it was impossible to do anything toward saving the magnificent building. Several times flames were communicated to the car barns of the Metropolitan Street Railway, but these were quickly extinguished. The heat of the burning armory became more and more intense, and shortly after 2 o'clock flames were discovered running along the windows and woodwork of the fifth floor, at the northeast corner of the Park Avenue Hotel, diagonally across the street from the armory. This was entirely unexpected, and the police up to that time had bent their efforts toward the inmates of adjacent houses on the cross streets. Frightened occupants of the hotel soon appeared at every window, and many were rescued by the firemen, who ran the ladders up in quick order. In some unexplained manner fire got into the basement of the elevator shaft, and ate its way upward to the roof. Most of the damage to the hotel was done in rooms surrounding the elevator shaft.

AMMUNITION EXPLODED.

In the headquarters of the Fifth Brigade in the 34th street and Park avenue quarter of the armory a large quantity of ammunition, both blank and ball cartridges, was stored. These cartridges soon began to explode and added to the intense excitement. Shortly after these explosions had ceased the wall of the 33rd street side fell inward. This crash was followed by the explosion of about one thousand pounds of powder, said to have been stored in the basement of the armory. The detonation was terrific but firemen had been warned of the danger, and none of them were injured.

Ambulances were called from every hospital in the district, and the firemen turned their entire attention to the hotel. A line of hose was quickly rushed up to the third floor, while scores of guests were taken from the windows by other firemen on the outside. The firemen inside found that the hotel was rapidly filling with smoke, and the firemen for a time dropped their hose and hurried through every portion of the building, in search of guests who might have been overcome by smoke. Their search was rewarded, for nearly on every floor and the hallways scores of persons were found, who had been overcome in their efforts to reach the open air.

Hospital records show that twenty-six persons were taken to the New York and Bellevue institutions. Nearly double that number were injured in their panic-stricken endeavors to escape, and were given medical aid on the spot. Of the scores taken from the windows of the third fourth and fifth floors, many were slightly burned and were hysterical from shock.

Of the dead five were women. Death in one instance was caused by burns or suffocation, with one exception. One man jumped from the fifth storey window to the inner court. His skull was crushed and death was instantaneous.

THRILLING SCENES.

When the fire started in the armory scores of guests in the Park Avenue were awakened by the clang of the engines and crowded to the hotel windows. It was about 45 minutes after the flames were discovered in the armory before they spread to the hotel, but, in spite of this, many of the guests were in their rooms, dressed in their night clothes, and some of them were in bed. The firemen, as soon as they learned that the hotel was in danger, decided to devote all of their efforts to the rescue of its occupants. Men and women appeared at the windows of the Park Avenue side of the hotel, and called for help. Mrs. Charlotte Bennett and her husband, Harold, of Alabama, stood on a ledge on the fifty floor, just over the portico over the main entrance to the hotel. Mrs. Bennett was terror stricken and screamed again and again for some one to rescue her. Her husband grasped her, and from the crowd of thousands gathered in the streets, there were shouts, warning them not to jump. When it was seen that she was determined to jump, the firemen gathered in a circle and stretched out their arms.

With a final desperate effort, Mrs. Bennett wrenched herself free from her husband's grasp, and with a piercing scream flung herself into the arms of the waiting firemen, five stories below. When she jumped from the ledge on which she and her husband had stood, the flames were licking out the window behind her, and around her form. The inside of the room was all in flames. Mrs. Bennett struck in the arms of the firemen. Her weight caused them to sag, and the woman struck the pavement. She was terribly burned about the body. She was carried into the hotel by a firemen, and was later taken to Bellevue hospital, where she died.

Her husband, when Mrs. Bennett jumped, fell back into the room. He was not seen afterwards, and it is believed that he was burned or suffocated to death.

TORONTO MAN INJURED.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 24.—A special despatch includes the name of Harry L. Bennett of Toronto, among the list of injured in the Park Avenue Hotel fire.

A POPULAR PAPER

A Few Samples of How This Great Family Journal is Regarded

Mr. Grey, the well known physician, says that The Times is very popular in his household, the members of which all want it first. The Dr. intimates that he may be obliged to subscribe for several copies.

Dr. Bingham, the efficient Medical Health officer, says he would rather miss his breakfast anytime than not get his morning paper. The Times gives him an appetite and equips him for the day with a knowledge of current events both foreign and domestic.

Mr. Ed. Brown reads his Times in bed. This does not indicate that Ed. is a late riser. For as a matter of fact he is not, but shows that The Times is out bright and early.

Mr. Harry LeBrun is another who greatly enjoys his morning paper, and makes no bones about telling people that this g.f.j. is usually up before he is.

Commodore Calcutt also bears testimony to the fact that The Times is Peterborough's popular paper.

In the surrounding villages, where The Times has hundreds of readers, the same opinion exists. Mr. Geo D. Hilleard, Lakefield, says The Times is the popular daily of that village. Mr. Thornton bears the same testimony regarding Omemee, while Dr. Ford, Norwood; T. McIntyre, Keene; R. F. Choate, Warsaw; Wm. O'Brien, Douro; James Baptie, Springville, all sing the praises of this g.f.j.

We are now engaged in making a house to house canvas for subscribers in town, and hope to place the paper in almost every home. We appreciate the kind words that is everywhere being said for the paper, and hope to continue merit the regard of our readers.

The Duration of the Session—Private Legislation Likely to be Introduced—Peterborough Regarded in the Capital as a Live Town

Special to The Times

Ottawa, Feb. 24—The Times' correspondent had a chat a few days ago with Minister Tait regarding the outlook of session, and was informed that the session would not be a lengthy one. The reason for this is not hard to find. In the first place, the Government has not much to offer in the way of new or important legislation. No Redistribution Bill will be brought down this year; indeed, it is said, that the Government will "postpone the evil day" as long as possible, and that no Redistribution Bill will be brought down before 1904, possibly, not until 1905, as the Ministers are in no hurry to put the result of the census in force and deprive Ontario of six seats. In the second place, it is extremely doubtful whether there will be any changes in the tariff. Mr. Fielding has received deputations asking for increases on the duties on woollens, cottons, and other articles the Canadian manufacturers of which are being ruined by the competition of German manufactures brought in under the so-called "Preferential" tariff, and Mr. Fielding has urbanely assured the deputations that their representations were "very important," and that they should receive "careful consideration," and there the matter is likely to rest. The woollen men need not look for any relief from Mr. Fielding, for they will get none. In the third place, Sir Wilfrid and several of his colleagues, want to go to the coronation of King Edward VII in June; and, as many members of Parliament, on both sides of the House intend being present at some of the functions, although not in any official capacity, it is likely that an effort will be made to rush the session through in three months or less, so that everyone who wants to go to England for the coronation may be able to do so.

Peterborough's Stock Going Up.

That Peterborough is becoming known abroad is apparent. Your correspondent happened to be sitting in the House of Commons reading room, and was one of a small audience who heard a western Senator expatiate on the advantages of Peterborough as a manufacturing centre. Peterborough, he said, was destined to become one of the most important cities in the Dominion. "Why," said he, as he waxed eloquent, "the town is already a long away in advance of many of the cities of the country. It has many valuable industries, and several others in course of construction, besides being in a fair way to secure, in the near future, another concern that will add 5,000 to its population. It has three good newspapers, the brightest of which is the Times, which is printed every morning in time for all outgoing trains." Our friend then went on to discuss the lift lock, and concluded that Peterborough was the safest town on the continent to invest money in, as its future was assured.

Rumors About Honors.

Apropos of the coronation, a rumor is floating about Ottawa that there will be a very general distribution of honors in connection with the coronation ceremonies; and that Canada will come in for her full share—and, perhaps, a little over. Amongst those who are freely mentioned as being slated for what the Liberal party leaders, while in Opposition, and the Toronto Globe and other Grit papers, used to designate as "tin pot titles," are, Hon. F. W. Borden, Minister of Militia and Defence, for his services in connection with the Canadian contingents for South Africa; Hon. Wm. Mulock, Postmaster-General, for his "two cent postage within the Empire" scheme; Hon. Mr. Sifton, for his more or less valuable services in connection with immigration; and last, but not least, Hon. G. W. Ross, Premier of Ontario, for his long and staunch advocacy of the cause of Imperial Federation. This gives force to the rumor about the postponement of the Ontario elections until September; for "Geordie" is too canny a Scot to take any chances which can be avoided; and he knows that while the "Premier" of the Greatest Province of the Greatest Colony of the Greatest Empire, will stand a first-class chance of knighthood, if there is anything like a general distribution of honors, the "Ex-" Premier would stand no chance at all. So, it will not be surprising if the Ontario Government finds that it cannot possibly appeal to the country until after the coronation.

Private Legislation.

The private legislation promises to be not only larger than usual, but, a portion of it at least will be of very great interest. Notice has been given of 100 bills, of which 18 are for railway charters, 29 for miscellaneous private bills, including mining, insurance and other financial and industrial enterprises, and 12 for amendments to existing charters. These latter include the Bell Telephone Co., the Georgian Bay Canal and the St. Clair and Erie Ship Canal. There are also 11 applications for divorce, 6 of which are from Ontario, 3 from Quebec, 1 from the North West and 1 from British Columbia.

Canada Atlantic Railway.

The conflicting stories which have been given currency to by the Ottawa and New York papers, during the past two weeks, as to the purchase of the Canada Atlantic Railway by Dr. Stewart Webb, representing the Vanderbilt interest, have caused much comment here. Dr. Webb who spent a few days in Ottawa, informed a group of newspaper men, on the eve of his departure from the city, that he had "purchased" the road, and since his return to New York it has been announced, presumably on his authority, that "the money has been paid over," and the transfer of a controlling interest in the stock of the company made. On the other hand, Mr. C. Jackson Booth, son of Mr. J. R. Booth and President of the Canada Atlantic, denies that any money has been paid over, or that his father has parted with his control of the road. He says that the Canada Atlantic has has never been offered for sale, and that he is not at all anxious to sell it; but that Dr. Webb has made an offer to buy the road and a price has been named, and Dr. Webb has been given a certain time to decide whether or not he will pay the price asked, which is said to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000,000 for about 500 miles of road. So the matter rests at present.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

St. Petersburg, Feb. 24.—The latest news received here from Yalta, Crimea, is to the effect that Count Tolstoi is at the point of death.

SITUATION IN BARCELONA.

Barcelona, Feb. 22.—Although there was some resuscitation of ordinary life in this city yesterday, it was largely artificial. A few public establishments re-opened under the compulsion of the authorities, but practically, no business was transacted. The street cars ceased running at eight in the evening, and the newspapers were unable to appear, the compositors refusing to work. There were some isolated affrays, and attempts to sack bakeries, during which five persons were wounded. It was reported to-day that a number of workmen were caught in the act of preparing bombs.

QUARRELLED WITH RIVAL.

Berlin, Feb. 22.—What is styled here "an American duel" occurred at Lemberg recently, causing a great sensation. Carl Mrzyglod, a school teacher, first swallowed arsenic, then while writhing in pain, seized a razor and gashed his throat, after that he shot himself twice with a revolver and finally hanged himself by a contrivance previously fixed on a door. He had had a quarrel with his rival for the affections of a Polish girl and they had drawn lots to determine which should kill himself.

RECORD HERRING FISHERY.

London, Feb. 22.—Some remarkable figures are disclosed in the returns of the herring fishery in the Channel and North Sea during the season just ended. It has been a record year for the fleets from Boulogne, Fecamp and Dieppe, the catches reaching the total of over £350,000, the average for each French boat employed being £2,285.

Aberdeen has had a record fishing for the year just closed. The total weight of white fish is given at 1,140,000 cwt., valued at £720,000, all landed by trawlers. Almost the entire catch was sent to English towns, from which the demand is constantly increasing. About fifty new trawlers have been built during the year.

SHORT ROUTE TO MAINLAND.

Victoria, Feb. 24. — Gradually but rapidly the proposed system of the Victoria Terminal Railway Company, which is to provide a short route to the mainland, is being perfected. By the 1st of March trains will be running into the market building, and passengers leaving the heart of the city for points along the road and between here and Nanaimo.

Work is to be immediately commenced on the construction of a new slip at Liverpool, so that as soon as a ferry boat can be placed on the route between the island and mainland there will be no delay about the transportation of freight.

HONEYMOON IN SNOWDRIFT.

New York, Feb. 24.— The first hours of married life for Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop Rutherford have not been full of joy. They announced that they would take one route for the honeymoon, but, instead of that, switched on their friends, and went to Tranquility Farms, the country estate of the Rutherfords. The coachman met them at the station, but in driving to the Farms got stuck in a snowdrift, and in endeavoring to get by pitched the bride and groom upon the cold, crust snow. Mrs. Rutherford is the daughter of Levi P. Morton.

NEW IDEA OF TAXES

Tuskagee, Ala., Feb. 24. —George Foster Peabody, the New York millionaire and philanthropist, is a leading figure at the negro conference in session here. Many reforms, were suggested and resolutions passed. Among the questions discussed was the teaching of agriculture in the public schools. It was decided that the prompt and willing payment of all taxes were the foundation of the growth of the negro race.

Belleville, Feb. 22. — A party from the city last evening, while en route to a wedding which took place in Ameliasburg township, had an experience which they have no desire to have repeated. They left the city in the early part of the evening, being in the new street car bus recently procured by Mr. Asselstine. In the conveyance was a coal oil stove used for heating.

The route taken was across the bay, and when near the Ameliasburg shore the bus was accidentally upset by the east side sinking deep into a snow bank, thus upsetting the stove and spilling the oil. In an instant the oil from the stove became ignited and the fire thus kindled spread rapidly.

Mr. Dickens, who was seated near the stove fell among the burning oil and his clothing caught fire, but he managed to put the fire out before sustaining much injury. His moustache and hair were slightly singed.

The other occupants of the conveyance made hasty exits and by the time they were out the rig was enveloped in flames, and in a few minutes was burned up, with the exception of the robes.

The most serious part of the affair was that some valises containing clothing were burned. Miss Queena Watson lost a white silk dress; Mr. Osborne a new dress suit; Mrs. Dickens some furs, and others also had valuable apparel destroyed.

The bus burned had been in use but a short time and was valued at about $300.

164 BOERS CAPTURED BY COLONEL PARKS.

Surprised by a Mounted Force of Scouts and 164 Prisoners Were Taken

DISSATISFACTION AMONG CANADIAN SOLDIERS.

Company Refused to be Scattered Among Imperial Troops in South Africa--Jealousy of British

London, Feb. 24.—A despatch from Lord Kitchener, dated Pretoria, Friday, Feb. 21, says Colonel Park, with three hundred mounted national scouts, recently surprised a Boer force at Nooitgacht, Transvaal Colony, and captured 164 prisoners, together with a quantity of munitions of war, and a number of horses and waggons. There were no British casualties. The prisoners include Field Cornets Joubert and Dejater and Lieut. Wiljeon.

DISSATISFACTION AMONG CANADIANS

Vancouver, Feb. 22.—For some time past inklings of dissatisfaction being rife among the Canadian troops in South Africa have reached British Columbia, but heretofore no direct statement of affairs has escaped the eagle eye of the censor. The appended communication has been received from a Canadian, who prior to enlistment in the first contingent of Canadian Mounted Rifles was prominent in newspaper circles in this province.

Writing from Krugersdorp, under date of November 28, 1901, this correspondent says—

"It is currently reported that the Canadian troops in the Transvaal are to be disbanded and apportioned in small batches among the regiments of Imperial troops stationed at various points throughout the country.

"No. 17 Troop from British Columbia, under Capt. C. C. Bennett, formerly of Vancouver, is the first to fall. The men of that troop have already received notification that it will be disbanded at once, Capt. Bennett being relieved of his command.

"The men have refused to be scattered among the Imperial troops throughout the country, and interesting developments are expected.

"The cause of the trouble is the alleged incompetence of the captain in command, or at least that is the reason given at headquarters. The men will, however, be the sufferers, as their action in refusing to be drafted among the Imperial troops is considered mutinous.

"In some quarters, however, it is said Capt. Bennett's trouble is due to his being too severe a disciplinarian, while others allege the frequency of complaints regarding his financial obligations.

"The military authorities have broken faith with the Canadians in several instances; it was promised that the Canadians were to be kept together and officered by Canadian men; faith in the matter of pay has been broken, and also regarding the purchase of discharges, the latter privilege having been refused the Canadians.

MEN WILL REGRET.

"It is to be regretted that six hundred more Canadians are to be recruited, as the men will certainly regret having enlisted when too late for remedial action.

"The first and second Canadian contingents and the Strathcona Horse did such brilliant work here that the jealousy of the British officers was aroused. The result is that the Canadian contingents in South Africa are getting the worst of the deal in every instance.

"It is rumoured that Colonel Steele has tendered his resignation to take effect unless he is put in charge of the Canadians. Up to the present time not a single Canadian troop has been placed in his division, although it was promised and generally understood that the Canadians were to serve under his command.

"The feeling among the Canadian troops here is running high and the results may be serious."

mended to the attention of journalistic pro-Boers on the "other side." They might even reproduce it in their papers, if they possess the honesty or courage, two qualities that a few of them sadly lack. This extract is not taken from the Saturday Review or The London Times, or any presumably hostile critics of the UnitedStates and its methods, but is written by the special correspondent of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and printed in the columns of that journal. Read this:

"The present war is no bloodless fake, opera bouffe engagement; our men have been relentless, have killed to exterminate men women, children, prisoners and captives, active insurgents and suspected people, from lads of ten up, and idea prevailing that the Filipino, as such, was little better than a dog, a noisome reptile in some instances, whose best disposition was the rubbish heap. Our soldiers have pumped salt water into men to 'make them talk,' have taken prisoners people who held up their hands and peacefully surrendered, and an hour later, without an atom of evidence to show that they were even insurrectors, stood them on a bridge and shot them down one by one to drop into the water below, and float down, as examples to those who found their bullet-loaded corpses. It is not civilized warfare, but we are not dealing with a civilized people. The only thing they know and fear is force, violence and brutality, and we give it to them. The new military plan of settling the trouble by setting them at each other is one that looks promising. We have now sent a thousand Maccabbees to Samar 'to avenge the treacherous murder of Company C, of the 9th infantry. They are hereditary enemies of the Ladrones, and go forth to the slaughter gaily."

A LICENSE ON CLERGYMEN

Louisville, Feb. 24. — Captain W. T. Norton, a clubman of Louisville, says that ministers are trying to "butt into politics," and proposes that they shall pay a $5 license fee. The clubman further claims that they have been advancing unwise theories.

CRONJE AND THE WAR

How the Surrender of the Army Relieved Ladysmith

London, Feb. 24—It has been a matter of contention as to whether the defeat and capture of Cronje by Lord Roberts was not really responsible for Buller's ultimate success on the Tugela and for the relief of Ladysmith. A military journal in England is publishing a translation of the diary of a Russian officer who was with the Boers, and the last instalment published describes the panic which ensued among the Boer army in Natal when the news of the surrender of old Cronje reached them. This officer, in describing the hasty withdrawal from around Ladysmith which followed, says:

"This flight from an impregnable position was not caused by the appearance or victory of the English, but by the startling news that the forces of Roberts had broken into the Free State, and that General Cronje, the lion of the Transvaal and the hope and stay of both republics, had been guilty of treason. With the quickness of lightning this news flew round the Free State commandoes. They quitted their rifle pits, collected their horses and carts and started on the road home to defend their farms and their wives and children. It was in vain that Botha pleaded and argued with them."

KRUGER AGENT IN AMERICA

Dr. Muller Said to Have Arrived—Came Long Ago, Says Mr. Pruyn.

New York, Feb. 24—A passenger by the American liner St. Paul, which arrived yesterday, registered as "W. F. Oastberg. It is said aboard the ship that Oastberg was really Dr. Muller, formerly Consul of the Orange Free State in Holland. A news agency despatch from Brussels, printed in the Sun, says that Dr. Muller had been travelling under an assumed name, and that he was taking a letter from Mr. Kruger to President Roosevelt. The despatch said also that Dr. Muller would endeavor to "secure the prohibition by America of the exportation of articles regarded by the Boers as contraband of war and also try to secure from the United States Government a statement of its opinion on the war in South Africa."

According to the reporters at Quarantine a passenger by the St. Paul who had known Dr. Muller well in Europe, pointed out Oastberg as Muller.

J. V. L. Pruyn, one of the principal Boer sympathisers in this city, said last night he was positive that Dr. Muller had been in this city a month.

A PRESENTATION

Harmony Lodge I. O. G. T. Present an Address and Chair to Mr. and Mrs. Walter

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dredge, No. 7, Walton street, was the scene of a pretty and interesting surprise party on Friday evening, when a number of the members of Harmony Lodge I.O.G.T. casually called to see them and after a short time spent in social intercourse presented the following address accompanied by a handsome oak rocking chair to Mr. and Mrs. Dredge.

The address was read as follows:

To Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dredge,—

Dear Brother and Sister:

We feel we cannot let this opportunity pass, without in some way showing our respect for you as we honored brother and sister in our lodge. As you are now starting out together we trust that your future life may be blessed where ever you may be. We hope that He who is ruler over all may guide you and bring us all to the place where there is no parting.

We ask you to accept this chair as a remembrance and we hope your thoughts may go back to the many pleasant evenings we have spent and hope still to spend together.

Again wishing you a long, prosperous and happy wedded life.

Signed on behalf of Harmony Lodge.

The reading of the address and the presentation came as a very great surprise and after a few moments, Mr. Dredge thanked those assembled for their kind wishes and kindly remembrance of them.

A very pleasant time was afterwards spent by those assembled.

A Spider's Genius

"I HAVE considerable respect for the female spider, notwithstanding the fact that she does not treat the male very considerately," says a correspondent. "I had an opportunity last summer to watch a large one that had a web to the top of a decaying peach tree with so few leaves that it was in plain view. I caught sight of her first when watching some birds with my glass. She seemed to be climbing from the top of the tree on nothing to a telephone wire some fifteen feet away and somewhat higher than her web. When she reached the wire she went around it and then back. In studying the situation, I found the web was so located that it required a cable to hold it up and the spider had in some way got one over the wire so far away. This cable was, of course, a slender silken thread which evidently she had thrown out, and on account of its lightness it had floated to the right place and become attached there by its glutinous properties. It seems remarkable that it should have adhered to the wire firmly enough to allow so large an insect to climb over it, which she did every day as long as I watched her, evidently to mend or strengthen it. The spider must have brains in which the ability to construct its web and adapt it to conditions is highly developed."

In an article in "Chambers' Journal" the following account of how the spider forms its silken threads is given:

"One of the most interesting features in the economy of spiders is their power of emitting slender threads of a silk-like substance called gossamer, with which most of them construct mesh-like nets, and a few long, dangling cables, by which they are buoyed through the air with nearly as much facility as though they had been furnished with wings. The apparatus provided by nature for elaborating and emitting this gossamer is a beautiful piece of mechanism. Within the animal there are several little bags or vesicles of a gummy matter; and these vesicles are connected with a circular orifice situated at the abdomen. Within this orifice are five little teats or spinnerets, through which the gossamer is drawn. It must not be concluded, however, that there is only one film of gossamer produced by each spinneret; the fact is, these teats are studded with thousands of minute tubes too small for the naked eye to perceive, and each of these emits a thread of inconceivable fineness. These minute tubes are known as spinnerules, and the films which proceed from them unite like so many strands of a rope to form the thread of gossamer by which a spider suspends itself. The finest thread which human mechanism can produce is like a ship's cable compared with the delicate films which flow from the spinnerules of the largest spider. The films are all distinctly separate on coming from the spinneret, but unite, not by any twisting process, but merely by their own glutinous or gummy nature. Thus the spinning apparatus of the disdained spider, when viewed by the eye of science, becomes one of the most wonderful pieces of animated mechanism known to man. The animal has great command over this apparatus, and can apply it at will as long as the receptacles within are replenished with the gummy fluid, but as soon as this gum is exhausted all its efforts to spin are fruitless, and it must wait till nature, by her inscrutable chemistry, has secreted it from the food which is devoured."—"Waverley Magazine."

When the late President of the United States and party went west not many months before he was shot, Mrs. McKinley, it will be remembered, went too. While talking one day with Mr. Scott, the man who built the battleship "Oregon," relates a writer in the Boston "Journal," Mrs. McKinley said: "Oh, do you play cribbage, Mr. Scott?" "Yes," was the great shipbuilder's answer. "Well, so do I," said Mrs. McKinley. "I wish you would play a game with me." "I should be delighted to do so," was the reply. Later, as President McKinley and Mr. Scott were looking over the latter's big plant, Mrs. McKinley not being present, the President said: "Oh, by the way, Mr. Scott, didn't I hear you and Mrs. McKinley arranging to play cribbage some time?" "Yes," said Mr. Scott, "we are going to play." "Well, what kind of a player are you?" asked the President. "Oh, pretty fair, I guess; I play a pretty good game." "Well, so do I," said Mr. McKinley. "But, do you know, it may seem strange, but it is a fact, that I have never been able to play well enough to beat Mrs. McKinley." As he said this he looked at Mr. Scott with a significant smile. Their eyes met. It was enough. Mr. Scott understood, and it was safe to say that he did not beat Mrs. McKinley.

PEOPLE in general have been content to look upon the Indian's adornment of his head with eagle feathers and his face with paint as marks of personal decoration inspired by vanity and a savage taste, different only in degree from what is sometimes witnessed among highly-civilized peoples. But the fact is that, in preference to the latter custom, for instance, every paint mark on an Indian's face has a sort of heraldic meaning, implying not only the honors won by the brave in person, but representing also the claims of his family and race to distinction. In other words, what is shown among more cultured communities by coats of arms, orders and decorations is depicted by the Indian on his face by means of pigments.

Scientists are now engaged, among other novel investigations concerning the North American Indian, in compiling a record of the armorial, or rather facial, bearings of certain celebrated chiefs, and it is said to be fascinating work. One renowned warrior, for instance, will have his lip painted a copper red. This is found to indicate that his tribe was once in possession of huge mines of copper. Another individual will have his forehead adorned with a painting of a certain fish, thus implying that he or his people are renowned for prowess in catching fish. The same distinguished person sometimes wears a disk of pearl in addition to his paint mask. This, by its shimmering radiance and its form, implies that he is descended from the moon, in the sense that the goddess of night is one of his ancestors.

The fact that the Indian has no conception of perspective seriously handicaps the success of his efforts at pictorial art. Indeed, the Indian limner merely aims to show the most characteristic portion of the object he attempts to depict, unless he be a man of great attainment, in which case he divides or dissects the subject of his picture and represents the whole by its parts, the latter being arranged entirely irrespective of the natural sequence.

The features of the Indian are sometimes incorporated into the representation of the animal which forms his heraldic bearing. Should the beaver, for example, be the object to be depicted, it is not attempted to design the whole form of the animal, but only its distinctive and typical parts, as for instance, its peculiar tail, which is painted in criss-cross lines extending from the chin to the nose, as though standing upright. The chin itself does service as the beaver's body.

The arbitrary methods of the Indian artist render it difficult, if not impossible, for any but an expert to interpret the meanings of the pictorial representations. Thus an animal's ears are invariably depicted above the eyes on the human subject, the ears of the beaver being just above the eyebrows. On the cheeks are painted the paws in a position as though they were raised to the mouth in the manner conventional in Indian carvings.

The dogfish painted in red on the face designates the members of an entire tribe. On the foreheads of the members of this tribe is painted the long, thin snout; the gills are represented by two curved lines below the eyes, while the tail is shown as cut in two and hanging from each nostril. Only one or two parts of an animal painted on an Indian's face indicates that he is of inferior position; the entire symbol, no matter in what form presented, is significant of lofty station and high honors.

The facial heraldry of the Indian may be said to be unique, not alone in the method of representation employed, but in the subjects selected. These latter include fish, flesh and fowl of all descriptions—dog salmon, devilfish, starfish, woodpeckers, ravens, eagles, bears, wolves, frogs, are comprised in the armorial gallery.

Every object represented has its own particular significance, and one of the most peculiar phases of face painting relates to the employment of forms other than animal—tools, implements of the chase or of war, denoting the occupation of the individual or his tribe.—Washington "Times."

A Lawyer's Wit.

The New York "Commercial Advertiser" says that not long before his death, Henry W. Paine, one of the most brilliant American lawyers of his generation, became interested, as a matter of charity, in a case in which a lad of some fifteen years was charged with arson. Paine defended the boy and offered conclusive evidence that he was, to all practical purposes, an idiot and totally irresponsible. Nevertheless, the jury, after listening to a charge from the court, which was virtually an order for acquittal, brought in a verdict of guilty.

The presiding judge then addressed Paine.

"You will move for a new trial, I presume, Mr. Paine?"

Paine rose with an air that was painful in its solemnity.

"I thank your honor for your suggestion," he said, "but I am oppressed with the gravest doubts as to whether I have the right to move for a new trial in this case. Your honor, I have already asked for and have received for my idiot client the most precious heritage of our English and American common law—a trial by a jury of his peers."

The judge then ordered the verdict to be set aside.

An Unfortunate Inquiry.

A New York man, who has written a book, was telling about it the other day to a friend who had once done him a service. "By the way," said the author, "I would be delighted to give you a copy of my work if you care for it." "I should be more than pleased to have it," was the reply; "especially if you will write your name in it." "All right There is a bookstore around the corner. If you will accompany me we will go get it." In the bookstore the author, pushing his chest out very far, asked for the novel that he had written. "Yes, sir," the clerk said. "We have it around here somewhere, I believe, but you are the first one who has ever asked for a copy, and it may take me some time to find it. Wouldn't something else do just as well? We have a great many better books at the same price."

Dr. Varnadoe, a noted professor of Greek, is very fond of flowers, and some days ago, on returning from his college duties, he found in his front yard a pestiferous calf belonging to a neighbor. The doctor gave chase, and the animal plunged toward the flower-pit, and in another instant crashed through the glass cover and mixed at random with the pots and plants below. When another professor passed a few minutes later, he said, gravely: "I do not understand, Dr. Varnadoe, why you should object so seriously to having a modest cowslip added to your fine collection of plants." The doctor's frowning face relaxed. "Ah, [illegible]," he retorted, "you see, this was only a [illegible]."

"I did not sleep a night for seven long weeks."

That prolonged period of sleeplessness is most expressive of the pain and suffering caused by womanly diseases. It is pleasant to contrast the medical inefficiency which said "I could not be cured" with the prompt and permanent cure effected by the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This great medicine for women establishes regularity, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce's medicines to other suffering women," writes Mrs. Mary Adams, of Grassycreek, Ashe Co., N. C. "I had internal trouble very badly until it resulted in ulcers of the uterus. I was troubled with it so that I did not sleep a night for seven long weeks. The doctors said I could not be cured, but I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Pleasant Pellets.' After taking two bottles I could sleep all night, and after taking six bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and two of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and three vials of 'Pleasant Pellets' my case was cured. I had told my husband that I would have to die, as it seemed I could not live. He told me to put faith in Dr. Pierce's medicines, for it had cured others and would cure me. So it did, and I thank God and your medicine for saving my life."

It is related that once, when a captain in the army was cornered by the enemy, he addressed his men as follows: "My men, fight like demons until your powder gives out, then run. I'm a little lame, I'll start now."

An English rector on coming into a new parish, asked the clerk if there were any Puseyites (followers of Dr. Pusey, a high churchman) in the community. "No, sir," replied the clerk; "there used to be some, but for the last two years the boys have took all their eggs."

Mark Twain was recently chaffing Sir Wemyss Reid on the vagaries of English pronunciation. "You spell a name B-e-a-u-c-h-a-m-p, and pronounce it Marchbanks," he said. "And you do precisely the same thing," replied Sir Wemyss. "What do you mean?" asked Mark Twain. "Well, you spell your name C-l-e-m-e-n-s, and you pronounce it Twain."

Life is Too Short!

An evening contemporary has been informing its readers that they can use the same calendars every twenty years —when the dates of the months fall on the same days of the week—thereby avoiding the expense of five almanacs for the present century. But here is something even better than that. Those persons who have the double advantage of ancient family and careful forefathers, by turning up the calendars — unfortunately, they are not printed ones—for the twelfth century, by Solomon Jarchus, will find the days and dates coincident with the present century. Such persons can save the expense of buying for one hundred years. Again, those with a frugal mind who have preserved the almanacs of the nineteenth century will avoid an outlay for calendars of the century commencing January 1, 2201, as the dates for the hundred years following will be coincident with those of the last century. But life, remarks the London "Chronicle," is scarcely long enough for such economies.

Tommy's Poser.

A lady was recently reading to her young son the story of a little fellow whose father was taken ill and died, after which he set himself diligently to work to assist in supporting himself and his mother. When she had finished the story, she said:

"Now, Tommy, if pa were to die, wouldn't you work to keep mamma?"

"Why, no," said the little chap, not relishing the idea of work. "What for? Ain't we got a good house to live in?"

"Oh, yes, my dear," said the mother, "but we can't eat the house, you know."

"Well, ain't we got plenty of things in the pantry?" continued the young hopeful.

"Certainly, dear," replied the mother, "but they would not last long, and what then?"

"Well, ma," said the young incorrigible, after thinking a moment, "ain't there enough to last till you get another husband?"

Ma gave it up.

Not long ago a tourist in New Orleans went to see the statue of Andrew Jackson in that city, on the pedestal of which is inscribed, "United We Stand; Divided We Fall." Seeing an old colored man standing by, he asked, "Uncle, did that inscription stay there all during the Civil War?" "No, sah," responded the old uncle, "hit didn't stay dar endurin' de wah. In de fust place, dem letters was standin' out laik dey was plastered on. Den de wah bust loose, and de Confed'rate gin'ral down yere, he tuk a chisel and cut dem letters off smooth. Den ol' Gin'ral Butler, he come erlong wid his Union sojers, an' he tuk a chisel an' cut dem in deep, laik dey is now. An', Lordy, how de folks down yere did sw'ar when ol' Gin'ral Butler brush de dus' off'n his clothes an' git up frum his wu'k an' say, 'I'se a-gwine to hang de fus' Johnny Reb what cuts dem letters off agin'.'"

The Origin of Whist.

THE following statement, culled from the current number of a magazine, is an egregious blunder:

"The originator of the game of whist is (sic) Edmond Hoyle (1672-1769)." Cotton writing in 1674 tells us that Whist was so well known at that time that "every Child almost of Eight Years old, hath a Competent Knowledge of the recreation." Hoyle was then not two years of age. But we must go a great deal farther back for the origin of the game, which is indeed lost in the obscurity of the centuries. Previous to 1526 the game of Triumph (whence trump), which embraced the essential features of Whist, had considerable vogue in England. It furnished Bishop Latimer with an illustration for a sermon preached at Christmas, 1529. Shakespeare's familiarity with the game is evident from Antony's address to Eros ("Antony and Cleopatra," Act IV., Scene XIV.)

The game acquired the name of Whist, or Whisk, in the forepart of the seventeenth century. Butler uses the present appellation in Hudibras (1663).

About 1728 a little circle of players, presided over by the then Lord Folkestone, was wont to meet in the Crown Coffee House. This was the inception of scientific Whist. Hoyle was probably a member of the coterie in question.

The publication of his treatise (1742-3) and his efforts as a professional teacher did much to establish the game in the favor of the upper classes of English society.

"What do yo[illegible] think of th[illegible] movement for shorter ho[illegible]" I asked my fellow-traveler, an experienced gentleman from Chicago. "That's right," he declared, without a pause. "Short honeymoons and more of them. That's my platform."—Ex.

Curious Bit of News.

Dr. G. L. Johnson, whose studies of the eyes of mammals have recently been published, calls attention to the fact that men and monkeys alone possess parallel and convergent vision of the two eyes. On the other hand, the lower mammals possess divergent and consequently very widely extended vision. Squirrels, for instance, and probably hares and rabbits as well, are able to see an enemy approaching directly from behind without turning the head.

Mutable Beauty.

THERE are fashions in beauty, just as there are in clothes and bills of fare.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell is said to have amazed her audiences in the United States with her extreme slimness. Never had the American stage seen such a sylph-like form or such long, thin arms. Mrs. Campbell impressed me in a similar manner when I saw her in London, writes Geraldine Bonner. The play was "Pelleas and Melisande," and she wore a dress of stiff gold material that fell straight from her neck to her feet, and in which she resembled nothing so much as an umbrella in its case. Fragile is not the word for her. Yet she is none of those ugly things that are indifferently described as "scraggy" or "bony." She is lithe as a willow wand, and, in evening dress, shows one of those delicate, white necks, boneless and smooth, though it appears not to have an ounce of fat on it, which are one of the great beauties of Englishwomen. She is one of those picturesque and interesting people that fat would completely destroy. Now, with her curveless, boneless figure, her cloudy, sensitive, black hair that comes nearly to her knees, her small, thin face, lit by a pair of midnight eyes, she is altogether thrilling and harmonious.

Her type of beauty is particularly interesting, as it is a good example of the type now in vogue in England. There was a time when Mrs. Langtry was the perfect British beauty. Then the ideal was broad-shouldered, small-waisted, bright-haired, blue-eyed. The Jersey Lily was as famous for her complexion of lilies and roses as for her shoulders, that looked as if carved out of ivory, and from which her throat rose, proud and round as a Greek column. All the world recognized her as the typically handsome Englishwoman, the flawless example of a class that had long been famous in many countries for many generations, and that seemed to Balzac so peerless that the phrase, "beautiful as an Englishwoman," was the highest encomium he had to give. This type, during the Langtry regime, was constantly repeated. All good-looking English girls bore a sort of family resemblance to one another. The professional beauties were curiously alike—large, proud, calm-eyed creatures, smooth, reposeful, pink-and-white.

But the Langtry type has ceased to exist as far as fashionable London is concerned. It is now the era of the long, lean woman, with a prodigious length of limb, a mass of loosely-rolled hair, and a Rossetti throat, moving listlessly in pale, unbelted draperies. How such a change of appearance could be effected is miraculous. Where are the broad shoulders, the splendid neck, the muscular, nobly-molded figures of ten years back? Women can change the cut of their clothes at will, but how can they change the cut of their anatomies? And yet, they have done just this thing. Their shoulders have become narrow and slightly sloping, their throats more slender, their hips smaller, and their arms and legs elongated to an extent that suggests that bed, upon which the robber, Procrustes, used to stretch his victims until their toes touched the foot-board.

Philosophical observers say that the change is due to the influence of Burne-Jones, Rossetti and Du Maurier. Each of these artists created a type which the nation eventually accepted as beautiful, and upon which all the women of the nation modeled themselves. It was some time before the people were educated up to the cult of the "long line," the low forehead, the deep hair and the square jaw. But in the end it conquered them, and began to impress itself on the national face and form. I was reading a novel the other day in which the extreme thinness of the women of fashion in London was remarked. "They keep so by will power," a young man replied. And this really seems to be the solution of the problem. Will power not only keeps them thin, but has changed their bony structures, the shape of their heads, the character of their hair, and the length of their limbs.

Burne-Jones and Du Maurier are undoubtedly responsible for the vogue of this languid and lissome sylph. It was Oscar Wilde who professed to have made the discovery that, instead of Art imitating Nature Nature imitates Art. One of the proofs of his theory was the way the girls of England were growing like the girls of Burne-Jones, who had really more or less invented a new type of beauty. Never until Burne-Jones painted "The Golden Stairs" and "Venus's Mirror," did one see in England those pale, dreamy faces, with the thick, cloudy hair growing low on the wide brow, the innocent gray eyes, set very far apart, the square, slightly prominent jaw, the long neck, upon which the head drooped languidly. Nature had assimilated a new idea, and was reproducing it.

How can there be any question that fashions in beauty alter feature and figure? The ideal of the early Victorian era is as extinct as the dodo. Those houris, whose faces adorned the Books of Beauty our grandmothers delighted in, are gone into the limbo of the unknown with their tiny, Cupid's-bow mouths, their wide-opened, blue eyes, their drooping, silky ringlets, and their champagne-bottle shoulders. They were the ideal of their day—the ideal Bulwer had before his mental vision when he wrote "My Novel" and "The Caxtons;" that Thackeray saw when he created Rosie Mackenzie and Amelia; that Dickens tried to make us understand and love in Agnes Wickfield and Bella Wilfer. They look to us now "insipid as the queen upon a card."

Good If True.

"Do you know why our Chinese women have small feet?" asked Charlie York. "It is so that they will stay at home. We don't like our wives to gad about the streets. We don't like strange men to stare at them. For though these men may say nothing unpleasant, yet they are apt to look our women deep in the eyes, and a Chinaman holds that in an interchange of such looks there is something harmful. Therefore the tiny, maimed feet, which will not admit of walking without fatigue and pain. At first, thousands of years ago, women knew why their feet were maimed and they were angry. Then they forgot the reason of the custom and they regarded it as a fashion they had themselves created. So they look upon it now, and the smaller their feet the prouder they are. We, their husbands, chuckle and say nothing. For we are wiser than you European and American men."

"The Book Booster."

A VACANT niche in contemporary periodical literature, says the "Literary Digest," is filled by the "Book Booster," which is edited by "Mr. Criticus Flub-Dubbe," and published by "Josh, Gosh & Co.," in Evanston, Ill. Its purpose, as it is careful to inform the reader on its first page, is to "boost books—our own and others," with the distinction that "the books published by Josh, Gosh & Co. will be boosted without reference to the number of pounds sold, while the publications of other houses will be boosted only when they have passed the dead line, which is fifty thousand pounds."

The book boosted in this particular issue is "Faggots of Empire," by Miss Bertha Bosh. "Miss Bosh," we are told from the "Editor's Rocking Chair," "is only fifteen years old, but is extremely bright for her age. She is a Chicago girl, and has never traveled farther than Oconomowoc, which makes her literary feat all the more remarkable. For 'Faggots of Empire' is a story of the reign of Charlemagne, and the author betrays a singular acquaintance with the local color of those times." Indeed, her narrative "contains more facts than the histories." Moreover:

"The cloth used in binding the first edition would, if stretched end to end, reach from Chicago to Evanston. Placed side by side the pages would reach from Chicago to Minneapolis. Smeared thinly, the ink used would cover four townships. Ten million cockroaches could subsist for six months on the binder's paste employed. Set up side by side, the individual letters in the text would reach from San Francisco to the Hawaiian Islands. And the hot air employed in boosting the book would float ten thousand balloons."

Another interesting literary announcement is made to the effect that "Josh, Gosh & Co. have been appointed Western selling agents for the forthcoming book of Mr. Ernest Thompson-Seton (formerly Seton-Thompson), which is to be titled 'Cheap Thompsons I Have Known.'" The "Book Booster" is replete with touching poems and thrilling serials, and "The Stovepipe of Navarre," a blood-curdling "Romance of Sword and Cloak," by Miss Posta Pants, quite puts in the shade all current literary efforts along the same line.

What Did the Fakir Do?

WONDERFUL stories are told of the powers of the Hindu fakirs. Careful attention to their tricks has not discovered their secret with any certainty, but Captain James Parker, the English traveler, who has just returned from a tour of India, gives it as his belief that hypnotism is the means by which they accomplish their most startling illusions. One incident which he describes seems to bear out his view.

The trick which is acknowledged to be the greatest of these Hindu mystic performances, says Captain Parker, and the one that has been described by trustworthy persons too often to be doubted, is the one in which the fakir throws a ball of twine into the air above him, until it disappears from sight. The loose end of the string he holds in his hand, and after the boy assistant has climbed up the string until he, too, is out of sight, the fakir himself follows, with a knife between his teeth.

The spectators, surprised when both boy and man climb out of sight, are horrified when the boy's severed head, arms and legs, followed by the trunk, fall to the ground, and the man slides down close behind. Their astonishment is increased when the fakir gathers the severed members and restores the boy to life.

Well, I saw this performance once, and once I didn't see it; and the latter experience was more wonderful than the other. I had some London friends visiting me, and after having left them for a few minutes on the veranda of my bungalow, I saw, as I was returning, the same fakir and his assistant, whom I had seen perform the trick, standing about forty feet in front of my friends, apparently preparing to begin a performance. As I was about as far behind the natives as my friends were in front of them, and had not been observed, I stood quietly where I was.

The man placed a drawn knife between his teeth, took the usual ball of twine in his right hand, made a motion as if throwing it into the air, and then stood perfectly quiet. My friends on the veranda were looking into the upper air with astonishment on their faces, which in a minute turned to a look of horror as their eyes came back to the ground. In another minute their countenances lighted up with pleasure, and they applauded roundly.

They could not say enough about the wonderful performance they had seen, and they were astonished beyond measure when I told them I had been as near the fakir as they, and had seen nothing of what had so wonderfully impressed them.

If that was not hypnotism, what was it?

The Irreverent Phonograph.

THE Prince of Wales tells a good story of how a morning service was spoiled on the second Sunday's voyage of the "Ophir." There being every prospect of a dull afternoon, the Duchess of York suggested something appropriate from the phonograph, and the instrument was put through a rehearsal on the Sunday morning during the time of service. The cabin in which the preparations were made was two decks below the upper deck, but there was an uptake which carried sound as well as vitiated air, and so the following dialogue occurred:

Chaplain (giving out his text)—The way of transgressors is hard.

Phonograph (musically)—And you've got a long way to go.

It took twenty minutes to find the phonograph, which persisted in its unconscious brawling, and by that time the congregation was neither large nor spiritually minded.

Ordinary Tears.

Old Gentleman — Why do you shed such bitter tears, my boy? Boston Child (pausing in his grief)—Really, I cannot conceive that my tears differ as to their brackish quality from other lachrymose emissions. I have never heard of saccharine tears.—Philadelphia "Press."

A Great Whispering Gallery.

With the increase of cable, telegraph and telephone communication, and especially with the introduction of the marvels of wireless telegraphy, the world has been converted into a huge whispering gallery.—"Herald," Sydney.

Artist—I guess I'll make it a half-tone. Model—Which shall I put on—my ball dress or my bathing suit?—"Town Topics."

Finding the Right Doctor.

"THERE was a poor woman, whose son was dreadfully ill, and she wanted to get him a doctor; but somehow, instead of going for the doctor, she fell asleep, and dreamt that her son was ill, and that she was going for the doctor. She went first (in her dream) to the house of the first physician in the town, but, when she arrived, the door was crowded with a number of pale beings, who were congregating around it and calling out to those within. So the woman asked them what they were, and they said, 'We are the spirits of those who have been killed by the treatment of this doctor, and we are come to make him our reproaches.' So the woman was horrified, and hurried away to the house of another doctor, but there she found even more souls than before; and at each house she went to there were more and more souls who complained of the doctors who had killed them. At last she came to the house of a very poor little doctor, who lived in a cottage in a very narrow, dirty street, and there were only two souls lamenting. 'Ah!' she said, 'this is the doctor for me; for, while the others have killed so many, this good man in all the course of his experience has only sent two souls out of the world.' So she went in and said, 'Sir, I have come to you because of your experience, because of your great and just reputation, to ask you to heal my son.' As she talked of his great reputation the doctor looked rather surprised, and at last he said, 'Well, madam, it is very flattering, but it is odd that you should have heard so much of me, for I have only been a doctor a week.' Ah! then you may imagine what the horror of the woman was—he had only been a doctor a week, and yet he had killed two persons! . . . So she awoke, and she did not go for a doctor at all, and her son got perfectly well."—From "The Story of My Life," by Augustus J. C. Hare.

Building for The Ages.

TO illustrate the slow and painful evolution of social progress, Olive Schreiner, in a recent article, uses the figure of cathedral-building. She says:

"He who to-day looks at some great Gothic cathedral in its final form seems to be looking at that which might have been the dream of some single soul of genius, who, waking in the morning, found the dream a reality. But in truth its origin was far otherwise. Ages elapsed from the time the first rough stone was laid as a foundation till the last spire and pinnacle were shaped, and the hand which laid the foundation-stone was never the same as that which set the last stone upon the coping. Generations succeeded one another, laboring at gargoyle, rose-window and shaft, and died, leaving the work to others; the first master-builder who drew up the first rough outline passed away and was succeeded by others, and the details of the work as completed bore but faint resemblance to the work as he devised it; no man fully understood all that others had done or were doing, but each labored in his place, and the work as completed had unity; it expressed not the desire and necessity of one mind, but of the unknown human spirit. And not less essential to the existence of the building was the labor of the humble workman who passed his life in carving gargoyles and shaping a few rose-windows, than that of the loftiest master-builder who drew the general outlines. And it was heroic; for the master-builder who, though it were but vaguely, had some image of what the whole work would be when the last stone was laid upon the coping and the last spire raised, it was easy to labor with devotion and zeal—though well he might know that the placing of that last stone and the raising of that last spire would not be his, and that the building in its full beauty and strength he should never see. But for the journeyman laborer who carried on his stones, and month by month toiled, carving at his own little gargoyle or shaping the traceries in his little oriel window, without any vision of what the whole would be when completed, it was not so easy; nevertheless, it was through the conscientious labors of such alone, through their heaps of chipped and spoiled stones, their half failures and almost blind successes, that at the last the pile could be reared in its strength and beauty."

Vaccination de Rigueur.

THE epidemic of smallpox in London, England, has, it seems, given rise to a curious innovation. Invitations are sent out for tea, on which it is stated there will be—not dancing, but vaccination. The sterner sex is represented by a doctor; tea is served at four o'clock, and at five vaccination begins. Whether this be true or not, they went one better in France a few years ago. There was an outbreak of smallpox in Paris, and a leader of fashion was struck with the idea of getting all her friends vaccinated. She issued invitations to a ball, which ended in a superb cotillion. She informed her guests that the latter would contain an entirely new figure. It did. The men had to submit to vaccination on the arm; the women on the calf of the leg. This is how it was carried out: After a "tour-de-valse," each man brought his partner to the doctor. She gracefully raised her skirt; there was a little cry on the part of the patient, another "tour-de-valse," and she was re-conducted to her place. The men had to take off their coats and display a corner of their biceps. From this it will be seen that England has not the monopoly of eccentric ideas.

An Embarrassing Honor.

The obsequiousness of those who hope to advance themselves by being exceedingly polite to their superiors in office sometimes assumes an amusing aspect.

A certain head of a government department was invited, says a daily paper, to dine with others at a table with a cabinet minister. During the dinner the former, who happened to be placed between a door and a window, and had said nothing at all, began to sneeze.

"Are you taking cold, Mr. Brown?" asked the cabinet minister.

"I believe I have that honor and pleasure," answered Mr. Brown, bowing very respectfully.

Talking Dogs.

GOOD evidence of the power of communication among our speechless friends is given in the following very human story told by a writer in the Boston "Herald:"

"The fact that dogs have a way of communicating news to one another was demonstrated to me in a very singular and amusing fashion about four years ago. It was in South Georgia, where as yet little provision is made for the comfort of domestic animals. One of these bitter nights, such as a cold wave often brings, I heard at our front door the unmistakable sounds of scratching and whining, and found upon opening two of my little neighborhood friends, a pug and a little terrier, asking admission. In the face of the cruel cold it was granted them, and they were made welcome to share the comfortable quarters of my own two dogs. In the morning they took their departure; but how great was my astonishment to see them return the following cold evening, this time accompanied by a large Irish setter, who likewise wagged admission to the warm quarters of which he seemed to have knowledge. If there were any doubts as to whether these hospitable night lodgings were discussed among the shelterless dogs of the neighborhood, the doubts were removed on the third night, when my three tramps returned, their number still further increased by another pug and an old pointer. The mute but eloquent language of their wagging tails, the humble appeal in their sincere eyes were at once amusing and pathetic. With my own two pets and these five tramps I had now seven dogs stretched out comfortably before my dining-room grate; but their irreproachable behavior and their many ingratiating ways had insured for them a welcome at our house as long as the cold wave lasted, which was nearly a week. As soon as the cold subsided they returned no more."

Are You an Appendicitter?

THE question that men in Kalamazoo ask each other is not, "Are you a Buffalo?" but, "Are you an Appendicitter?" The interrogatory is intended to elicit information as to whether the person addressed is a member in good standing of the Kalamazoo "Appendicitis Club." A person who has had his vermiform appendix removed, of course, is not presumed to be eligible to membership in this club. As medical and surgical science has never been able to discover any use for the vermiform appendix in man's anatomy, it is popularly understood that it was placed there principally for the benefit of the doctors. Many a poor but deserving young physician gets his start in practice by removing a man's vermiform appendix, and then removing a good portion of the man's estate afterward. The appendicitters in Kalamazoo, however, have played a sharp turn on the mercenary doctors. Too many of them wanted to get rich out of this "fifth wheel of man's anatomy." They have worked a corner in the appendicitis crop. Seven hundred persons have formed an organization to protect their collective vermiform appendices from the knives of mercenary surgeons, who desire to carve their way to fame and fortune in one short hour. The doctor who breaks into this vermiform combine—this community of intestinal interests—will have to accept the tariff of the association. There will be no more fancy fees for cutting out the vermiform appendix in Kalamazoo. The poor as well as the rich can have appendicitis in the famous celery town. Doctors and nurses will be paid reasonable fees from the funds of the club. The Kalamazoo idea is a good one, and likely to spread.

Why the Czar Wears a Beard.

COMMENTING on the statement by a foreign correspondent that the Czar of Russia wears a full beard because he is afraid to have himself shaved, the Chicago "Record-Herald" says: "He fears that he might get into a Nihilist barber's chair some morning, and—swick! The rest may be imagined. Therefore, to avoid the danger of having his throat cut by one of his loving subjects, his Imperial Majesty is compelled to go through life with a beard, which he has trimmed as seldom as possible, because he is inclined to shy away from shears as well as from razors. It is said that the royal whiskers never are trimmed, save in the presence of four tried and true grand masters of the court, who stand ready to pounce upon the barber and eat him up if he dares to make a suspicious move. Moreover, in order to further increase the safety of his most exalted Majesty, the office of royal barber has been made hereditary in the family of Guelabovski—a name which in itself might be regarded by some people with misgivings. But the Guelabovskis are said to be very loyal, and, of course, being ennobled for their services as trimmers of the imperial whiskers, it isn't likely that they will deliberately cause trouble by using dull shears or nipping the skin appertaining to the royal Adam's apple. Yet the Czar mourns because all his children are girls. Foolish, short-sighted Czar! He should consider the advantage they have in being members of the gentler sex. They will never have faces to shave or whiskers to trim. Being a man is no snap—if one belongs to the Russian royal family."

Fewer Candidates for the Ministry.

THAT there is foundation for the alarm recently sounded in the religious press over a dearth of candidates for the ministry is evidenced by the annual catalogue of Princeton Theological Seminary, just out, which shows that that institution has twenty-three students less than it had last year. It is stated in this connection by "Leslie's Weekly" that in 1896 there were 1,500 students in the Presbyterian seminaries of the United States, whereas there are now about 900, a falling off of more than one-third. Other denominations are complaining of a similar lack of recruits for the ministry. It is said that the seminary authorities at Princeton ascribe the falling off in candidates largely to the opening of the new possessions of the United States, which seem to appeal to the business instincts of the American youth. This may have something to do with the case, but we fear, says the "Weekly," there are other reasons larger and of more serious significance in their bearing on the future of the Church.

A school inspector, having a few minutes to spare after examining the school, put a few questions to the lower form boys on the common objects in the schoolroom.

"What is the use of that map?" he asked, pointing to one stretched across the corner of the room; and half a dozen shrill voices answered, in measured articulation:

"It's to hide the teacher's bicycle, sir!"—"Sketch."

Strangers' Tea

The young men who have come to Peterborough during the past month were entertained to tea last evening at the Y.M.C.A., by the Strangers Fellowship Club. Fifteen strangers were present, and fully appreciated the manner in which they are made to feel at home in the town, and in the Association. Mr. John Manning, president of the club, presided, and Mr. B. F. Ackerman, president of the association, was also present. The supper was provided by the George street church committee of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Mesdames Nugent, Mason Whiten, Shortly and Geffries.

NEW ARMOURIES TO BE BUILT

A Fine New Structure to be Erected Here—Plans Prepared

For some years the officers of the local regiments have tried to induce the government to build a new drill shed in town, as the present one is altogether out of date.

Word has been received in town that a sum to defray the cost of the building will be brought down in the supplementary estimates, at the present session of the house.

One of the strongest arguments used by the deputation was the fact that Peterborough possesses detachments of all three branches of the service, Cavalry, Artillery and Infantry. The new armouries will cost about $40,000.

THE HAND OF DEATH

Mrs. W. H. Gordon Called Away Yesterday Morning

The home of Mr. W. H. Gordon, 186 London street, was stricken with sorrow yesterday morning, when the wife and mother was claimed a victim by death, after an illness of four or five weeks. Her death was due to a complication of diseases, and a break up of the system. Toward the latter part of her illness, deceased suffered much pain, but through it all maintained a marked christian cheerfulness, and when the time came to go, she was eager to depart, to be with Christ, which is far better.

Mrs. Gordon was a member of St Paul's congregation, and the funeral services will be conducted by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Torrance. A family of two girls and one boy, aged respectively 4, 7 and 14 years, are left to feel the lack of a kind and loving mother's care. To the sorrowing ones we extend our sincere sympathy in this their hour of trial.

The funeral will take place from the family residence to-morrow afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, to the Little Lake Cemetery

A SUDDEN DEATH

Miss Thompson, of Ashburnham Passes Away at Nichols Hospital

After an illness lasting about a week, Miss L. Constance Thompson, second daughter of Rev. C. L. Thompson, Ashburnham, passed away at the Nichols Hospital yesterday afternoon. A week ago she was in her usual health, in the zenith of life, and her sudden cutting off is an especially severe affliction to the family. Typhoid in a severe form developed, and yesterday she was taken to the hospital, shortly afterward peritonitis set in, and caused her death yesterday.

Deceased was of a very bright and cheerful disposition, and a favorite with the circle in which she moved. She took a special interest in the work of Mark street church, and in this way also her loss will be felt most keenly.

The funeral will take place from the parsonage, Ashburnham, to-morrow afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

To the sorrowing relatives is extended the public sympathy. May the God of the afflicted be their support in their great and sudden bereavement.

LABOR MEETING

On Friday Night Was a Record Breaker—Seventy New Members

The regular weekly meeting of Peterborough Union 9240, American Federation of Labor, was held in their hall on Friday evening. A very large number were present.

The meeting opened sharp on time and after being called to order by the President the usual business was taken up, after which new applicants, to the number of seventy, were initiated into the union.

A discussion relating to the recent strike at the Cereal Works arose, and Mr. Scott was warmly praised for the courteous and gentlemanly manner in which he settled the difficulty between the contractor and employees.

A resolution of condolence was passed to the bereaved mother and relatives of the late J. Frederick Perrin, who met death at the Cereal Works on Monday last.

The union is rapidly increasing in numbers and now has a membership of nearly nine hundred.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY

Sermon in George St. Church by the Pastor, Rev. Wilson

Every available seat was filled in George Street Methodist church yesterday morning, when the pastor, Rev. S. P. Wilson, preached. It was the anniversary of the Sabbath school and the sermon was of a nature suitable to the event.

The Scripture lesson was found in 1 Samuel 3, and Mark 10:13.

The pastor opened his address by a feeling comment on the destinies which were being mapped out by the teachers of the boys and girls of the Sunday school. His text was taken from 1 Chron. 11:22. "Also he went down and slew a lion in a pit, on a snowy day."

We usually think of a lion as a wild, ferocious animal, the "king of beasts." The lions we have seen have been mostly tame ones, because they are confined in cages. But we are told that lions are in reality cowards for though they may be heard to roar and howl until the earth quakes, on a dark and stormy night, they will skulk and hide away on a bright, calm night. After relating in simple style a number of lion tales from Bible history and mythology, Mr. Wilson drew a lesson for the children on the lions with which they would have to battle. God, he said, has a mighty army, but too many of them are off on furlough, or in the hospitals. Every difficulty, our evil thoughts and deeds, is a lion, which we must overcome, or fall before him.

On the spot in Rome where Christians were sacrificed to lions for their faith, there now stands a huge cross to mark their loyalty to Christ.

By appropriate illustrations, he impressed upon the mind the greatest "lions" in the path, evil temper, selfishness, untruthfulness and disobedience. Dr. Johnston, the great English scholar, was the son of a man who used to sell books from a stall on the market. On one occasion the old gentleman was sick and Samuel, the son, was so full of pride that he refused to take his place for a day in the book stall. Fifty years afterward in the zenith of his career, this incident so weighed upon him that he went to the spot, where once had stood the old book-seller, and with bared head stood for an hour in a pouring rain storm, to atone, as he said, for his act of disobedience. At Mr. Wilson's request, the whole school, who occupied the body of the church, repeated the fifth commandment.

The offertory was devoted to the Sunday school fund.

The music was peculiarly fitted to the occasion; during the service the choir and school sang "Marching Onward in the Name of Jesus," and Master Mowatt sang as an offertory solo "The Holy City," in clear and perfect harmony.

In the evening, the pastor took his text from 1 Cor. 13—11, preaching from the words "When I was a Child."

In this Epistle, written by Paul at Ephesus, the knowledge we possess here, and that which will be ours in heaven were compared to the relative position in which the child stands to the man. "Now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face." He looks back probably on his own boyhood days in Silecia, helping his father make tents, or in the schools of his native town of Tarsus. But the feelings of the boy are different from those of the man.

Tennyson tells us that "A boy's will is the wind's will, and the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts." Whittier said, "The hills are dearest where our feet have earliest climbed, and the streams most sweet where our young lips drank." Goldsmith gives us a beautiful pen picture of the broken soldier shouldering his crutch and telling how fields were won. Elizabeth Allan penned those beautiful lines, "Backward turn backward, oh time, in thy flight, make me a child again, just for to-night!"

Memory is the most valuable gift of God to man. In it are treasured up the events of our whole life, and we should be very careful that the early impressions made on the minds of the children should be of a pure and Godly trend. Without it we could not read, sing, imagine, travel, and life would be scarcely worth living. It is not, either, a mere impression on the cerebral portion of the brain, but we believe the centre is spiritual. Scientists tell us there is an entire cellular change in our bodies every seven years, yet the memory of what has been, remains with us. The whole of a man's life is said to pass in a clear panorama when drowning, and Hugh Miller says we may read on the rocks the history of the world. So we believe nothing which falls on memory is ever lost, though it may remain dormant.

The speaker had listened to the tale of Waterloo from an old veteran of 90 who fought under Napoleon Bonaparte, and though his memory of recent events was very imperfect, his recollection of the battle of so many years ago was most distinct.

If our thoughts in youth are corrupted, we must suffer afterward. We shall call from memory's portals angels to guard us or demons to curse.

Christ said "suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." There is no greater work than this of training the children, and though the result may be imperceptible, the lesson can never be erased.

The mother cannot tell which of her words or lesson is going to lead her ling into the ways of pleasantness, but she sows the seed; and if we sow the seed in sowing time we will reap in reaping time, for there is a God in heaven and a God on earth. The memory of a pious father or mother acts as a charm to resist temptation, for when a man thinks of them he is ashamed to do anything mean. It was memories of his father's home that drew the prodigal to repent and brought him to himself.

A young officer in the Soudan was commissioned by Lord Woolsley to lead the army through a very dangerous piece of country; he led them successfully, but was himself shot. He called the General to him, and on being praised for his skill and daring, said he had guided them by a star. So is the memory of a pious home the guiding star to us through life's trials.

When a boy, Prof. Roberts, of Robert's College, was shown a book of vile pictures, and when he was advanced in life he said he would give a great deal to have the memory of that one incident blotted from his mind. The boy or girl has not a fair chance in life who looks back upon a home without God; and though there be furniture, carpets and pictures, if there be no God or Christ or prayer, the memories of that home can not be of the most pleasant character.

A young man who had run away from home, but who had meantime found Christ, anxiously hurried from a large steamer in New York harbour. Running up the steps of a brown stone front he met his mother in the doorway, and said "mother, I knew you would pray me home."

Let our homes be fragrant with peace and love and righteousness. A German worked eight years on the face of Christ and so full of kindness and sorrow was his work that they wept who gazed on it. He was asked to try his hand on Venus, but he said he could not turn to a heathen goddess after gazing eight years on the face of Christ.

During the service the choir sang the 23rd Psalm, and a male quartette, "Some Blessed Day," was most acceptably rendered.

CHURCH NOTES

—Rev. Mr. McMillan, of Lindsay, will deliver a lecture in St. Andrew's church, next Thursday evening, on his travels in Scotland. The proceeds of the evening will be devoted to the Home Mission Fund.

—The official board of George st. church will meet on Wednesday evening.

—The Sunday school anniversary of George street church, will be held this evening at 8 o'clock. A splendid program of solos, choruses, dialogues and a Garland Drill have been prepared, and the musical portion will be supplemented by Gligson's orchestra of 16 pieces. Sabbath school children will occupy a specially erected platform. Admission, 10 cents.

At St. Paul's church yesterday morning, the pastor, Rev. Dr. Torrance, preached from Hebrews 6:11, "And we desire that every one of you shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end." Messrs. Moin, Dawson, Milne and Crain sang a quartette in an appreciable manner. In the evening the pulpit was ably filled by Mr. Yule.

—The Provincial Prohibition convention will be held in Toronto to-morrow, and a special railway rate has been secured. Return fare tickets will be issued by both railroads to visitors and delegates at fare and one-third, and should there be an attendance of 300 or over at the convention, the return rate will be single fare. All who have been appointed delegates should make it a point to be in attendance, or have a substitute in their place.

—In Charlotte St. yesterday morning, Rev. J. Bastow, M.A., preached from the words "Pray Without Ceasing," 1 Thessalonians 5; 17. The evening service was taken by the pastor, Rev. D. O. Crossley.

—Rev. Crossley preached in Murray St. Baptist church yesterday morning, and in the evening the pulpit was occupied by the pastor, Rev. J. Bastow.

At St. John's church yesterday holy communion was dispensed at 8.30 a.m. Morning prayer at 11 and evening services at 7 p.m.—were conducted by the Rector, Rev. J. C. Davidson.

At St. Luke's church holy communion was dispensed at 8.30 a.m. Morning prayer at 11 a.m.; evening service at 7 p.m. The sermon at the morning service was taken from "The Tears of Sorrow," and at the evening service, "Sunday Sins." The Rector, Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, occupied the pulpit, and delivered very earnest addresses. A very large congregation was present.

At All Saints' church, there were two services, morning prayer at 11, and evening service at 7. Rev. W. L. Armitage occupied the pulpit, and continued the lenten addresses. His subject in the morning was "The Church of and the Epistle to the Galatians." In the evening he took as his subject "Behold Thy Mother." The services were very largely attended.

At St. Peter's cathedral, three masses were celebrated; at eight o'clock, nine o'clock, and half-past ten. Vespers and evening service at 7 p.m.

FLAGS AT HALF MAST

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—What is the origin of the custom of half-masting flags as a sign of mourning. J. A. H.

Ans.—It would seem almost as if the custom came by elimination. The flag at full-mast or staff is a sign of rejoicing or a mark of honor; the flag hauled down, inverted, is a mark of defeat. Somewhere between top and bottom of the staff must be the place where the flag is to be placed in sign of mourning.

AN OLD SONG ASKED FOR Lily Dale

Editor Morning Times

'Twas a calm, still night, when the moon's pale light
Shone o'er hill and dale,
When friends mute with grief stood around the death bed
Of my poor, lost Lily Dale.

Chorus—
Oh, Lily, sweet Lily, Dear Lily Dale;
Now the wild rose blooms o'er the little green grave
'Neath the trees in the flowery vale.

Her cheeks that once glowed with the ruddy tints of health,
By the hand of disease had turned pale;
And the death damp stood on the fair
white brow
Of my poor, lost Lily Dale.

Go, she said, to the land of rest,
But ere my strength doth fail,
I will tell you where, near my own loved home
You must lay poor Lily Dale.

'Neath the chestnut tree, where the wild flowers bloom
And the stream ripples forth by the vale,
And the wild birds warble their notes in spring,
They laid poor Lily Dale.

A BABY'S PRAYER

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—As you ask for contributions to the "Letter Box" column in The Times, I take the liberty of enclosing the following lines which speak for themselves.

"Now I lay me down to s'eep"—
Lisped my darling, kneeling
On my lap her blue eyes deep
Me with rapture filling.

"P'ay the Lord my soul to teep"—
Baby's eyes were closing;
I breathed a prayer to God to keep
My little one reposing.

"If I s'ould die before I wate"—
Dear Lord, I thought, forefend it—
"I p'ay the Lord my soul to tate."
The little head was bended.

The curley locks fell o'er my breast
The curls too bright for sorrow—
"And, Lord, I has fordot the rest;
I'll 'member it tomorrow."

Alas, the morrow did not come,
God took what he had given,
And angels bore my baby home,
To say the rest in heaven.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.50 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil seepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

Business Chances

THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY—$2.00 per month for 10 months will buy 1,000 shares in a well equipped working gold mine, situated in one of the best districts in Colorado, and is surrounded by producing mines. Our proposition will stand the most rigid investigation. Write at once for particulars; bank references. The Beanie Investment Co., 11 & 16 Nevada Bldg., Denver, Colo.

CHAMBERLAIN DECLINES THE MAORI REGIMENT

Premier Seddon Criticises Britain's Determination to Exclude Black Men

CECIL RHODES HEADS A PEACE MOVEMENT

Loyalist Members of the Cape Parliament will Ask for an Indemnity Act and Other Measures

London, Feb. 24.—A despatch to The Times from Wellington, N.Z., says that Premier Seddon has received a cable from Hon. Joseph Chamberlain declining the offer of a Maori regiment for South Africa. Mr. Seddon declares that he does not agree with the British Government's rash promise to employ only whites in the Boer war.

PEACE MOVEMENT IN AFRICA.

London, Feb. 24.—A despatch to The Times from Cape Town says that a peace movement has been inaugurated by Loyalist members of the Cape Parliament, headed by Cecil Rhodes, to induce the Imperial Government to procure an indemnity act and measures conducive to peace in South Africa.

KING ALLOTS MISS ROOSEVELT A PLACE.

London, Feb. 24.—A despatch to the European edition of the Herald says that King Edward has allotted Miss Roosevelt a place with the Ambassadors' wives in Westminster Abbey to witness the Coronation ceremony.

MISS SHAW TO MARRY LUGARD.

London, Feb. 24.—The Times announces that Flora Shaw, head of its colonial department, and its correspondent in the Yukon, is to marry Sir Frederick Lugard, the High Commissioner of Northern Nigeria.

GERMANS SCORE IN CHINA.

London, Feb. 24.—A despatch to The Times, from Pekin, says that Prince Ching, head of the Chinese Foreign Office, has been prevailed upon to consent to an agreement, allowing Germany the exclusive mining rights in the Shantung Province. The royalty for China is to be seven instead of five per cent. The agreement is not yet signed, Germany is very active. She has established a post-office in the capital city of Shantung.

GREAT BRITAIN APPEARS SOMEWHAT UNEASY.

Alarmist Views of the Alliance with Japan--Will a Continuance of Russian Occupation of Manchuria be Held to be a Violation of Integrity of China?

London, Feb. 25—The Anglo-Japanese alliance continues to absorb the attention of Europe. Despite the pacific assurances of Parliament this great new factor in world politics causes some uneasiness, if not apprehension, which has found its expression in the depression of consols.

This feeling is emphasized by Lord Lansdowne's statement that Manchuria is to be regarded as a part of China under the terms of the treaty. Some alarmists argue therefore, that it is within Japan's power at any moment to undertake to drive Russia from Manchuria and to compel Great Britain to take part in the controversy by including France in the quarrel.

The Spectator, which strongly condemns the treaty, is quite panicky on this point, saying: "If the continuance of the Russian occupation of Manchuria is held to constitute a viola-tion of the integrity of China, then we are indeed plunged into a whirlpool."

The Times uses this sinister language: "We can stand by Japan in the far east without any thought of the Japanese interests in other quarters, for none such in practice exist. This would not be the case if, as our German neighbors insinuate, who should be the last to taunt us on that score, we had desired to secure a continental sword which we might have obtained if we had been willing to trust Japan."

This, however, is only another illustration of the bitter, almost fanatical animosity, now prevailing in both England and Germany against each other. The more closely the far eastern situation is examined in the light of the new conditions the less probable it seems that Russia will permit herself to be involved in a conflict over the immediate consummation of any of her designs.

It is Japan, whose new importance, unknown ambitions and western civilization, still an experiment, are all elements of uncertainty, that is the cause of some uneasiness among the conservative diplomatists. It can only be said that her discretion and self-restraint in some recent crises have been superior to those of her European associates.

Supposed Corpse was Full of Life

New York, Feb. 24. — Found frozen in a snowdrift and apparently dead after Friday's storm William Ferry, a farmer, near Anthony, N.Y., lay for ten hours on the cooling boards of an undertaker's shop, surrounded by coffins and the paraphernalia of death. But for the absence of the undertaker he might have been buried alive.

Ferry was found lying in the snow. The body was cold, and the supposed corpse was taken to an undertaking establishment. Half a dozen neighbors gathered to watch over the body. The absence of the undertaker prevented further action. When he arrived the party gathered in another room. Upon their return to the cooling room they were horrified to find the supposed corpse missing.

"Body-snatchers" was their first thought. An alarm was sent out, and a messenger hurried to Ferry's home. When he arrived Ferry was disposing of a hearty meal. He said he suddenly became conscious, and observing his surroundings fled through a side door, and hurried home.

WATER SUPPLY FAILING

Many Farmers in the Country Have Difficulty in Getting a Supply of Water

Owing to the severe cold weather during the present winter many wells in the country are almost dry, and as a result some farmers are having considerable trouble in getting sufficient water for their stock. A number of well-known farmers are obliged to drive their cattle to creeks and even to the river, while others are obliged to draw water a distance of three or four miles. This means a lot of very hard work when it is considered the amount of water required each day for thirty cows and horses and the same number of sheep and hogs. A good thaw at the present time would be very acceptable to these parties.

Drugging Will Not Cure Catarrh

This loathsome disease is caused by germs that invade the air passages of the head, throat and lungs, and can be cured only by inhalation of medicated air. Stomach medicines, atomizers and snuffs are ineffectual, because it is inhaled to every part of the breathing organs, and has power to kill the germ, heals the inflamed tissues and prevents droppings in the throat. Catarrhozone treats more than one thousand square feet of the mucous surface with every breath taken through the inhaler, and affords instant relief. It perfectly cures catarrh, asthma and bronchitis. Sold by druggists. Two months' treatment, price $1.00. Small size 25c., or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

CARLISTS FEARED

More Trouble in Barcelona—Strikers Driven Away by the Troops

London, Feb. 24.—No one should be surprised at the desperate so-called labor riots in Spain, for they were predicted here months ago. The information then made public was obtained in Anarchist quarters in London, a fact which among others proves that this bad business in Barcelona and elsewhere is not the outcome of genuine industrial discontent, but is an organized revolutionary movement.

Nobody doubts the capacity of the Spanish Government to suppress the revolt. The only fear is that the Carlists may take advantage of the present unhappy situation, and this dread is the explanation of the decision to call out the army reserves.

The Carlist leaders in France have lately been very active, but Don Carlos himself, when last heard of, was displaying about as much actively and enterprise as a tortoise. He was then in Venice, after paying a visit to his sick son at Nice. There are still thousands of honest Spanish peasants ready to take up arms for Don Carlos, but this degenerate son of kings has strong objections to incurring any personal risks, even when a crown is dangling before his nose.

FRENCH EX-AMBASSADOR'S VIEW.

A former French Ambassador in Madrid, who well understands the significance of the present revolutionary attempt, says:—"These troubles cannot be attributed to Catalanism, still less to Carlism. I am convinced that the real instigators are Socialists allied with Anarchists, and I am certain that when the list of wounded is drawn up, not a few Italian-sounding names will be found in it.

"If the Government shows energy there is no fear of the insurrectionary movement spreading to other provinces, but Senor Sagasta is perhaps not the man for the situation. With such a man as Weyler the riots would soon be put down. It is to be hoped, however, that his intervention may not be necessary."

FIRED ON THE POWER HOUSE

Madrid, via Hendaye, Feb. 24. — The situation in Barcelona is beginning to look better. In other parts of the disturbed area there is some improvement. Anselmo Lorenzo, the director of an Anarchist journal, and Miguel Mitra, secretary of the Anarchist Club, have been arrested. Documents containing lists of all known active European Anarchists have been seized.

The captain-general has ordered the newspapers to resume publication, but the directors reply that the compositors refuse to work. The strikers poured a fusillade upon the electric powerhouse of the city, but the troops drove them off.

Transport for merchandise destined for Barcelona has been refused at Parthou, a seaport town in Gerona, on the Gulf of Lyons.

In the Chamber of Deputies yesterday Count Romanones, the Minister of Education, denied that twelve strikers were executed on Friday. Prime Minister Sagasta refused to discuss the situation until order was restored.

SITUATION IMPROVED.

London, Feb. 24. — A despatch to the Central News from Barcelona states that there is considerable improvement in the situation there. More tram cars are running, and the authorities hope that the strike will be ended tomorrow. The theatres will be reopened to-night. Some of the newspapers are expected to publish tomorrow.

WISHES TO RIDE ON AN ENGINE.

Prince Henry Makes a Peculiar Request at Baltimore

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 24.—The train which is bearing Prince Henry, of Prussia to the national capital, made an exceedingly slow run from Jersey City to Baltimore, but there was no desire to make time with it. The train left Jersey City at one o'clock, and it was arranged to so time its run that it would not reach Washington until after 10 o'clock this morning. The Prince retired shortly after the special began its journey across the State of New Jersey, and it was after 7 o'clock when he arose. He breakfasted at 8 o'clock in his private car Columbia. He said that he found himself very comfortable in his car and train, and thanked the President's delegates and the railway officers for the arrangements made for his transportation. He expressed a desire to ride in an engine at some time during the journey through the country, and it was arranged that he should do so somewhere in the mountains of Pennsylvania at the outset of his southern tour later this week.

There were no demonstrations during the night run of the train. The start was made so late that there were no crowds anywhere. In Maryland during the early hours of the morning small crowds gathered at the stations, but no stops were made.

STAY IN BALTIMORE.

The Prince's stay in Baltimore was necessarily very brief. The train arrived at 9 o'clock, and was met at the Union Station by the Mayor of Baltimore and an escort of twenty-four prominent citizens. Two hundred members of the various German singing societies were also admitted to the station, but none of the crowd which congregated in the streets were allowed to approach the special train. Prince Henry came out of his apartment in the rear of the long train and Mayor Hayes was presented to him as he stood upon the rear platform by Mr. Von Lingen, the German Consul at this point.

The Mayor then presented an engrossed copy of resolutions of welcome which have been adopted by the City Council, and the Prince, accepting it, replied suitably.

The chorus of singers then rendered several German patriotic national airs. After a stay of ten minutes the train pulled out amid the cheers of the crowd which lined the bridges over the tracks.

IN WASHINGTON.

Washington, Feb. 24.—Prince Henry arrived in Washington at 10.30 this morning. He was met by Secretaries Hay and Long, and Count Quadt, and two other attaches of the German Embassy. Ten minutes later he left for the White House.

PRO-BOER AGITATION IN UNITED STATES

Webster Davis Addresses an Immense Audience in Kansas City

RESOLUTIONS ARE ADOPTED

The Speaker Roasts the United States Government for not Interfering to Stop the War--But He Says Nothing About the Philippine Struggle.

Kansas City, Feb. 25—Thousands of people attended the pro-Boer meeting of the Jackson County Democratic Club last night. Webster Davis was the speaker of the evening and at times he aroused his hearers to a high pitch of enthusiasm. With the skill of a finished logician and orator he arraigned the British for their cruel campaign of annihilation in the Transvaal and criticised the government of this country for aiding them in their work of slaughter.

"The British press and the British sympathisers in our own country have told and published innumerable falsehoods about the Boers, and this has been done purposely in the hope of creating public sentiment in the United States in favor of the British. The intention has been to manufacture sympathy for the British cause in order that it may be known throughout the world that the people of the greatest republic in existence lend their moral support to Great Britain in their inhuman war against the Boers.

"These malignants and traducers have endeavored to make it appear that the laws of the two South African republics are oppressive, and that the Boers have abused the English in a shameful manner and that they have tried to prohibit the English language from being spoken within the borders of the two republics, and that the Boers had sjamboked many English residents to death before the beginning of the war; that they treated their prisoners with barbarity; these and many other atrocious lies have been told about the Boers.

"From the two little struggling republics in South Africa will come the mightier republic which shall take its place by the side of its sister republics in the great competitive race of nations. A republic wherein freedom and equal rights shall prevail and have a lasting abiding place. A republic wherein manhood reigns alone and every citizen is king. A republic with one people, one flag and one country. It is life, liberty and property and all personal rights shall be amply secured to all citizens and protected by just and stable laws, where public and private credit will be thoroughly established, and in all of its interests and concerns it will partake of the improvements and progress of the times. Then will the future historian on pages bedewed with generous tears tell of the heroic struggles of the men and women who founded that republic. They whose ancestors stood firm and courageous before the Spanish inquisition when they began their great struggle for freedom and right, and whose brave spirit was unbroken by the cruelties and hardships heaped on them by Louis XIV, and how after many years of trials and tribulations, the new republic of South Africa grew to be not a dream but an established fact.

"I do not believe that a more moral, generous hearted, God-fearing people live anywhere than the Boers. Physically they have no superiors. In honesty, temperance and frugality they are unsurpassed. It is true that they are somewhat stubborn, tenacious and jealous of their rights. Their love of liberty is as strong as that of our own revolutionary fathers and mothers, whose deeds of valor and suffering challenged the admiration of the world and made 'America' the symbol everywhere for freedom and equality of rights.

"Should the British by overwhelming numbers succeed in conquering the Boers in the present struggle it will avail nothing, for freedom crushed to earth will again arise and the Africander spirit will live on and on until finally success will crown their efforts. Future generations will take up the burden where their stricken fathers laid it down, and the final outcome is certain.

"The world's history is full of the records of the rise and fall of empires and kingdoms—of the dazzling pomp and splendor of the march of kings and queens, who hated liberty and justice, but who loved tyranny and oppression, who went down into oblivion and to-day the antiquarian digs and delves amid the ruins of their capitols to find some token of remembrance worthy of transmission to succeeding generations. But in all nations wherein the altars of liberty were erected the fires glowed thereon as beacon lights along the pathway of the centuries to guide liberty-loving people back to the lines whereon their fathers stood when they reddened them with the crimson tide of their lives.

"When Frederick the Great seized a province loosely attached to the Austrian empire all the monarchies of Europe were shocked. And yet at that time those monarchies had never heard of the principles of the French revolution. If that was true then, how could it be possible now, in this glorious morning of the twentieth century, for democratic Americans to have any feeling but that of the deepest indignation for an attempt to destroy the lives and liberties of the brave people of two of its sister republics? The great masses of our people do sympathize with the Boers to-day. They stand for liberty, for civilization, for self-government and for peace."

Cheers greeted the closing of Mr. Davis peroration and then resolutions extending sympathy to the Boers, denouncing the British and expressing the hope that our own government intervene were adopted.

The closing paragraphs of the resolutions read:

"We extend the right hand of fellowship to Governor Yates of Illinois and commend him 'for calling on the liberty-loving people of his great state to give aid and comfort to a noble people who are being compelled to fight to sustain the second republic in the world.

"We recommend to Governor Dockery that he give the 'Equal Rights' people of our state the opportunity to express their feelings and aid in any manner they see proper, their fellow men, who are struggling and dying to save their homes and form of self-government.

"We hope that President Roosevelt may see his way clear to offer—as we have ever done in the past—the sympathy of the United States for any people having intelligence and energy enough to fight and die for independence.

"We bow our heads in reverence and hold in sacred memory the true patriotic American, who, that others may live in liberty and independence, dies in a foreign land, fighting, for JUSTICE AND FREEDOM."

WRECKED BY INCENDIARIES

Six Explosions in Rapid Succession—Men Women and Children Hurled Out of Bed

Victor, Colo., Feb. 25.— Cripple Creek is in a state of terror owing to the preconcerted attack upon all the leading assay offices doing business in the district. Beginning at 3 o'clock this morning and following in rapid succession, six explosions wrecked as many assay offices in the centres ranging from Victor to Cripple Creek and up to Goldfield. In every instance the object sought by the incendiaries was accomplished by the destruction of the offices with their equipment and delicate balances.

The raiders did not hesitate to jeopardize life, as all but one of the buildings was occupied by sleeping families. As it was, men women and children were hurled out of their beds by the shocks, and serious injuries inflicted. The full extent of the damage cannot be estimated.

HEAVY LOSSES.

In this city the Davenport office was wrecked by two explosions, involving a loss of $1,200. Almost at the same time the assay offices of Vanderwalker, Morgan, and Williams were treated likewise. The loss was approximately as large as Davenport's. One man, a miner, was severely injured in the explosion at Williams' office. He was passing at the moment of the explosion. Flying debries struck him in the face, gashing his eyes, and may result in total blindness. In Cripple Creek Benjamin's assay office, north of the Florence and Cripple Creek depot, was blown up.

In the Town of Goldfield, about a mile and a half north, almost simultaneously, Boyce's office and another assay establishment were wrecked. Boyce's family occupied an adjoining room, but escaped without fatal injuries. The general impression here this morning is that the explosions are the result of a general movement to rid the district of all high-grade ore purchasing institutions. Bloodhounds from Canon City have been called for.

Temperance Lecture

Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Spiritual Adviser of St Peter's T.A.S. visited Ennismore on Sunday and after celebrating mass in St Martin's church, he delivered a stirring temperance lecture to a very large congregation. A total abstinence society will be formed in Ennismore on Sunday next. The society will be affiliated with St. Peter's T.A.S.

Rev. Dr. O'Brien's address on Temperance, delivered here a short time ago will be issued in pamphlet form at an early date.

At the last meeting of St. Peter's T.A.S. fully twenty new members were initiated. There are nearly 1200 members in the different temperance societies connected with the Cathedral.

A number of improvements are being made in the rooms of the T.A.S which will be completed in a few days.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY

In George Street Church Last Night was a Great Success

The Sunday School rooms of the George street Methodist church was packed to the doors last night being the occasion of a grand musical festival. The chorus consisted of about 400 voices under the very able and efficient leadership of Mr. G. W. Mulligan who was assisted by Prof. Gilddens orchestra. A most pleasing programme of vocal and instrumental music was presented which brought forth the most hearty applause.

OBITUARY

Mr. John Delaney, an Old and Respected Citizen of Peterborough Passes Away

The death occurred on Sunday evening, at the family residence, corner of Brock and Rubidge streets, of Mr. John Delaney, at the age of 86 years, one of Peterborough's oldest and most highly respected citizens. Deceased had been in good health until Wednesday last, when he was stricken with paralysis, which carried him away very suddenly.

The late Mr. Delaney was a native of Tipperary, Ireland, and came to Canada, when a young man, settling in Peterborough. He has resided here ever since. After being engaged in business for many years, in which he was very successful, he retired about 25 years ago. He was married to Miss Ellen O'Donnell, a native of Ireland and a widow and a family of seven survive him. He had no other relatives in America, excepting a sister in the United States. Deceased never identified himself with any public office or society, but he was well known to a large circle of friends. He was a Roman Catholic in religion, and a Liberal in politics. He was genial, kind, and open-minded, and strongly discouraged bigotry, and a striking feature of his life was the large number of Protestant friends he won to his side.

The funeral will take place from his late residence to-morrow morning at nine o'clock, and proceed to the Roman Catholic cemetery for interment.

Fire Last Night

About 5.30 o'clock last night the fire brigade was called to a fire in Ashburnham. The fire was located in a house east of Calcutt's brewery and the flames got under control after a stubborn fight. The house was badly wrecked. The people living in it lost considerable of their furniture.

CORONER'S INQUEST ON DEATH OF J. F. PERRIN

ADJOURNED AGAIN TO MEET THIS EVENING.

Evidence of Many of the Witnesses in a Number of Instances of a Contradictory Nature

The Coroner's jury met again last evening in the Town Council chamber to further inquire into the cause of the death of J. F. Perrin. The jury answered to their names and the examination of witnesses proceeded.

John S. Perrin, sworn, said,—I am a brother of deceased, and was at work on the west side of the building, about 25 feet from deceased, when he fell. The noise of men yelling attracted my attention. I saw his feet and part of his legs when he fell. I went down and saw him lying on his back on the first floor from the ground. George Harmer was rubbing his head. He was lying about two feet from the well-hole when I saw him. His head was toward the east. He was removed to Nicholls Hospital, where he died at 6.30. The accident occurred about 4 o'clock. The body was afterwards removed to Comstock's undertaking establishment, and a post-mortem held there. I cannot tell how the accident occurred. I heard the signal-man and the engineer disputing about it, but I do not know whether the bell rang or not. I worked at the same work as my brother. The cable was attached to a beam about six feet above the floor of the cage. I do not know whether the beam disappeared first or not. I do not know why he should fall against a cable. It is not likely that he would touch. I do not whether he fell before the beam passed or not.

I knew of the cage going down before, when Fox was putting a barrow on it, but I do not know whether the bell rang or not. I also heard of the cage going down with Carr Deceased had been working upon the building about three or four weeks. Mr. Redfern never warned me personally of danger in the elevator going down, but I do not know whether he warned the others or not. I knew of the danger, but never told my brother or any other person, as I do not think it was my duty to warn others. I did not think it my duty to warn anyone nor to report the danger to anyone, as I was not there to do that. It was dangerous for the elevator to go down, and I think it neglect on their part that the accident occurred. The bell-man or the engineer neglected their duty, but I could not say which was to blame.

George Armour was next called, and being sworn, said,—I was working on the building, attending the hoist, when the accident happened. Deceased was taking off a barrow when the hoist dropped, and he fell. I ran down the ladder and saw deceased, who was lying on the lower floor, with his head about the width of two planks from the well-hole. He fell after the cross-beam of the hoist had passed the floor. The hoist dropped very suddenly, and the beam had time to pass before he fell over. I generally heard the bell ring I paid attention to the sound of the bell for my own part, and would warn others to be careful. I heard the bell ring, but, I do not know how many times. The signal-man was talking to some person down below. He can talk to others when the hoist is up. There are two well-holes. When one cage is down the other is up. Signal-man appeared to be talking to some one down below, as conversation was going on at the time Perrin fell. I walked about ten feet after hearing the bell before the hoist went down. I heard the bell ring, but I do not know if Redfern rang it or not. The bell-wire is at the south side of the south well-hole. Redfern usually talked down the well-hole nearest his post. I never worked on these hoists before. I have seen them in use, but I do not know whether there were locks or slips. Redfern would pull the wire up about two feet to ring the bell. I never saw him take the wire and move away to talk down the well-hole. I do not know how long the hoist was up. It can be seen from nearly any part of the building I do not know how long the barrow had been at the top when it was taken off the hoist. If possible a man is there to take the barrow from the hoist when it comes up. I do not know of any delay. Providing the men were there, there was time to change barrows at the top while the hoist was being loaded at the bottom. If they had it loaded below, the hoist could not drop as soon as it came up. The hoist has to stand at the top until the cage was loaded below. I expected Redfern would ring the bell, but I did not see him do it, nor did I speak to him about ringing it. I never told any person that Redfern rang the bell The bell rang distinctly, but as I have never examined it, I cannot say what rang it. It rings at times and no one knows the cause. That might have been so in this case. I saw the beam of the cage pass the floor before deceased fell. He might not have touched the cable. He fell lengthways of the hole where the cage comes up. Deceased threw out his hands, but he had no chance to recover his balance. He had one foot on the hoist, and the other on the floor when the cage dropped. He would fall over. The beam will pass in a person's length. The hoist descends quicker than a body will overbalance Perrin knew the hoist went down unexpectedly before. I warned the other men to be careful. Not one at a time, but in a body. Deceased would bear warning the same as the others In the suddenness of the fall he would not think of catching at the cable. As a rule, I put one foot on the hoist. The barrow could be taken off without stepping on the hoist. Sometimes we pushed the barrow off the hoist, and at other times backed off and pulled the barrow after us. The men usually pulled the barrow off by backing away from the hoist, but I do not know which way deceased was going to take his barrow off. It was rather dangerous to take the barrow off by walking over the hoist, but I have done so. I warned all the men at different times. I did not notice the position of the barrow on the cage, but a shovel was in the mortar. I do not know whether deceased struck the cage or not. He might have struck the cable. There is enough spring in the cable to throw a man back. I did not find fault with anybody or anything, and I did not warn Mr. Gaylor or anyone else in authority, although I did the others. There is no danger in crossing the cage when the link is in. If the link is reversed, the engine will move and the hoist will go down, but it is impossible for the hoist to move until this was done. I understand the engine is reversible, but I have never examined it. Standing on the hoist there would not be much danger in falling. The handles of the barrows had been shortened and with mitts on it was difficult to hold the handles. Signal man sometimes signalls to the cellar to tell men there what particular kind of brick or other material is wanted at the top. I do not know if deceased had hold of the handles or not. I have been working at the works since the accident, and have been taking chances by walking over the hoist until this morning. The barrow handles are all the one way. I was going to put the barrow in the north hoist, the same one deceased was going to take his barrow off.

Wm. Redfern, recalled, said,—I do not hold the handle in my hand at all times. The well-hole next to the bell wire was open when the accident occurred. I never hold the bell wire when I move around to speak to others. Just before the accident, I was talking down the well hole, but I did not pull the string. I was talking down the south well hole when the cage came up on the other side. I spoke down before deceased came to the hoist. I was talking to the men who were putting barrows on hoist. I did not know who it was at that time. I generally give three bells to draw the attention of the men below to speak to them. One bell is the signal to lower the cage. I did not hear the bell ring at the time Armour was coming to the hoist. There would be about four feet slack in the wire from bottom to top. I would not move away from the hoist and still hold the bell wire. Sometimes the hoist runs faster than others. It is kept busy, never being idle more than two or three minutes. Perrin was not at the hoist when I signalled below. When deceased came to the hoist I was talking to Geo. Carr. When the hoist dropped, I called out. The hoist did not move when I rang to speak to the men The engineer may mistake the first call signal and start the engine, but the hoist did not move when the signal bell was given.

Charles Adams, recalled said,—Do not reverse link every time hoist is raised. Reverse link when we are running fast, if foot was taken off lever there would require considerable weight on top cage to lower it as machinery has to be moved. When engine is stopped, steam is shut off and after a short time it releases. The machine is held by a brake Cannot say whether I heard call signal or not before I heard bell to lower. When at my post I answer signal at once unless lower cage is not loaded. Could not mistake call signal for my own signal Boy is small and might not remember hearing bell. While making some repairs to machine he has called my attention to signal to raise hoist. We were running faster than usual at the time and I was paying particular attention to everything on that account.

James Gaylord sworn said,—I am employed as foreman on the new Cereal works. Know working of hoist and engine. Leave the working of the hoist to the engineer. Did not put up hoist. Carpenters did that. Have examined hoist every day to see it was in good working order. Do not know whether I examined it the afternoon of the accident or not. When I saw it next day the cage was part way down with a barrow of mortar and shovel on it. Hoist was above temporary floor. It was about to the second floor. Barrow was about the same as when it was put on. Examined bell and found it working all right. Did not examine wire but it rang bell from any floor. Could ring bell from any floor by catching wire. Was on third floor, descending, the incline when accident happened. Heard crash and saw brother of deceased coming down incline.

Bell is in basement. Wire extends through first floor and up to top of building. Bell wire is near hoist-support and is protected. Wire is not encased in any way. There was no one on ground floor when accident happened. There was no one working on the different floors. [illegible] Do not think men's lives depended on the wire. No person would want to walk across the beams. There is no one working there that I know of. Engineer takes care of engine and hoist. Have not heard any complaints about working of hoist. Bell is working all right. I superintend the construction. I have not contract. Am in service of Cereal Co. Did not build hoist. Had something to do in superintending the carpenter work. Mr. Langfords men put up hoist. I did not consider the matter of having a catch put at each floor. Did not think it necessary to put an attachment on floor to hold cage. Engineer can do that. The engineer can hold hoist at any floor. There generally is not any lock to hold hoist at any flat. Have had about 27 years experience in Toronto, Hamilton and other places. Have been employed in constructing hoists. This hoist bell and all the attachments are in perfect working order. Had cable broken when

WHY BRITAIN IS HATED

The average Little Englander is politically near-sighted. When alien nations exhibit dislike and hatred of Great Britain, they say: "Some of these statesmen of ours must have been saying something to annoy our neighbors. That man Chamberlain has been indiscreet again. The other day when these continental gentlemen were calling us murderers and butchers of women and children, pig-dogs, swine and other such epithets, besides libelling our soldiers in an unheard-of manner, Chamberlain had the bad taste to offend them by saying that he was not taking back talk from kindergarten nations like Germany and that our soldiers did not commit such outrages on the inhabitants as did the Germans in France in 1870. The result of these tactless remarks has been to arouse the personal animosity of the people. Chamberlain should be less brusque." On the other hand this is how Max Nordau, who is not politically short-sighted, explains the hatred of England in Europe: "The result of five hundred years of English history is the mastery of the seas, the possession of the greatest colonial empire the world has ever seen, the astonishing expansion of the Anglo-Saxon race, and the resentful hatred of the nations from whom England has once or oftener had to exact respect for the English flag, or whom she has had to drive from the sea or various shores."

John Bull should have learned by this time that nothing succeeds like success in making these successful people dislike you.

Of Interest To Hay Fever Sufferers

Physicians generally recommend a change of climate for the relief of hay fever, where such weeds and flowers as ragweed and honeysuckle are not indigenous, as these and many other flowers and grasses aggravate the disease. Many localities have been recommended, such as mountainous regions and the sea coast, but generally at these resorts a great deal depends upon the vagaries of the wind, and results are not always satisfactory, as if the wind should blow off shore, as it frequently does, there is no relief.

In Muskoka and among the 30,000 islands of the Georgian Bay conditions are different. It is of no consequence which way the wind blows. The preponderance of water area to land surface; the curative odors of balsam and pine, together with the elevation of a thousand feet above the sea, renders hay fever an impossible condition in these districts. Handsome illustrated booklet entitled "Hay Fever: How to Avoid and Cure," may be had free by applying to M. C. Dickson, District Passenger Agent, Toronto.

New Zealand has sent 5,000 men to the South African war. If Canada had been equally represented our quota would have been 35,000 instead of 3,500.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

Letters from the People on Interesting and Timely Topics.

(A Poem Asked For.)

Do you wish the world were better?
 Let me tell you what to do."
Set a watch upon your actions,
 Keep them always straight and true.
Rid your mind of selfish motives,
 Let your thoughts be clean and high.
You can make a little Eden
 Of the sphere you occupy.

Do you wish the world were wiser?
 Well, suppose you make a start
By accumulating wisdom
 In the scrap book of your heart.
Do not waste one page on folly;
 Live to learn and learn to live.
If you want to give men knowledge,
 You must get it ere you give.

Do you wish the world were happy?
 Then remember day by day
Just to scatter seeds of kindness
 As you pass along the way.
For the pleasure of the many
 May be ofttimes traced to one
As the hand that plants the acorn
 Shelters armies from the sun.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Dr. Varnadoe, a noted professor of Greek, is very fond of flowers, and some days ago, on returning from his college duties, he found in his front yard a pestiferous calf belonging to a neighbor. The doctor gave chase, and the animal plunged toward the flower-pit, and in another instant crashed through the glass cover and mixed at random with the pots and plants below. When another professor passed a few minutes later, he said, gravely: "I do not understand, Dr. Varnadoe, why you should object so seriously to having a modest cowslip added to your fine collection of plants." The doctor's frowning face relaxed. "Ah, Sanborn," he retorted, "you see, this was only a [illegible]."

The Snakes' Paradise.

The Borongo Islands lie about halfway between Calcutta and Rangoon. When the snakes die they go to the Borongos. That is their paradise; there they hold high carnival. I spent three years among them, and know of these things. From the giant python down to the deadly karait they are all there, all the ophidians. Even the salt water snakes, that are all poisonous—they, too, are there. Two Europeans had preceded me on the Borongos, so there was considerable natural history on tap when I arrived, and we rapidly acquired more. One can't live among snakes without studying them; they insist upon it. . . .

Each evening I killed an hour or so of the monotony by walking up and down the path in front of the bungalow. A big cat was my usual companion. His method of introducing himself to my notice was generally abrupt. He would lie in wait, and, as I came along, spring out upon me, alighting against one of my legs. At other times he would lie on his back in the path and claw at my feet as I passed. One evening, just after turning into the path from the bungalow, I felt something soft and yielding against my foot. Thinking it was "Billy," I gave the mass a gentle push. As I shifted the something I saw a twisting gleam of white, not at all like the soft gray of Billy's fur. Of course I knew what that meant. Jumping back I brought my walking-stick down on the twisting thing, and yelled for a light. The servants came running from the cookhouse with a lantern, and I saw that I had laid out a most villainous dabeia. One touch from the catlike fangs on my cotton-hosed instep, and within an hour I would have been dead.

One of our party had occasion to visit a Mr. Savage, a half-caste landowner on the other side of the island. He went in a boat, and while the coolies were bringing up his traps went up to the bungalow. He was sitting in a big chair on the veranda, talking to Savage, when he felt something drop from the leaf roof on to his shoulder. Leisurely he started to rise to see what had fallen, when the other man cried out: "For God's sake don't move—keep perfectly still!" Dunlop knew what that meant. Stealthily the old man took a Burmese dah (sword) from the wall, and, catlike, crept toward the white man with the thing on his shoulder. Within striking distance he paused, and raised the dah high in the air to cut the thing in two with one swift downward stroke. Then his nerve, rattled and tugged at for sixty years until it was weak, failed him and the sword clattered from his numbed fingers to the floor. "My God—I can't do it," he whined in a broken voice, and reeled back against the wall where he stood staring with weak eyes at the sahib and his burden.

Dunlop neither moved nor spoke; his only safety lay in keeping perfectly still—motionless. It might be minutes or a thousand years; they would have to wait till the boatmen came. What would happen then he could not say. He could feel the clinging, pulling thing on his right shoulder. There was an undulating pressure that told him the head of the snake was swaying back and forth just above his neck. Then the song of the Madrassi boatmen as they came swinging along with his luggage broke upon his ear. Those gin-thickened voices, carolling the hoarse refrain to the time of the measured trot, were angel voices. What would the muddle-brained coolies do, he wondered. If Emir Ally, his trusted servant, saw the thing, it might be well; he had nerve and judgment even close to that of a sahib. Emir Ally was in the lead. When he came to the steps Savage jerked out an expression that called his attention to the tableau. Gathering his loongy tight about his loins, he slipped along the veranda like a shadow, grasped the fallen dah, and, poising his black lithe body for a swift, strong stroke, brought the sword through the air with a swishing cut that laid a full-grown cobra in two neat pieces almost at the feet of the man who had waited.—W. Stories of the Bar.

An able Southern lawyer, still living, has a good story about his examination by Reverdy Johnson, one of the greatest lawyers of the last century, says the Philadelphia "Times." Mr. Johnson knew the young man, but, apparently, he did not allow his familiarity to influence the case. He asked him one or two questions as easy as the alphabet or the multiplication table, and then very severely demanded:

"Young man, can you mix a good brandy julep?"

"I think I can, sir," was the reply.

"There," pointing to the sideboard, "are the ingredients, sir. Now, let me see what you can do."

The candidate approached and used his finest touch and sense of selection in compounding the tonic. Then, topping it off artistically with a fresh mint, he presented it to his examiner. Mr. Johnson gave the case his best care and patience, and finally, when the bottom of the generous glass had been reached, he looked at the young man admiringly and announced that he had passed.

Another story is told of a judicial district in Florida where, before the era of railroads and owing to the numerous creeks and rivers, there had to be frequent fording of streams in order to make good time between the country towns. The candidate presented himself before the judge, who, after looking at the young man a few moments and taking in his measure, asked:

"Can you ride?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you own a horse?"

"Yes, sir."

"Can he swim?"

"Yes, sir."

Whereupon the judge bowed gravely and remarked:

"I am very glad, sir, to welcome you to the practice of law in my district."

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Life is Too Short!

An evening contemporary has been informing its readers that they can use the same calendars every twenty years—when the dates of the months fall on the same days of the week—thereby avoiding the expense of five almanacs for the present century. But here is something even better than that. Those persons who have the double advantage of ancient family and careful forefathers, by turning up the calendars—unfortunately, they are not printed ones—for the twelfth century, by Solomon Jarchus, will find the days and dates coincident with the present century. Such persons can save the expense of buying for one hundred years. Again, those with a frugal mind who have preserved the almanacs of the nineteenth century will avoid an outlay for calendars of the century commencing January 1, 2301, as the dates for the hundred years following will be coincident with those of the last century. But life, remarks the London "Chronicle," is scarcely long enough for such economies.

Tommy's Poser.

A lady was recently reading to her young son the story of a little fellow whose father was taken ill and died, after which he set himself diligently to work to assist in supporting himself and his mother. When she had finished the story, she said:

"Now, Tommy, if pa were to die, wouldn't you work to keep mamma?"

"Why, no," said the little chap, not relishing the idea of work. "What for? Ain't we got a good house to live in?"

"Oh, yes, my dear," said the mother, "but we can't eat the house, you know."

"Well, ain't we got plenty of things in the pantry?" continued the young hopeful.

"Certainly, dear," replied the mother, "but they would not last long, and what then?"

"Well, ma," said the young incorrigible, after thinking a moment, "ain't there enough to last till you get another husband?"

Ma gave it up.

When the late President of the United States and party went west not many months before he was shot, Mrs. McKinley, it will be remembered, went too. While talking one day with Mr. Scott, the man who built the battleship "Oregon," relates a writer in the Boston "Journal," Mrs. McKinley said: "Oh, do you play cribbage, Mr. Scott?" "Yes," was the great shipbuilder's answer. "Well, so do I," said Mrs. McKinley. "I wish you would play a game with me." "I should be delighted to do so," was the reply. Later, as President McKinley and Mr. Scott were looking over the latter's big plant, Mrs. McKinley not being present, the President said: "Oh, by the way, Mr. Scott, didn't I hear you and Mrs. McKinley arranging to play cribbage some time?" "Yes," said Mr. Scott, "we are going to play." "Well, what kind of a player are you?" asked the President. "Oh, pretty fair, I guess; I play a pretty good game." "Well, so do I," said Mr. McKinley. "But, do you know, it may seem strange, but it is a fact, that I have never been able to play well enough to beat Mrs. McKinley." As he said this he looked at Mr. Scott with a significant smile. Their eyes met. It was enough. Mr. Scott understood, and it was safe to say that he did not beat Mrs. McKinley.

The Origin of Whist.

THE following statement, culled from the current number of a magazine, is an egregious blunder:

"The originator of the game of whist is (sic) Edmond Hoyle (1672-1769)." Cotton writing in 1674 tells us that Whist was so well known at that time that "every Child almost of Eight Years old, hath a Competent Knowledge of the recreation." Hoyle was then not two years of age. But we must go a great deal farther back for the origin of the game, which is indeed lost in the obscurity of the centuries. Previous to 1526 the game of Triumph (whence trump), which embraced the essential features of Whist, had considerable vogue in England. It furnished Bishop Latimer with an illustration for a sermon preached at Christmas, 1529. Shakespeare's familiarity with the game is evident from Antony's address to Eros ("Antony and Cleopatra," Act IV., Scene XIV.)

The game acquired the name of Whist, or Whisk, in the forepart of the seventeenth century. Butler uses the present appellation in Hudibras (1663).

About 1728 a little circle of players, presided over by the then Lord Folkestone, was wont to meet in the Crown Coffee House. This was the inception of scientific Whist. Hoyle was probably a member of the coterie in question.

The publication of his treatise (1742-3) and his efforts as a professional teacher did much to establish the game in the favor of the upper classes of English society.

"What do you think of the movement for shorter honeymoons?" I asked my fellow-traveler, an experienced gentleman from Chicago. "That's right," he declared, without a pause. "Short honeymoons and more of them. That's my platform."—Ex.

Stop the Pain but Destroy the Stomach.—This is sadly too often the case. So many nauseous nostrums purporting to cure, in the end do the patient immensely more harm than good. Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets are a purely vegetable pepsin preparation, as harmless as milk. One after eating prevents any disorder of the digestive organs. 60 in a box, 35 cents.—39

FATE.

It is very convenient to attribute the disasters which overtake us to fate. But for the most part man is the arbiter of his own fortunes. Business men are struck down suddenly as by lightning. The verdict is generally "heart failure." "His heart was weak. It was fate for him to meet this end." But if we went behind the "weak" heart we should find a "weak" stomach, probably, and back of the weak stomach is careless eating at irregular hours.

When the stomach is diseased the organs depending on the stomach for nutrition are starved. Starvation means weakness of the body and its organs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. When these organs are cured, diseases of heart, liver, lungs and kidneys, caused by the diseased stomach, are cured also.

"In the fall of 1897 I was taken with smothering spells, palpitation of the heart, and a distressed feeling in my stomach," writes Mr. H. W. Kinney, of Knight, Doddridge Co., West Va. "I consulted a doctor and he said I had organic heart trouble. He gave me some medicine, but it did me no good. I then tried different kinds of patent medicines, but they only helped me a little. I then sent and got five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Before the first bottle was gone I felt a change. When the five bottles were gone I began to work. I had not worked any for a year before.

"I am well and can eat anything now with the exception of pork and greasy food."

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure biliousness.

A Spider's Genius

"I HAVE considerable respect for the female spider, notwithstanding the fact that she does not treat the male very considerately," says a correspondent. "I had an opportunity last summer to watch a large one that had a web in the top of a decaying peach tree with so few leaves that it was in plain view. I caught sight of her first when watching some birds with my glass. She seemed to be climbing from the top of the tree on nothing to a telephone wire some fifteen feet away and somewhat higher than her web. When she reached the wire she went around it and then back. In studying the situation, I found the web was so located that it required a cable to hold it up and the spider had in some way got one over the wire so far away. This cable was, of course, a slender silken thread which evidently she had thrown out, and on account of its lightness it had floated to the right place and become attached there by its glutinous properties. It seems remarkable that it should have adhered to the wire firmly enough to allow so large an insect to climb over it, which she did every day as long as I watched her, evidently to mend or strengthen it. The spider must have brains in which the ability to construct its web and adapt it to conditions is highly developed."

In an article in "Chambers' Journal" the following account of how the spider forms its silken threads is given:

"One of the most interesting features in the economy of spiders is their power of emitting slender threads of a silk-like substance called gossamer, with which most of them construct mesh-like nets, and a few long, dangling cables, by which they are buoyed through the air with nearly as much facility as though they had been furnished with wings. The apparatus provided by nature for elaborating and emitting this gossamer is a beautiful piece of mechanism. Within the animal there are several little bags or vesicles of a gummy matter; and these vesicles are connected with a circular orifice situated at the abdomen. Within this orifice are five little teats or spinnerets, through which the gossamer is drawn. It must not be concluded, however, that there is only one film of gossamer produced by each spinneret; the fact is, these teats are studded with thousands of minute tubes too small for the naked eye to perceive, and each of these emits a thread of inconceivable fineness. These minute tubes are known as spinnerules, and the films which proceed from them unite like so many strands of a rope to form the thread of gossamer by which a spider suspends itself. The finest thread which human mechanism can produce is like a ship's cable compared with the delicate films which flow from the spinnerules of the largest spider. The films are all distinctly separate on coming from the spinneret, but unite, not by any twisting process, but merely by their own glutinous or gummy nature. Thus the spinning apparatus of the disdained spider, when viewed by the eye of science, becomes one of the most wonderful pieces of animated mechanism known to man. The animal has great command over this apparatus, and can apply it at will as long as the receptacle within are replenished with the gummy fluid, but as soon as this gum is exhausted all its efforts to spin are fruitless, and it must wait till nature, by her inscrutable chemistry, has secreted it from the food which is devoured."—"Waverley Magazine."

Wealth's Milestones.

"Spring has came," mused Mr. Gotrichkwick, as he stood before the window with his hands thrust deep into his pockets.

"Aw, now, how kind you tell, pap?" gurgled his diamond-bedecked daughter.

"Because——," said the father, as he clinked the coins in his pocket, "because the snow has went."

"Stop that noise, Jimmie, or we will send you to bed." "Pa, you don't act like I was your real child at all; you act like I was jes' somebody else's el orphan."

It is related that once, when a captain in the army was cornered by the enemy, he addressed his men as follows: "My men, fight like demons until your powder gives out, then run. I'm a little lame, I'll start now."

An English rector on coming into a new parish, asked the clerk if there were any Puseyites (followers of Dr. Pusey, a high churchman) in the community. "No, sir," replied the clerk; "there used to be some, but for the last two years the boys have took all their eggs."

Mark Twain was recently chaffing Sir Wemyss Reid on the vagaries of English pronunciation. "You spell a name B-e-a-u-c-h-a-m-p, and pronounce it Marchbanks," he said. "And you do precisely the same thing," replied Sir Wemyss. "What do you mean?" asked Mark Twain. "Well, you spell your name C-l-e-m-e-n-s, and you pronounce it 'Twain.'"

Anecdotal.

A certain wealthy benefactor of Harvard humorously complained of President Eliot's treatment. "He comes to me," he said, "for my money and my advice; and, like the women in the Scripture, the one is taken and the other left."

Nothing verbal could be much more delicious than Joseph H. Choate's definition of the dinners of the New England Society of New York as "Those gatherings of an unhappy company of pilgrims who meet annually at Delmonico's to drown the sorrows and sufferings of their ancestors in the flowing bowl, and to contemplate their own virtues in the mirror of history."

"That was an excellent discourse you delivered last Sunday," remarked a veteran minister of the gospel to a rising young preacher, "but I would hardly call it a sermon." "Why not, doctor?" demanded the other. "Because you had no text." "Don't you call such a discourse a sermon unless it has a text?" "Certainly not." "You have read the Sermon on the Mount, have you not?" "Many, many times." "Well, it has no text." "On the contrary, my dear young friend," said the veteran, "it is composed entirely of texts."

The speech in the House of Lords of the Bishop of Hereford on the subject of gambling recalls a story told of Bishop Potter, of New York. The bishop, traveling through Louisiana some years ago, addressed inquiries to his fellow-passengers with a view to obtaining information regarding the orchards and fruit interests of the State. "Do you raise pears in Louisiana?" inquired the bishop. "We do," replied the Louisianian, who was a better authority on poker than on horticulture, "if we have threes or better."

A woman, who is of high social distinction in America, was presented to the Kaiser at some dinner that was not attended with royal state. She was talking to him when she was offered a famous German salad. It was handed on her right and the Kaiser was on her left, which put her in a predicament. She did not dare turn her face from the emperor to help herself to the salad. The situation was too much for her. The emperor, seeing the condition at a glance, looked at her for an instant and laughed, as he said: "A Kaiser can wait, but a salad can not."

George Moore, the author and dramatist, once had a play accepted at the Odeon in Paris. At the same time an adaptation of "Othello" was being rehearsed there. One day Mr. Moore called to see the manager of the Odeon. The door-keeper did not know him, and asked for his name and business. "I am the English author whose play has been accepted here," said Mr. Moore; "I wish to see the manager." The door-keeper went into the manager's room and said: "There's an English gentleman at the door who says that you have just accepted his play, and wants to see you." "Quite right," said the manager; "show him in. M. Shakespeare, without doubt."

It is said that once, when the late Dr. Tanner, the Irish M.P., had asked in the House whether it was true that the Duke of Cambridge had resigned his position as commander-in-chief, a Major Jones of Penzance, was so outraged that he challenged Dr. Tanner to a duel, and the following telegraphic correspondence took place: "In reply to your despicable question about the Duke of Cambridge, I designate you a coward. Delighted to give you satisfaction across the water. Pistols." To which Dr. Tanner at once replied: "Wire received. Will meet you to-morrow in Constantinople, under the Tower of Galata, midnight. Being challenged, prefer torpedoes. Bring another ass.—Tanner."

A conjurer was performing before a rough-and-ready audience in one of the prohibition States of America (according to an English paper). "I am now about to undertake a feat," said he, "in which I shall need the use of a pint flask of whiskey." There was a dead silence. "Will some gentleman in the audience favor me with a pint of whiskey?" There was no response and the conjurer began to look blank. "Surely," he continued, "in a South-Eastern prohibition town I ought not to have to ask a second time for such a thing. I give my word I will return it intact. Is there no——" "Stranger," said a tall, gaunt man, as he rose slowly from a front seat "wouldn't a quart flask do as well?" "Why, certainly! I merely——" But before he could finish, the generous, open-handed audience had risen like one man, and were on their way to the platform in a body.

The Refinement of Irony.

Magistrate: "What is your name, prisoner?"

Prisoner: "John De-Jones."

Magistrate: "John D. Jones? H'm! What does the D stand for?"

Prisoner: "I beg your worship's pardon. I would have you to know I am not of the common Joneses. I come of very refined antecedents, and our family name is De-Jones—spelled with a D-e and a hyphen."

Magistrate: "I see. Have you ever been here before?"

Prisoner: "Yes, once. I was fined forty shillings through a mistake on the part of the police."

Magistrate: "Just so. Well, taking into account your antecedents, and seeing that you come of a refined family, you may now consider yourself re-fined—spelling with an r-e and a hyphen."—"Pick-me-up."

A Clerical Wit.

After a church conference held a few days ago, two brother ministers had a friendly tilt, regarding the meaning of a certain passage in one of Shakespeare's plays. They could not come to an understanding, and one of them remarked jokingly: "Oh, well, brother, I will ask Shakespeare when I meet him in heaven!" "But supposing Shakespeare did not get to heaven?" retorted the other. "Then you can ask him about it," was the quick reply.

The Pessimist—Frailty, thy name is woman!

The Cynic—Yes, woman is invariably weak.—Brooklyn "Eagle."

A recently published story of the late Lord Morris, Chief Justice of Ireland, illustrates his scorn of red tape and petty details. A question had arisen as to the cost of heating the Irish law courts, and a consequential treasury official was sent over from London to Dublin on purpose to investigate the matter. When he introduced himself and explained his errand, Lord Morris smiled with suspicious blandness and said: "Certainly, I will put you in communication with the person immediately in charge of that department." Then he sent out a messenger, and presently there entered an old charwoman. Lord Morris arose and left the room, saying as he did so: "Mary, here is the young man to see about the coal."

Curious Bits of News.

Scotland has 6,500 university students. England, with six times the population, has 6,000.

It is now 121 years since Diomed won the first Derby, but when we come to look at the newspaper reports of the time we find that the race was dismissed in two or three lines, and any further details had to be gathered as best they could.

The highest telegraph poles in the United States have just been erected in Beaumont, Tex. So far as known they are the highest in the world, their tops being 150 feet from the ground. They carry a Western Union cable across the Neches River—a span 144 feet in length.

The pheasant, everybody knows, is a non-aquatic bird; therefore Professor Lloyd Morgan's observation that newly hatched birds of the age of thirty hours swim easily, show apt leg movements and exhibit few signs of distress, is of singular interest. Is this swimming habit a throw back or reversion to an antecedent state in the history of this land-living species, or is it to be regarded as an example of a direct and sudden adaptation to a new environment? Doubtless Professor Lloyd Morgan will debate this question at length. It certainly has an important bearing on certain obvious biological problems.

A discovery of great interest to antiquaries was made recently by workmen engaged in excavating one of the two reservoirs now being constructed for the East London Waterworks Company along the course of the Lea. On a bed of sandy silts in the "Lockwood" Reservoir, a "dug-out" boat or canoe was brought to light. In the north-eastern corner of the reservoir also, were found, five feet below the surface and between twenty and thirty feet to the west of the original bed of the river, the remains of a supposed Viking ship, clinker-built of oak, about fifty feet in length. The planks are fastened with iron nails.

It has been found that certain prawns, common along the coasts of England, change their color at least twice every 24 hours in order to harmonise with the stronger or weaker light prevailing near the surface or in the deeper water. As evening approaches these fish lose their distinctive day colors, and all assume a transparent azure hue. The change begins with a reddish glow, followed by a green tinge which gradually melts into blue. The day and night change has become so habitual that specimens kept in perpetual light or perpetual darkness nevertheless undergo the periodic alteration of color.

The British and Foreign Tract Society have translated Bunyan's "Pilgrim Progress" into no less than ninety-five different languages and dialects. Some of these, as might have been anticipated, are of a jaw-breaking character. So much so, indeed, have the compositors of the Oxford University Press found the Esquimau language to be that they have demanded a higher rate of payment in regard to it. The following samples of this beautiful tongue show that their action is reasonable: "Kujalidlarpogut ovanetsungnarlaurapta." "Rauvengitisarmaritsainarnagnargigallioaruptaloaet. Kujalijutiksakaakatsainarailoarpoguelle."

A traveller for a diamond house was talking shop the other evening, and, speaking of gems, said: "The most overworked expression used by the unsophisticated and deeply impressed diamond purchaser is, 'It actually looks as if it glows of itself.' Now, it is not generally known that such is actually the case, although not, of course, in the way the public intends. The beauty of the gem in light is, of course, in its remarkable refractive power, but under certain conditions the diamond has more, for it may gleam even in the night with a pale but extremely beautiful light. In short, it becomes phosphorescent. Heated to a certain temperature the internal fire shows itself, and under pressure the same is true. Some years ago I went to Amsterdam to purchase some special stones for a California millionaire who had ordered them through our New York house, and while there I was shown the inside workings of the famous diamond cutting establishments of that city. Of all that I saw, however, the 'self flame' of the stones under pressure most surprised me. The manager placed a large rose cut gem between the jaws of a vise and carefully applied a certain amount of pressure. He then extinguished all the light in the shop, and as soon as my eyes had become accustomed to the darkness I saw the diamond emitting a soft radiance of its own like a very pale glowworm. As I remember it, he said that the yellower diamonds were slightly more phosphorescent than the first water stones. By the way, you would be really astonished to know the number of jewels which also possess 'self flame' to a more or less extent, and I have often wondered if the alchemists who performed such apparently well authenticated wonders in the Middle Ages did not know something of phosphorescence and its oddities."

The newest floral wonder is the "Shasta daisy," originated by a flower-grower of California. It measures a foot in circumference, and, when one was exhibited recently in a florist's window in San Francisco, people literally flocked to see it. It is really a new kind of flower, and has been produced by several years of crossing and selection, three different kinds of daisies being used—the common American species, the larger and coarser European sort, and the Japanese daisy. There are three rows of petals of the purest white, and each blossom is upheld by a single strong and wiry stem which is nearly two feet long.

Three Photographs.

"PHOTOGRAPH all the prisoners? But why?" demanded Sir Felix Felix-Williams.

Old Canon Kempe shrugged his shoulders. Admiral Trewbody turned the pages of the Home Secretary's letter. They sat at the baize-covered table in the magistrates' room—the last of the visiting justices who met under the old regime, to receive the Governor's report and look after the welfare of the prisoners in Tregarrick county jail.

"But why, in the name of common sense?" Sir Felix persisted.

"I suppose," hazarded the Admiral, "it helps the police in identifying criminals."

"But the letter says 'all the prisoners?' You don't seriously tell me that anyone wants a photograph to identify Poacher Tresize, whom I've committed a score of times if I've committed him once? And perhaps you'll explain to me this further demand for a 'Composite Photograph' of all the prisoners, male and female. A 'composite photograph'—have you ever seen one?"

"No," the Admiral mused, "but I see what the Home Office is driving at. Someone has been persuading them to test these new theories in criminology the doctors are so busy with, especially in Italy—"

"In Italy!" pish'd Sir Felix Felix-Williams.

"My dear Sir Felix, science has no nationality." The Admiral was a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, and kept a microscope to amuse his leisure.

"It has some proper limits, I should hope," Sir Felix retorted. It annoyed him—a chairman of Quarter Sessions for close upon twenty years—to be told that the science of criminology was yet in its infancy; and he glanced mischievously at the Canon, who might be supposed to have a professional quarrel with scientific men. But the Canon was a wary fighter, and no waster of powder or shot.

"Well, well," said he, "I don't see what harm it can do, or what good. If the Home Secretary wants his composite photograph, let him have it. The only question is, have we a photographer who knows how to make one? Or must we send the negatives up to Whitehall?"

So the visiting justices sent for the local photographer and consulted him. And he—being a clever fellow—declared it was easy enough, a mere question of care in superimposing the negatives. He had never actually made the experiment: his clients (so he called his customers) preferring to be photographed singly or in family groups. But he asked to be given a trial, and suggested (to be on the safe side) preparing two or three composite prints, between which the justices might choose at their next meeting.

This was resolved, and the resolution entered in the minutes; and next day the photographer set to work. Some of the prisoners resisted and 'made faces' in front of the camera, squinting and pulling the most horrible mouths. A female shoplifter sat under protest, because she was not allowed to send home for an evening gown. But the most consented obediently, and Jim Tresize even asked for a copy to take home to his wife.

The Admiral (who had married late in life) resided with his wife and young family in a neat villa just outside the town, where his hobby was to grow pelargoniums. The photographer passed the gate daily on his way to and from the prison, and was usually hailed and catechised on his progress.

His patience with the recalcitrant prisoners delighted the Admiral, who more than once assured his wife that Smithers was an intelligent fellow and quite an artist in his way. "I wonder how he manages it," said Mrs. Trewbody, "he told Baby last autumn that a little bird would fly out of the camera when he took off the cap, and everyone allows that the result is most lifelike. But I don't like the idea, and I think it may injure his trade."

The Admiral could not always follow his wife's reasoning. "What is it you dislike?" he asked.

"Well, it's not nice to think of one's self going into the same camera he has been using on those wretched prisoners. It's sentiment, I dare say; but I had the same feeling when he stuck up Harry's photograph in his showcase at the railway station, among all kinds of objectionable persons, and I requested him to remove it."

The Admiral laughed indulgently, being one of those men who find a charm, even of subtle flattery, in their wives' silliness.

"I agree with you" he said, "that it's not pleasant to be exposed to public gaze among a crowd of people one would never think of knowing. I don't suppose it would actually encourage familiarity, at the same time there's an air of promiscuity about it—I won't say disrespect—which, ahem, jars. But with the prisoners it's different—my attitude to them is scientific, if I may say so. I look upon them as a race apart, almost of another world, and as such I find them extremely interesting. The possibility of mixing with them on any terms of intimacy doesn't occur. I am aware, my dear," he wound up, graciously, "that you women seldom understand this mental detachment, being by nature unscientific and all the more charming for your prejudices."

At the next meeting of justices, Smithers the photographer presented himself and produced his prints with a curious air of diffidence.

"I have," he explained, "brought three for Your Worships' selection; and can honestly assure Your Worships that my pains have been endless. What puzzles me, however, is that although in all three the same portraits have been imposed, and in the same order, the results are surprisingly different. The cause of these differences I cannot detect, though I have gone over the process several times and step by step; but out of some two dozen experiments I may say that all the results answer pretty closely to one another of these three types." Mr. Smithers, who had spent much time in rehearsing this little speech, handed up photograph No. 1; and Sir Felix adjusted his spectacles.

"Villainous!" he exclaimed, recoiling. The Canon and the Admiral bent over it together.

"Most repulsive!" said the Admiral.

"Here indeed"—the Canon was more impressive—"here, indeed, is an object lesson in the effects of crime. Is it possible that to this, man's passions can degrade his divinely [illegible] of features? Were it not altogether too horrible I would have this picture framed and glazed and hung up in every cottage home in the land."

"My dear fellow," interrupted Sir Felix, "we cannot possibly let this monstrosity go up to Whitehall as representative of the inmates of Tregarrick jail! It would mean an enquiry on the spot. It would even reflect upon us. Ours is a decent county, as counties go, and I protest it shall not, with my consent, be injured by any such libel."

Mr. Smithers handed up photograph No. 2.

"This looks better," began Sir Felix, and with that he gave a slight start, and passed the photograph to the Canon. The Canon, too, started, and stole a quick glance at Sir Felix; their eyes met.

"It certainly is singular"—stammered Sir Felix. "I fancied—without irreverence—but you detected it too," he wound up incoherently.

"May I have a look?" The Admiral peered over the Canon's head; who, however, did not relinquish the photograph, but turned on Smithers with sudden severity.

"I presume, sir, this is not an audacious joke?"

"I assure Your Worship"—protested the photographer— "I had some thoughts of tearing it up, but thought it wouldn't be honest."

"You did rightly," the Canon answered; "but now that we have seen it, I have no such scruple." He tore the print across, and across again. "Even in this," he said, with a glance at the Admiral, who winced, "we may perhaps read a lesson, or at least a warning, that man's presumption in extending the bounds of his knowledge—or, as I should prefer to call it, his curiosity—may—er—bring him face to face with—"

But the Canon's speech tailed off as he regarded the torn pieces of cardboard in his hand. He felt that the others had been seriously perturbed and were not listening; he himself was conscious of a shock too serious for that glib emollient—usually so efficacious—the sound of his own voice. He perceived that it did not impose even on the photographer. An uncomfortable silence fell on the room.

Sir Felix was the first to recover. "Put it in the waste-paper basket; no, in the fire!" he commanded, and turned to Smithers. "Surely between these two extremes—"

"I was on the point of suggesting that Your Worships would find No. 3 more satisfactory," the photographer interrupted, forgetting his manner in his anxiety to restore these three gentlemen to their ease. His own discomfort was acute, and he over-acted as a man will who has unwillingly surprised a state secret, and wishes to assure everyone of his obtuseness.

Sir Felix studied No. 3. "This appears to me a very ordinary photograph. Without being positively displeasing, the face is one you might pass in the street any day, and forget."

"I hope it suggests no—no well-known features?" put in the Canon nervously.

"None at all, I think; but see for yourself. To me it seems—although hazy, of course—the kind of thing the Home Office might find helpful."

"It is less distinct than the others," said the Admiral, pulling his whiskers.

"And for that reason the more obviously composite—which is what we are required to furnish. No, indeed, I can find nothing amiss with it; and I think, gentlemen, if you are agreed, we will forward this print."

No. 3 was passed accordingly, the photographer withdrew, and the three justices turned to other business, which occupied them for a full two hours.

But, I pray you, mark the sequel.

Mr. Smithers, in his relief and delight at the magistrates' approbation, hurried home, fished out a copy of No. 3, exposed it proudly in his shop window, and went off to the Pack Horse Inn for a drink.

Less than an hour later Mrs. Trewbody, having packed her family into the jingle for their afternoon's ride with Miss Platt, the governess, strolled down into the town to do some light shopping; and, happening to pass the photographer's window, came to a standstill with a little gasp.

A moment later she entered the shop; and Mrs. Smithers, answering the shop bell, found that she had taken the photograph from the window and was examining it eagerly.

"This is quite a surprise, Mrs. Smithers. A capital photograph! May I ask how many copies my husband ordered?"

"I'm not aware, ma'am, that the Admiral has ordered any as yet, though I heard Smithers say only this morning as he hoped he'd be pleased with it."

"I think I can answer for that, although he is particular. But I happen to know he disapproves of these things being exposed in the window. I'll take this copy home with me, if I may. Has your husband printed any more?"

"Well, no, ma'am. There was one other copy; but Lady Felix-Williams happened to be passing just now, and spied it; and nothing would do but she must take it away with her."

"Lady Felix-Williams!" Mrs. Trewbody stiffened with sudden distrust. "Now what could Lady Felix-Williams want with this?"

"I'm sure I can't tell you, ma'am; but she was delighted. 'A capital likeness,' she said. 'I've never seen a photograph before that caught just that expression of his.'"

"I should very much like to know what she has to do with his expression," Mrs. Trewbody murmured to herself, between wonder and incipient alarm. But she concealed her feelings, good lady; and, having paid for her purchase, carried it home in her muff and stuck it upright against one of the Sevres candlesticks on her boudoir mantelshelf.

And there the Admiral discovered it three-quarters of an hour later. He came home wanting his tea; and, finding the boudoir empty, advanced to ring the bell. At that moment his eyes fell on Smithers' replica of the very photograph he had passed for forwarding to the Home Secretary. He picked it up, and gave vent to a long whistle.

"Now, how the dickens—"

His wife appeared in the doorway, with Harry, Dicky and Theophila clinging to her skirts, fresh from their ride and boisterous.

"My dear Emily, where in the world did you get hold of this?"

He held the photograph towards her at arm's length, and the children rushed forward to examine it.

"Papa! Papa!" they shouted together, capering round it. "Oh, mammy, isn't it him exactly?"

A school inspector, having a few minutes to spare after examining the school, put a few questions to the lower form boys on the common objects in the schoolroom.

"What is the use of that map?" he asked, pointing to one stretched across the corner of the room; and half a dozen shrill voices answered, in measured articulation:

"It's to hide the teacher's bicycle, sir!"—"[illegible]"

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

—The people in Lindsay are preparing to give a great welcome to Flavelle's Winnipeg rink. They will be met at the station by a large procession, and escorted to the Academy of Music, where addresses will be presented.

Large Owl Shot

Mr. Wm. Poulson last Friday shot a large mottled owl on the farm of Mr. George Webber, North Monaghan. Mr. Poulson, who is a crack shot, was only able to disable the bird, and had considerable trouble in despatching it. It measured four feet, eight and one-half inches from tip to tip. It is supposed to be the mate of the one captured by Mr. S. D. Carver some time ago, but is a great deal larger. Mr. Poulson intends to have it mounted.

The Cause of Nervous Headache

This most distressing and common malady doubtless had its origin in some unbalanced condition of the nervous system. Probably the simplest, safest and most efficient remedy is Polson's Nerviline. Twenty drops in sweetened water gives immediate relief, and this treatment should be supplemented by bathing the region of pain with Nerviline. To say it acts quickly fails to express the result. Sold everywhere in large 25c. bottles.

HAD HIS ARM AMPUTATED

Mr. Jas. Wood, jr. Had His Arm Taken Off on Sunday at the Hospital

Mr. Jas. Wood, jr., of Otonabee, met with a serious and painful accident a few days ago, and as a result, his right arm had to be amputated above the elbow.

The young man was engaged in cutting straw on a stack when it upset, and he was thrown to the ground, his right arm being badly lacerated by coming in contact with a hay-knife which he had been using. The patient is resting comfortably, and doing as well as can be expected.

ILLEGAL FISHING

An Omemee Man Heavily Fined at the Police Court Yesterday

Mr. Ed. Danny, of Omemee, appeared in the Police Court yesterday morning to answer to a charge of illegal fishing. A few days ago he offered fish for sale in town, and the authorities hearing of it at once searched for the guilty party and as a result he was fined thirty dollars and costs, amounting in all to thirty-six dollars.

It is alleged Danny did his illegal fishing near Cowan's bridge on Pigeon Creek. That is one of the best streams in the country for fish. Considerable work of this kind has been done of late and the law-breakers will be harshly dealt with when the fisheries overseer's catch them.

Women of Means and Social Standing Use the DIAMOND DYES

Home dyeing is always a subject of interest to thrifty and economical women. It means scores of dollars saved to the family each year when women can re-color their faded and soiled dresses, skirts, blouses, jackets, capes, ribbons, feathers, and suits for men and boys. If, in the past, you have sold for a few cents per pound your cast off garments to the rag man, save your goods and materials, and test the magical powers of the Diamond Dyes. In these popular dyes you can get the newest and most fashionable colors, and observing the simple directions, you can have a new dress, skirt, suit or overcoat at a cost of from ten to twenty cents. This pleasing and economical work is being done by thousands of women of means and good position. Try the Diamond Dyes and you will be successful.

A REMARKABLE SHOT

How a Well Known Sportsman Made the Most of our Shot

It was in the back parlor of the Snowdon House, and George Fitzgerald had been telling the boys about his wonderful execution when on a deer hunt back in the 70's, when the genial proprietor broke in:

"I remember once when Tom Beddy, Tom Rutherford and I went on a watch on Gold Lake. It was a lovely day, and after an hour's "watch" I determined to take a ramble through the woods, taking a double barrel gun with me. I fooled round all day, till I had only one charge of powder left. Ducks had been coming along one in a flock, and now and then two lone ones, and all of them out of range, until I didn't get a bird. I was discouraged; hadn't had a good shot all day. But just as I was getting out of the stand I heard a goose screaming, and I crouched down quick, I can tell you, and pretty soon he landed plump down in the slough hole in front of me, where my decoys were. I was just to the south of a meadow—you fellows remember how the marsh there is very narrow, and runs right close to the beach—and my stand was just abreast of that low place on the beach they call the blow hole. Well, I moved round carefully and got a bead on the old goose, when he must have smelt me, for just as I was going to let him have it, he began swimming away from me. I didn't want to lose him, so I began to whistle him back, and, if you'll believe me, as I was sitting there what should I see coming up by the blow hole but a red fox. Boys, I'd have given Dick Hall's new double barrelled gun for another charge of powder and shot that minute, I guess. The goose by this time had circled round and begun to come toward me again, and the fox was standing still. Gradually the old goose was getting in line with that fox. 'By thunder!' says I, 'if I can get 'em in line there's a chance of getting both.' In another minute they were right in line, and I let 'em have it. Just as I fired, a big fish jumped out of the water from a school of them that were chasing bait inshore. I shot the goose plum through the head, lamed the fox so he couldn't run, and killed that fish so he drifted ashore, and I got the whole three."

"Boys," said Tom Rutherford, solemnly, "if you'll step into the next room I'll set up the cider."

HAVE YOU EVER STOPPED TO CONSIDER?

Have you ever stopped to consider the quality, composition and effects of the various foods you use? It is too extensive a subject to deal with in a short newspaper article. Take your dish of oatmeal porridge and compare it with a dish of Malt Breakfast Food porridge, that tens of thousands are now using with the best results. What's the difference? Why, a vast and important one as far as your health and strength are concerned. Your oatmeal is a blood heater and irritant, often causing skin eruptions and facial disfigurements, and it frequently deranges the stomach and digestive organs.

Malt Breakfast Food, so highly indorsed by physicians and food experts, is a grain food entirely free from insoluble starch; it enriches the blood and keeps it pure; it soothes and comforts the stomach; it is adapted for young and old, and weak and strong. One package makes twenty-five meals. Try it and be happy. Grocers heartily recommend it.

Tobacco Remedies

In another column will be found a reader referring to Dr. McTaggart's remedy for the tobacco habit. This is known to us as a genuine cure, for the taste for tobacco. It is recommended by such gentlemen as F. S. Spence, Dr. J. C. Spencer, B.C., James Lence, London, and may be relied upon to banish the craving.

BURLEIGH FALLS POWER

Mr. Culverwell and Engineers Have Been at Burleigh for Some Days

Mr. J. Alex Culverwell, Managing Director of the Central Ontario Power Co., was in town yesterday, having come down from Burleigh where he has been for several days with three engineers, making surveys and taking soundings preparatory to making plans for the large power house they propose to build.

Mr. Culverwell states that every thing points favorable to getting a splendid head of water. It being possible that 22 feet can be obtained at a cost of about $15,000. The natural conditions of the place will allow the work to be completed at about one-tenth the cost of similar work under ordinary conditions.

The plans will be prepared at once and tenders will be called for the work.

There should be a very large amount of electric power generated at Burleigh. There is a great volume of water at the place where the power house will be built and every thing tends to having a very large amount of cheap power in town at an early date.

The Peterboro-New-Market Game To-Night

The Peterborough hockey team will journey to Newmarket to-day to play the hockey team of that town. This is the last game of the last round of the semi-finals and with a lead of 6 goals, Peterborough will doubtless be in the swim for the final game with Galt or Collingwood.

The same team will go to Newmarket as played here on Friday night.

Senior O.H.A. Final Postponed

The mild weather has upset the calculations of the O. H. A. Executive, who planned to have the senior final game played off here to night. The game has been called off till the weather man is prepared to assure good ice. In the meantime no date has been fixed, but it is almost certain the match will be played next Saturday night if there is any ice. Both Cornwall and Wellingtons have asked for that date.

In the intermediate semi-finals the Collingwood and Galt game has been postponed. They will play a sudden death game in Toronto, as the best available intermediate point. The winner of this match will meet the winner of the Newmarket-Peterborough round in the finals.

WHEN DANGERS THREATEN YOU BE FULLY ARMED

Paine's Celery Compound

WILL ENABLE YOU TO VANQUISH EVERY FOE

When danger threatens you, common sense, care and attention should direct your course.

If you are a victim of disease and looking for restoration to health, as soon think of stopping the raging of the boisterous ocean by a wave of the hand as of getting rid of your troubles by use of any of the various medicines in liquid and pill forms so common in our land at the present time. Medical investigations, tests and proofs of cures point to one infallible disease banisher—Paine's Celery Compound, the only medicine that goes directly to the very root of your trouble. It nourishes nerves and brain, purifies the blood, cures dyspepsia, neuralgia, rheumatism, liver complaints, kidney troubles, tones up the system and makes the weak strong.

Mrs. T. O. Smith, Victoria, B.C., says: "I would prove an ungrateful woman if I refrained from doing justice to Paine's Celery Compound. Having suffered many years from chronic constipation and general debility, I at last got low. I was given up to die by the doctors. Just at this time I was recommended Paine's Celery Compound by a friend, and in two days found some relief. After using the medicine for three months I am as well as ever before, and enjoy good health."

cage was at top, the cage would fall to the bottom. Do not see how anything could be constructed to hold hoist. Cable has a breaking strain of about 7 tons. Weight carried about 300 lbs. Strangers are not allowed in the building. Notices are up to warn people to keep away from building. Cannot say whether order is enforced or not. People are around but do not know if they have business or not. Do not think hoist could drop if brake was taken off as there is a great deal of friction in the machinery. Never knew hoist to drop when engine was standing.

Wm Langford sr. sworn said,—My men built ways and running parts from my own plans approved of by the Architect and Mr. Kearns.

A hoist that had been tried was not satisfactory and I was told to build a new one on a different plan than the old one. The old hoist was not rigid. The new hoist is rigid and stronger. A new cable was used. The machinery was good and I consider it as perfectly constructed as a hoist could be made. I do not think it necessary to have a look on a hoist which is run by an engine. On a hoist run by a horse they have a lock. Do not think cage could descend if brake was taken off. Machinery and considerable cable would have to be moved before cage could descend. If it did start its motion would be slow at first. Think hoist moved when engine started.

The cable is endless. There would be more cable on one side than the other. The cable is fastened to the top of each cage and passing over two pulleys passes down each side of the centre post. The method of signalling is the same as generally used. [illegible] Think [illegible] gave up it was

Had a catch of suitable strength been used on the hoist the same as on a horse power hoist it would have been of no service in preventing this accident.

The court adjourned to meet to-night at 7.30 sharp in the Council Chamber. It is altogether likely the inquest will be concluded to-night as there are not many witnesses to be examined.

The jury will visit the Cereal Works this afternoon to see the working of the elevator and other things connected with the case.

Weary Brain Workers

Fagged out, ideas come as slowly as molasses. You think of things just a minute or two too late. Snap's gone! The buoyancy that made work a pleasure—that's gone too. The doctor would tell you that you are run down, not eating enough nor digesting enough. Your stomach needs aid, your digestion needs a bracer, too. Your blood requires phosphorous and iron that it may be formed readily. Now Ferrozone is a wonderful nerve bracer and blood maker. It's food for the blood and nerves. It will make you strong quickly and permanently. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

Weather Notes

The weather continued moderately cold during Sunday in Eastern Ontario and the Province of Quebec, while in all other parts of the Dominion it was quite mild. At present there are no indications of colder weather.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & [illegible] COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 53 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalised for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil seepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

DIED IN ENGLAND

Mrs. R. Turner, Mother of Ald. Turner, Passed Away

A cablegram from London, England, received yesterday from Ald. J. J. Turner, sr., conveyed the intelligence that his mother, Mrs. R. Turner, had just died at her home. A few weeks ago Ald. Turner left for England, where he was called to see his mother, who was then very ill. Deceased was born on the island of St. Helena, eighty years ago. She had resided in England since her marriage, 56 years ago.

A family of three sons and one daughter survive her. They are William and Thomas, London, Eng.; J. J. Turner and Mrs. Susan Drummond, of town.

WATER RATES UNCHANGED

The Report of a Change is not Correct—The Old Tariff Remains

There appears to be some misunderstanding about the tariff of rates to be charged for water this year. A great many were of the opinion that the water rates would be reduced, but such is not the case. This year, at least, the rates will be the same as last year. The commissioners, it is understood, are working on a new tariff to come into force on January 1st, 1903. The report will be published after the work is done, and people will have to abide with the present rates this year.

RUSSIA IS WARNED BY THE UNITED STATES

Now No Doubt That Uncle Sam is Behind Great Britain and Japan

MUST EVACUATE THE PROVINCE OF MANCHURIA.

British-Japanese Pact Has a Wider Significance--Chinese Government Checked in Bestowal of Franchises

Washington, Feb. 25—The unexpected publication at this juncture of the note sent to the Russian and Chinese governments by Secretary of State Hay, which in effect forbids the Manchurian policy of Russia, has created a condition little short of amazement among the statesmen of this city. The note, which is dated Feb. 1, is evidently written with the full knowledge of the then pending negotiations between Great Britain and Japan and now, after its publication, diplomats and politicians are aware that both Great Britain and Japan were authoritatively possessed of information which enabled them to make their treaty with as full an assurance as though the official seal of the United States was at the bottom of the document.

The note, which states in unequivocal terms that the United States will not allow the Chinese government to sign over to any power nor allow any power to accept the exclusive rights to operate mines or railroads, or in any other way to develop the industries of Manchuria, is little other than a formal notice that the czar policy is regarded with grave suspicion and will not be allowed to proceed.

Secretary Hay at the time the note was drawn up was undoubtedly possessed of the fact that Russia had begun to open mines and to operate railroads, and that she was earnestly endeavoring by all means possible to further the industrial interests of Manchuria, and he was also aware of the fact that the Russian Ministers had announced, in a note sent to the Chinese Government, their intention of holding Manchuria at all hazards, especially for the purpose of increasing these industrial openings which the United States by the words of their Secretary of State have so unequivocally condemned.

It will be remembered that in theernment notified the Chinese govern month of January the Russian gov-ment that the only reason why the province of Manchuria had not been given up was that the czar was aware that it needed a large army to keep the province from the inroads of the other powers and, that as the Chinese government had not the necessary forces that Russia would keep the province until such time as it was sure that the emperor of China need have no fear that the European powers meditated any aggression upon his territory. In other words, the Russian Ministers intended to keep Manchuria as long as it pleased them to do so.

No official protest was entered against this note for the reason that it was largely informal in character, but within a week in the British House of Commons in answer to queries from a member, Lord Cranborne, the undersecretary for foreign affairs, stated that the Government was considering what action it should take with reference to the aggrandizement of power which was being manifested by Russia in Manchuria. Then the matter appeared to have been allowed to drop.

Meanwhile negotiation had been going on between Great Britain and China, and, as is evidenced by the note in question, with the United States as an active partner in the transaction, and the result of the negotiations was the issuance of the recent British-Japanese treaty. This treaty in effect set itself against the Manchurian policy of Russia, as does also the note of Feb. 1 sent by Secretary Hay.

It is agreed by politicians and diplomats alike that the only reason this note was not made public earlier was the desire on the part of the state department to make the note little less important and binding in its result than if a treaty had been signed, while at the same time the United States should be able to escape the obligations of such a treaty.

CONDITION OF AFFAIRS IN CHINA.

London, Feb. 25.—Dr. Morrison writes to The Times from Pekin stating that on his trip over the new Chwang Railway he was detained two days awaiting a passport from the Russian Admiral. He says the old friendly feeling for Great Britain still survives, while the humanity and discipline of the Japanese and their considerate treatment of the conquered have left a deep impression on the Chinese, in vivid contrast to the memory of awful massacres by the Russians. No permanent work is in progress on the new Chwang Railway. The temporary bridges and machinery used by the British engineers are left rusting. Since the Russian occupation, property north of the great wall has deteriorated, but the line is well guarded, Dr. Morrison asserts that reports of collisions between Americans, British and Russians are greatly exaggerated. Animosity to the Russian occupation is growing.

TO SOOTHE AMERICAN PRIDE.

Paris, Feb. 25.—Le Journal Des Debats says that the United States treated Germany with suspicion during the Spanish war, and that the Emperor seeks to modify this feeling by a timely visit of politeness. Le Journal adds that Europe's humiliating attitude is quite calculated to justify American pride.

OBJECT TO TRANSATLANTIC PRINCESSES.

London, Feb. 25.—The French papers blame old Europe for displaying too much enthusiasm toward "young trans-Atlantic princesses."

COUNT BONI WRITES TO AMERICANS.

Paris, Feb. 25.—The Paris edition of the New York Herald publishes a letter from Count Boni de Castellaine addressed to the American people, seeking to interest them in the Panama Canal route. He writes: "Along with the brotherhood of war, arms and independence, we shall invoke a new brotherhood, and perhaps continue the alliance of two great republics the old and the new world, against coalitions which should be foreseen and rendered impotent."

CHAMBERLAIN'S PLAIN WORDS ON WAR

Kruger Bunch No Longer Representing the Fighting Burgers

UTTERLY WITHOUT CREDENTIALS

And Will not be Recognized by Britain—There is no One Now Authorized to Speak for the Boers,

London, Feb. 25—Mr. Chamberlain, in a speech in the House of Commons, appears to have anticipated the proposal sent from the Hague Government. He said, "I have pointed out that right hon. gentlemen opposite, Lord Rosebery and his friends, do not want us to make overtures to the Boers. They hope the Boers will make overtures to us. Well, if they do, there are two points upon which, I think, we have the right to demand assurances. In the first place, I think we have the right to say to them, to whoever comes to us, 'What are your credentials?' In other words, we have to ask, in Lord Rosebery's own terms, 'Are you the responsible authority?' I wish to make it perfectly clear that we are going to allow no punctilio to stand in the way of a favorable and righteous settlement. Certainly not; but we are not going to waste our time and not going to give encouragement to combatants in the field until we know those who are talking to us have the right to speak for those combatants. Can they do it? I do not say, is there any authority which has this right? Did someone say, 'Yes?' I am going to consider a possible authority, because the House ought to understand the difficulties which face the Government in this matter. It is likely that this Mr. Kruger and his entourage in Holland would have such an authority? All our information points to the fact that they have lost the confidence of their fellow-citizens in the Transvaal and in the Orange Free State, that they no longer possess any authority to speak for them, and, I must say, on the face of it, it would seem probable that that would be the case. Here are these men in the Transvaal, on the open veldt, undergoing the most tremendous hardship. Here are these gentlemen, who come home at a very early period, bringing large sums of money with them to Holland, and is it very likely that those who are fighting in the field will yield to the views of those who are sitting in their armchairs at home?"

Still Fighting Sale of Danish Islands

London, Feb. 25.—Mr. Neils Grone has started for New York, where he will represent the Danish opposition to the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

BRITAIN'S SEA POWER IS EVER SUPERIOR

Comparison of the Navies of the Great Navies of the World

GREAT BRITAIN, JAPAN, RUSSIA

Britain Stands Away Ahead of Any Power or Combination of Powers That Can be Formed Against Her.

London, Feb. 25. — The Parliamentary paper which was issued in giving the terms of an alliance between Great Britain and Japan for the preservation of China and Corea, has caused much comment, and has made the naval strength of these countries a subject of much discussion.

According to the latest published accounts, the number of Great Britain's officers, seamen, and marines provided for in the estimates for 1902 are as follows:—

Officers and men	82,221
Coast guard	4,200
Marines	18,50

In addition to these there are 6,52 boys in training.

The British vessels complete and ready for sea in January, 1902, include the following:

First-class battleships	14
First-class battleships (building)	15
Second-class battleships	12
Third-class battleships	11
Armoured cruisers	6
Protected cruisers	126
Torpedo gunboats	32
Destroyers	96
Torpedo boats, first-class	11
Torpedo boats, second-class	71
Torpedo ships	3

In January, 1902, there were 174 ships in commission, distributed as follows:

Mediterranean	42
Channel squadron	14
North American and West Indies	15
East Indies	10
China	30
West Africa	16
Pacific	3
Australia	13
Special service	11
Surveying service	7
Training squadron	4

The first-class battleships of the Royal Sovereign and Empress of India type are about 14,150 tons displacement, and the battleships of the London, Magnificent, Formidable, Victorious, and Prince George class are about 14,900 tons.

Japan has:

	Tons
Six first class battleships with a gross displacement of	86,300
Two second-class battleships	11,112
Ten coast defence ships	18,125
Six first-class cruisers	58,772
Nine second-class cruisers	38,618
Five third-class cruisers	14,078
Two first-class gunboats	2,567
Fourteen second-class gunboats	6,062
Two third-class cruisers	6,300

The first-class battleships are all over 12,000 tons displacement.

The total number of officers and enlisted men in the Russian navy, according to the latest published accounts, is between forty thousand and forty-five thousand. The fleet consists of six first-class battleships. The Borodino, "Alexander III., and Orel have a displacement of 13,400 tons each, and carry four 12-inch, twelve 6-inch quick-firing and twenty 3-inch quick-firing guns each, and many smaller guns. The Tavricheeky has 12,480 tons displacement, and carries four 12-inch, sixteen 6-inch quick-firing, sixteen 3-inch quick-firing guns and thirty smaller pieces. The Retvizan, 12,700 tons displacement, has four 12-inch twelve 6-inch quick-firing, and twenty 3-inch quick-firing guns, and the Tsarevitch will have the same armament, but will be of 1,000 tons more displacement.

These first-class battleships, although they are put on the official list of the Russian navy's fleet, are in course of construction, and none had been completed on January 1, 1901. Since that time much progress has been made, several of the ships have been made available, and the Retvizan, which is being built at the Cramp yards, will be ready for delivery to the Russian Government on March 16.

The rest of the Russian fleet is composed as follows:—

Second-class battleships	12
Third-class battleships	8
Coast defence vessels	7
Armored cruisers	1
Protected cruisers	11
Gunboats	30
Old armor clads	8

According to published reports there are in the British navy eighty-two vessels of more than 8,000 tons displacement, aggregating about 1,000,000 tons displacement. This includes the vessels in course of construction.

The tonnage of Japan's twelve vessels of more than 8,000 tons displacement is about 146,000 tons.

Russia's twenty-seven vessels of more than 8,000 tons displacement aggregate 322,000 tons.

The naval strength of France, which is also a matter of general interest at this time because of possible combinations, is reported in the recent official documents as follows:—

First class battleships	6
First-class battleships (building)	5
Second-class battleships	4
Second-class battleships (building)	7
Third-class battleships	19
Third-class battleships (building)	12

Germany has no first-class battleships in commission. There are seven of the second-class in service, and eight of the same class are being built.

The United States has six first-class battleships in commission, and twelve are in course of construction.

These are some of the fighting ships of the world:—

	In commission.	Building.
England	665	68
Japan	65	19
Russia	285	35
France	382	80
Germany	231	36
United States	80	48

This list includes cruisers, destroyers, etc.

CANADA AND THE MONROE DOCTRINE

A Leading American Paper Offers Some Insolent Advice

AN AMERICAN SOVEREIGNTY

The Washington Government Claims a Sovereignty Over North America

Says England Was Willing to Give Up Canada to the United States—This is False As Britain Never Dreamed of Cutting the Tie

Chicago, Feb. 25—The Chronicle says: Our Canadian neighbors are among those who are borrowing trouble about the Monroe doctrine. They argue that the purchase of the Danish West Indies by the United States may be followed by the purchase of the French islands of St. Pierre and Michelon, "dominating the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Canada's line of communication with Great Britain," to quote the language used by some of them.

The Toronto Star, an organ of the ministerial party, directs attention to this possibility and its relation to the Monroe doctrine, and asks whether the Canadian part of the British Empire has a moral right which cannot be asserted because of the might of another nation.

It suggests that British acquiescence in the doctrine that this republic can extend its sovereignty wherever it pleases in the western hemisphere, while no other nation can if this republic is able to prevent, impairs British sovereignty, which is "no longer supreme so far as this portion of the empire is concerned." The Star asks, "If it does not mean that what does it mean?"

To this the opposition organ in Toronto responds: "That is exactly what it does mean. The United States has practically declared itself suzerain of the western hemisphere, including Canada, and is prepared to enforce it;" that is, the declaration.

It is a notorious fact that this republic is the dominant power in this hemisphere. It has been a well recognized fact for a long time. It is far from new, though the events of the last seven years may have given it a new significance to the European and Canadian mind. Since the intervention of President Cleveland to check the designs of Great Britain against Venezuela there has been a clearer perception of the possible uses to which our power in this hemisphere may be put.

Nothing in this need really disturb the Canadian peace of mind. We interfered to prevent British encroachment upon the territory of Venezuela, but we made no attempt to extend our own sovereignty over that country. We interfered to put an end to strife and oppression in Cuba, but we have not extended our sovereignty over either Porto Rico or Cuba without the consent of the inhabitants of those islands.

Much less would we be disposed to extend our sovereignty over the people of British North America without their consent. They have demonstrated their capacity for self-government by governing themselves successfully for many years, practically without any interference or guidance from Great Britain. They have obtained from Britain even participation in the making of all treaties affecting themselves and their interests. There is no danger that we shall attempt to deprive such a people of the power to determinate their own political destiny.

It would be gratifying, of course, if the people of Canada should freely elect to cast their fortunes with the great republic as states of the union. We have the testimony of Charles Francis Adams in an address recently published that both Grant and Sumner wished to bring about a settlement of the Alabama claims by the relinquishment on the part of Britain of sovereignty over Canada and all other territory in this hemisphere. We have his testimony that Britain expressed willingness to let Canada depart in peace, but declined to force her to sever her connection with the empire.

If we accept this testimony it only goes to show that, while we would be pleased to have Canada with us, neither we nor Britain would be disposed to compel her to change her political relations against her will. No doubt the American people would be as well pleased now as they would have been in the early 70's to have British sovereignty withdrawn altogether from this continent and to have the British-Americans one with us. No more reason exists now than then to suppose that we are disposed to force them into relations which would be odious to any large number of them.

Slowly Dying From Catarrh

Thousands are in this terrible condition but don't realize their danger. If you have the slightest taint of catarrh, would it not be wise to commence Catarrhozone treatment now and be perfectly cured in a short time? This pleasant remedy cures without the use of drugs, atomizers or snuffs. You inhale the medicated vapor, which spreads to all parts of the breathing organs, kills the germs and heals the inflamed surfaces. Catarrhozone clears the throat and nose instantly, and never fails to clear the most obstinate catarrhal, lung and throat troubles. A trial will demonstrate the value of Catarrhozone, which sells for $1, small size 25c., at druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

ANOTHER MILLION OF CAPITAL STOCK

Decision of the Canadian General Electric Company

AN APPLICATION TO OTTAWA.

Reports Submitted at the Annual Meeting of the Shareholders—Directors Re-Elected

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the Canadian General Electric Company in Toronto, it was decided to apply to the Dominion Parliament to increase the capital stock of the company from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000. Of the present stock $300,000 is preferred, and $1,700,000 is common stock, all paid up. The report states that while the power to issue another million of stock is asked for, it is not proposed to issue for the present more than $500,000, which will be offered to the shareholders in proportion to their holdings, at such premium as shall be determined upon.

Another by-law passed on December 12, 1901, increasing the number of directors from 12 to 14, was approved yesterday.

In their annual report the directors state that the volume of business has been much larger than in any previous year in the history of the company. Owing to reorganizations and additions to plant during the year, the works have been run at a slight temporary disadvantage, but notwithstanding this, the results of the year's business have been most satisfactory.

The balance at credit of profit and loss is shown as $412,861.94, which is made up of $365,260.63 profit on operating (being an advance of thirty per cent over 1900), $125,000 premium on new shares issued, and $71,008.01 brought forward. From this amount dividends of ten per cent. on the common stock, and six per cent. on the preferred stock, amounting to $166,700, have been paid; $100,000 has been added to reserve fund, which now stands at $345,000; $100,000 transferred to contingent account; the sum of $77,680.27 remains at the credit of profit and loss, and the large sum of $167,606.67 has been written off.

In accordance with the company's policy of writing down its assets rather than adding large sums to the reserve fund, the sum of $20,000 has been written off patents and contracts acquired by purchase from the Royal and Stanley Companies; $53,447.62 has been written off the Peterborough manufacturing plant and machinery; $32,013.42 off the Montreal factory plant and machinery, and $25,000 to provide for fluctuations in the price of copper. During the year the sum of $16,726.17 has been expended on the Brantford Street Railway, all of which has been written off.

New buildings and plant have been added to the Peterborough works, the Montreal works have been reorganized, and a 1,200 horse-power water-power secured at Peterborough. The foundry business has grown considerably, 300 men being employed, and the completion of the new plant at Toronto Junction in the early summer will enable the company to handle the greatly-increased business in prospect.

RUSSIA'S STORY TOLD

Another Story of Lord Pauncefote's Proposal for Joint Note on Cuba

St Petersburg, Feb. 25.— The Journal de St. Petersburg says that a meeting of the representatives of the Powers was held at the residence of Lord Pauncefote, the British Ambassador at Washington, on April 14, 1898, at which Lord Pauncefote suggested that the representatives address a telegram to their respective Governments, the substance of which Lord Pauncefote had already written in England, to the effect that the time had arrived to dissipate the erroneous opinion held in the United States that hostile measures against Spain would be approved by the Powers, that intervention by the Americans in Cuba did not appear to be justificate and that it was necessary to give the communication much publicity in order to aid the civilized world of moral responsibility.

The Journal adds that the Russian Government took no step in the matter, remaining faithful to the principle of strict neutrality, thereby newly manifesting the traditional friendship of Russia for the United States.

CORONER'S INQUEST ON DEATH OF J. F. PERRIN

Concluded Last Night at the Council Chambers --Important Evidence Taken

J. FRED PERRIN MET HIS DEATH BY ACCIDENT

At the Cereal Works on Monday February 17th—This was the Decision Arrived at by the Jury Last Night

George Foster was the first witness called, and being sworn said,—I was in the engine room when the accident happened. I drive the horse and cart and draw brick from a pile on the hill to the building. I was about 6 feet from the engineer when the accident occurred. I was behind the engineer and heard some one yelling that someone had fallen. I did not see body falling. The engineer's name is Charles Adams, but I did not know him previous to working at the Cereal works. He was standing in his usual place at the side of the engine. I heard only one bell at the time hoist was to start. The engineer was on duty at his proper place and the bell rang just before the engine started. I told the head bricklayer that evening that I had heard the bell ring. I was not working that day, having been laid off. I had been in the engine room about 10 or 15 minutes before the bell rang. I heard it ring a number of times, as it rang every few minutes. I also heard it ring to call the attention of the laborers. I knew where the bell was. I never was there when any questions were raised as to the accuracy of the bell. Three men fill the barrows with brick, two others mixing mortar. I saw two strangers on the lower flat, but none up above. The strangers were in the basement and could be seen by everyone.

John Murphy, sworn, said,—I was filling a barrow with brick about 20 feet from the hoist when the accident happened. This, together with seeing after the different kinds of brick sent up, is my regular work. I do not remember speaking to Mr. Redfern that day. I did not see deceased fall, but heard something strike the floor. I cannot say whether the bell rang or not as I was paying no attention to it. I have been working at the hoist since it was put up, and have not heard any complaints about it, although Mr. Redfern complained of the bell ringing, but I made no inquiries. The bell would ring only when the wire was pulled. I know of George Carr and John Perrin being left in charge of the signal when Redfern was attending to other work. A man calling down the hoist could not be distinctly heard at the ground floor. I was one of the first to reach deceased after he fell. He did not speak. We worked together for some time, and I thought him naturally slow in his movements. I have often warned him to be careful, but he would only laugh. Sometimes he stood on the hoist and was raised a few feet above the floor. I never knew the bell to ring, only when the wire was pulled from the top of the building. Sometimes strangers entered the building but I never knew them to interfere with the bell wire. A chip off a brick could not make the same sound in the bell as when it was rung by the wire.

Charles Mundon said he was working in the basement of the building putting barrows on the cage when the accident occurred. He could not remember of hearing a signal bell to draw the attention of the men. He heard the bell to stop the hoist. The body had not reached the floor when the hoist stopped. The lower cage was loaded when it moved upwards. He had put on a barrow of white brick and that went up when deceased fell. He heard Mr. Redfern complain about hoist starting before signal was given and said engineer had started engine before he was told to. If the men were close to the top of the hoist there was plenty of time to do their work before the cage would descend. He thought the deceased was slow in his movements. He had only worked with deceased about two days. He remembered distinctly hearing the bell ring to stop the hoist.

Donald McLeod said the filled barrows with mortar and had just put one on the cage and turned to fill another. He had spoken up the hoist to Mr. Redfern. He heard three bells and a moment after he heard two bells which meant to stop the hoist at the ground floor.

John Fox said he was working on the top of the building taking off barrows when the accident happened. He had taken the last barrow off the hoist before Perrin fell. Redfern was at his place at the bell wire. He knew there was some danger in working around the hoist. The other men were aware of the danger. If the hoist dropped a man would not have time to let go of the handles. He thought deceased was slow in his actions. Deceased knew that the hoist was not very safe. It was not necessary for a man to step on the hoist to remove a barrow. They were running great chances in doing so. He had nearly fallen down the well hole on the Saturday previous and deceased had joked with him about it. The time-keeper sometimes came up on the hoist. He often heard the signal bell when he was working near the hoist. On several occasions the hoist had dropped when he did not hear the bell.

Hamilton Godfrey said he worked at the same work as the deceased, but was not working the day of the accident. He had seen the hoist go down when he did not hear the signal. It was safer to pull barrow off the hoist. He knew deceased since he started work at the building and thought he was rather slow in his movements. He had spoken to deceased about the danger of putting his foot on the hoist when he was taking off a barrow. He did not think it necessary to put a bar across on the floor under the cage as the engine could hold the cage at any height. He did not know if anything could be rigged on the floor to hold the cage.

John Bogue said he was one of the contractors. By arrangement the company were doing the brick-work on the building. He had not been paying any attention to the hoist, as Mr. Gaylord, the foreman, had that in his department. The present engineer was engaged by Mr. Scott or Mr. Gaylord. The method of signalling and the bell were all right. The hoist was in good condition. Bell signal was the only kind that could be used, as there was a lot of noise in the building.

Mr. Wm. Scott said he was manager of the Cereal Co. He was in the basement of the building, some distance from the hoist at the time of the accident and did not hear any signal. The method of signalling was arranged between Mr. Gaylord and the engineer. No complaints had been made to him about the hoist. He considered it in good working order.

Charles Adams, recalled, said he remembered the time-keeper going up on the cage on one occasion. The time-keeper never asked him to break any rules. He always waited for the signal to start the engine. The time-keeper would always ask if signal had been given before he would step on the cage.

There being no more witnesses to call, the coroner addressed the jury briefly and left them to bring in their verdict.

After deliberating over an hour and a half, the jury returned their verdict to the effect that James F. Perrin, came to his death as a result of an accidental fall at the works of the Cereal Co. at Peterborough, and that the absence of a proper signalling system was responsible for the accident.

Machine Type-Setters.

Said to be Hard on Operators.

The work of a typesetter in a modern printing office is very exacting, particularly if he runs a linotype or typesetting machine. It requires the closest attention and rapid and sympathetic action of both brain and hand. This machine works much like a typewriter. Such workers fed on ordinary food give up because of nervous prostration, some in a short time, and some are able to stand it longer.

One of these workers says: "I have been at the linotype three years. It has made a great change in my once robust health. About three months ago, after long expecting it, I completely collapsed, from indigestion and extreme nervousness. The daily physic I had not dared to omit for years, now and then, refused relief and a physician was consulted.

"'Change of occupation and diet,' read the prescription, 'advise eating Grape-Nuts Food twice daily.' I had often set up the advertisements of the Postum Cereal Co., but somehow printers are apt to think advertisements are not intended for them to make use of. I could not well change my occupation, but did change the diet.

"Since then, have used Grape Nuts, both at breakfast and supper, daily. The results are truly remarkable. The first perceptible change was in the matter of digestion. It has been six weeks since I have had to swallow an aperient of any kind. At the beginning of my experiment with Grape-Nuts I weighed 124 pounds; last evening I tipped the beam at 137 1-2.

"My nerves, which were completely shattered three months ago, are now strong and steady, and I do not tire easily, though I go to bed an hour later on an average than formerly, and have increased my capacity at the machine fully two columns of type a day. I am convinced that Grape-Nuts food is the food for persons of sedentary occupation, especially for those who work with brain in lieu of brawn." Chas. H. Eckhard, 177 N. THE PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES

A resolution has been introduced into the Quebec Legislature demanding a revision of the Confederation Act of 1867, so that Quebec may receive a larger annual subsidy from the Dominion treasury than 80c. per head of the population of 1861, which is found insufficient. Of course, if Quebec gets more, the other provinces will have to get more too, and after the general readjustment none of them will be any better off, for there will be an increase of indirect taxation to procure the money. Would it not be better to so alter the B. N. A. Act as to abolish the subsidies to Provinces altogether, leaving each province to collect its own revenues by direct taxation, and permitting a reduction of indirect taxation by the Dominion Parliament? That is the method which Hon. George Brown and several of the other Fathers of Confederation favored. It is the method adopted by the framers of the Constitution of the United States. The subsidy system in Canada was the result of a compromise in the first place, but Canada is old enough and rich enough to adopt a better plan now.

A LIFE-GIVING MEDICINE

At this time when thousands are suffering from the common ills of life, we can honestly recommend the use of Paine's Celery Compound. This wonderful medicine is the prescription of one of the most eminent physicians that ever lived. It never fails to restore the sick to health. Thousands of testimonials prove that Paine's Celery Compound permanently cures rheumatism and neuralgia. WM. MADILL, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr. Bourassa and the Mail and Empire both think Great Britain ought to do more for Canada. Mr. Bourassa wants her to get more vigorously in our behalf in foreign negotiations, and the Mail and Empire wants her to tax her people to give us advantages in their markets. A good many Canadians will resent being placed in a position of continuous mendicancy.

Wealth's Milestones.

"Spring has came," mused Mr. Gotrichkwick, as he stood before the window with his hands thrust deep into his pockets.

"Aw, now, how kind you tell, pap?" gurgled his diamond-bedecked daughter.

"Because——," said the father, as he clinked the coins in his pocket, "because the snow has went."

"Stop that noise, Jimmie, or we will send you to bed." "Pa, you don't act like I was your real child at all; you act like I was jes' somebody else's orphan."

Mixed Morals.

TWO NEW HOUSES.

Once on a Time there were Two Men, each of whom decided to build for himself a Fine, New House.

One Man, being of an Arrogant and Conceited Nature, took counsel of Nobody, but declared that he would build his House to suit himself. "For," said he, "since it is My House and I am to Live in It, why should I ask the Advice of my Neighbors as to its Construction?"

While the House was Building, the Neighbors came often and Looked at it, and went away, Whispering and Wagging their Heads in Derision.

But the Man paid no Heed, and continued to build his House as he Would.

The Result was that, when completed, his House was lacking in Symmetry and Utility, and in a Hundred Ways it was Unsatisfactory, and for each Defect there was a Neighbor who said, "Had you asked Me, I would have Warned you against that Error."

The Other Man, who was of a Humble and Docile Mind, went to Each of his Neighbors in Turn, and asked Advice about the Building of his House.

His Friends willingly and at Great Length gave him the Benefit of their Experiences and Opinions, and the Grateful Man undertook to Follow Out all their Directions.

The Result was that his House, when finished, was a Hodge-Podge of Varying Styles and Contradictory Effects, and Exceedingly Uncomfortable and Inconvenient to Live In.

This Fable teaches that In a Multitude of Counsellors there is Safety, and that Too Many Cooks Spoil the Broth.

THE TWO SUITORS.

Once on a Time there was a Charming Young Maiden who had Two Suitors.

One of These, who was of a Persistent and Persevering Nature, managed to be Continually in the Young Lady's Company.

He would pay her a Visit in the Morning, Drop In to Tea in the Afternoon, and Call on her Again in the Evening.

He took her Driving, and he Escorted her to the Theater. He would take her to a Party, and then he would Dance, or Sit on the Stairs, or Flit into the Conservatory with her.

The Young Lady admired this man but she Wearied of his never-ceasing Presence, and she Said to Herself. "If he were not Always at my Elbow I should Better Appreciate his Good Qualities."

The Other Suitor, who considered himself a Man of Deep and Penetrating Cleverness, said to himself, "I will Go Away for a Time, and then my Fair One will Realise my Worth and Call Me Back to Her."

With a Sad Visage he made his Adieus, and he Exacted her Pledge to Write to him Occasionally. But after he had Gone she Forgot her Promise, and Soon she Forgot his Very Existence.

Kitchener Liked by Soldiers.

A man who recently arrived from South Africa says that Kitchener is liked and trusted by his common soldiers, and tells, in the Boston "Herald," this story, illustrating his manner with them:

"We were on the march from Elandsfontein to Stromberg, and had been pushing forward with unusual speed, and Joe Hawkins, who had just come out of the hospital after a touch of the fever, had been assigned by our good old sergeant-major to drive a Cape cart, carrying supplies, in order to spare him as much as possible from the hot sun. The horses were green, and didn't go well in harness, and, as they came in front of a farmhouse, one of them started kicking and succeeded in breaking the whiffletree.

"Joe at once made a break for the barn back of the farmhouse, and, spying a new Cape cart, grabbed a wrench and proceeded to take off the whiffletree, when he was approached by a quiet, stern-looking man in khaki, whom he did not remember ever having seen before, and who said:

"'I'm sorry, my boy, but I've just commandeered that cart. You will have to find another.'

"'Not much,' replied Joe; 'findin's keepin's in this country. I needed a new whiffletree—I've found one and I'm goin' to keep it.'

"'But,'— commenced the man.

"'There's no "buts" about it,' said Joe; 'if you want this cart, you've got to whip me before you get it.'

"'Well,' replied the man, 'perhaps I could help you repair your cart without destroying this one.'

"Joe, who was naturally a good-natured chap, consented to this arrangement, and, after rummaging about for a few minutes, the man produced a stick which would answer the purpose fairly well. He held it in place while Joe tied it firmly, and, seeing that everything was all right, returned quietly to the house, after bidding Joe a pleasant good-day.

"'Do you know who you were talking with?' inquired a young officer, stepping up to the cart as Joe was preparing to drive off. 'That was Lord Kitchener of Khartoum!'

"'And I've been glad all day I didn't have to lick him,' concluded Joe, as he told the story in camp that night, 'because he's a pretty good fellow.'"

Valuable Man.

"I say," said the business man to the detective, "some fellow has been representing himself as a collector of ours. He has been taking in more money than any two of the men we have, and I want him collared as quickly as you can."

"All right; I'll have him in jail in less than a week."

"Great Scott, man! I don't want to put him in jail; I want to engage him."

WHY BRITAIN IS HATED

The average Little Englander is politically near-sighted. When alien nations exhibit dislike and hatred of Great Britain, they say: "Some of these statesmen of ours must have been saying something to annoy our neighbors. That man Chamberlain has been indiscreet again. The other day when those continental gentlemen were calling us murderers and butchers of women and children, pig-dogs, swine and other rude epithets, besides libelling our soldiers in an unheard-of manner, Chamberlain had the lack of tact to offend them by saying that he was not taking back talk from kindergarten nations like Germany and that our soldiers did not commit such outrages on the inhabitants as did the Prussians in France in 1870. The result of these tactless remarks has been to arouse the personal animosity of the people. Chamberlain should be less brusque." On the other hand this is how Max Nordau, who is not politically short-sighted, explains the hatred of England in Europe: "The result of five hundred years of English history is the mastery of the seas, the possession of the greatest colonial empire the world has ever seen, the astonishing expansion of the Anglo-Saxon race, and the resentful hatred of the nations from whom England has once or oftener had to exact respect for the English flag, or whom she has had to drive from the sea or various shores."

John Bull should have learned, by this time that nothing succeeds like success in making less successful people dislike you.

Items of Interest.

London, Feb. 24. — The Irish party attaches great significance to the evictions of the tenants of forty farms on Lord De Freyne's estate in Roscommon County, Ireland, for refusal to pay rent, and intends to make a fierce Parliamentary struggle over the matter.

John Redmond, chairman of the Irish Parliamentary party, said to a representative of the Associated Press: —"Not only are forty tenants now sold out, but many hundreds of others are being proceeded against. The country thereabouts is alive with police, who patrol the roads day and night, force themselves into people's houses, and in every way create a reign of terror. Everything has been peaceable so far, but the proceedings of the Government are so extraordinary that we cannot help feeling anxious lest violence occur.

"The cause of all the trouble is the Government's refusal to face the unanimous demand of the Irish people that it pass legislation giving compulsory powers to buy out Irish landlords and thus restore the land to the Irish people. Lord Dillon's estate, which is next to that of Lord De Freyne, was bought out by the Government, and the tenants who bought the land are paying fifty per cent. less rent than formerly. The De Freyne tenants naturally wished to do likewise, but Lord De Freyne refused to sell on any terms. The Government, instead of endeavoring to effect a settlement, poured in an army of police."

John Dillon, the former chairman of the Irish Parliamentary party said: "I agree with every word uttered by Mr. Redmond. The trouble, although for the moment confined to Roscommon, involves a principle of vital interest to Ireland. If the De Freyne tenants succeed it will be impossible for the Government to resist any longer our claims for the compulsory settlement of the Irish land question. The very existence of the Irish nation and the whole future of the Irish national movement are seriously affected by the struggle proceeding on the De Freyne and neighboring estates."

ON FIRE.

An exploding lamp; the clothing in a blaze; a paragraph in the paper telling of horrible suffering from burns. Tragedy in this form moves a man to tears. But for women who are daily being consumed by the smouldering fire of disease there is little sympathy.

Inflammation, with its fierce burning; ulceration, eating into the tissues; the nervous system almost shattered by suffering; these are only part of the daily agonies borne by many a woman.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription puts out the fire of inflammation, heals ulceration, and cures female weakness. It tranquilizes the nerves, restores the appetite, and gives refreshing sleep. "Favorite Prescription" is the most reliable put-up medicine offered as a cure for diseases peculiar to women. It always helps. It almost always cures.

"When I first commenced using Dr. Pierce's medicines," writes Mrs. George A. Strong, of Gansevoort, Saratoga Co., N. Y., "I was suffering from female weakness, a disagreeable drain, bearing-down pains, weak and tired feeling all the time. I dragged around in that way for two years, and I began taking your medicine. After taking first bottle I began to feel better. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, two of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' one vial of the 'Pleasant Pellets,' also used one bottle of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Now I feel like a new person. I can't thank you enough for your kind advice and the good your medicine has done me."

SENATORS ENGAGE IN BLOWS

Disgraceful Scene in United States Chamber—Both Committed to Custody

Washington, Feb. 24.— In the Senate yesterday afternoon, at a quarter to 3, a fist fight occurred between Senators McLaurin and Tillman, both of South Carolina. McLaurin arose and said that Tillman's statement regarding him was a "willful and deliberate and malicious lie."

Tillman jumped over chairs and struck McLaurin in the face. A vicious encounter ensued. Both men clinched and struck frantically at each other, when Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Layton sprang between them, and, with the aid of several Senators, the men were parted. It was with great difficulty that they were separated.

The Senate at once determined to go into Executive session, and amid great excitement the galleries and the floors were cleared. During this process the South Carolina Senators remained in their seats.

Mr. McLaurin still showed the mark of Mr. Tillman's fist upon his forehead. Mr. Tillman had not received any injuries apparently, but his usually ruddy face was ashy pale. There were a number of Senators standing about to prevent a renewal of the encounter when the Senate shut itself off from public view.

In Executive session, the Senate at once took up the startling encounter, and a resolution was offered referring the matter to the Committee on Privileges and Resolutions, to report as to what method the Senate should pursue.

Meanwhile both Tillman and McLaurin have been committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms to prevent any hostile meeting between them.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

We are fully prepared to fill your orders for this popular disease-banishing medicine. Knowing its powers and virtues, we strongly recommend it as a blood purifier, nerve bracer and flesh builder. Paine's Celery Compound is no new remedy. It has been tested and successfully used in all parts of Canada by tens of thousands, and has never failed. H. H. [illegible], Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

SIENKIEWIEZ ATTACKS ZOLA

Paris, Feb. 24.— A criticism of M. Zola by M. Sienkiewicz is exciting much comment in literary circles. The author of "Quo Vadis" remarked that any one taking the trouble to tabulate the women in Zola's books would find that ninety-five out of every hundred are abandoned creatures "and that such a literature of lies, exaggeration and love of filth was a libel on the French national life. M. Zola's enemies are more than delighted at the Polish author's denunciation, saying it undermines the talent that the realist is regarded abroad as France's representative novelist.

CIGARETTE IMPORTS ARE SMALL

London, Feb. 24. — The American cigarette invasion, as it is called, looks as if it has ended in smoke, for the present, at any rate. Board of Trade returns [illegible] somewhat upset [illegible] as to the value of cigarettes imported from America. The formidable sum of the January imports from the United States was 1,564 pounds, valued at £354, ($1,720). This sum wouldn't cover the advertisements of the American firms in this country. So far, it is considered in the trade, the Imperial Tobacco Company has scored.

A PROCLAMATION

We possess all the modern and up-to-date facilities for conducting a reliable and first-class drug business. When you favor us with your doctor's prescription, our best efforts are put forth to make that prescription what it should be—professionally correct in the minutest details.

This medicine is giving marvellous results to sick people all over Canada. The wonderful cures effected by Paine's Celery Compound during the past year speaks volumes in favor of the popular medicine. Thousands who have suffered from rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous troubles and dyspepsia now sing the praises of the medicine that has given them such happy results. JOHN NUGENT, Druggist

He Testified in Song.

COLONEL C. C. FOGLE, attorney-at-law, of Lancaster, Mo., related the following legal incident: "One of the most original lawyers I ever met in my life was 'Sam' Dysart, who some twenty years ago was a resident of our county. He is some kin to Major 'Ben' Dysart, of your town. 'Sam' was a born humorist, and could have made his fortune in the lecture field. When he lived up our way he was engaged on one occasion to defend a lot of boys and girls charged with disturbing a religious assembly out in the country, by 'laughing and giggling' is the way the information read. The case was tried before Squire A. C. Bailey, a good old man, who has long since gone to his final reward. Like all cases of the sort, it attracted an immense crowd from the vicinity of the alleged outrage. T. C. Tadlock prosecuted, and he was instructed by the church people to spare no pains to convict the disturbers, who were very much frightened by being dragged into court. All the defendants were children of good families, and it was their first offence. They candidly admitted they laughed out in church, and the State insisted that by their own mouths they were condemned. Brother Tice Spears, a righteous man of Puritanic type, was the main prosecuting witness. He had conducted the services, and he testified that his peace was sadly disturbed by the unseemly behavior of the 'rioters.' After he told his story in chief he sat down with clasped hands waiting for the defendants' attorney to begin on him. He didn't have long to wait. The examination began like this:

"'Brother Spears, you led the meetin' last night?'

"'I did, sir.'

"'You prayed?'

"'I did, sir.'

"'And preached?'

"'I tried to.'

"'And sung?'

"'I sung.'

"'What did you sing?'

"'"There is a Fountain Filled with Blood,"' sir.

"Here Mr. Dysart pulled a hymnbook from his pocket and handed it to the witness, with the remark:

"'Please turn to that song, Brother Spears.'

"The witness did so.

"'That's what you sang that night?'

"'It is, sir.'

"'Well, stand up and sing it now, if you please.'

"'What!'

"'You heard what I said, Brother Spears.'

"'But I can't sing before this sort of crowd.'

"'Brother Spears,' with much apparent indignation, 'do I understand that you refuse to furnish legitimate evidence to this jury?'

"'N—no—but, you see——'

"'Your Honor,' said Mr. Dysart, 'I insist that the witness shall sing the song referred to just as he did on the night of alleged disturbance. It is a part of our evidence, and very important. The reason for it will be disclosed later on.'

"There was a long jangle between the lawyers, and the court finally ordered the witness to get up and sing.

"'And, mind you, Brother Spears,' said Dysart, seriously, 'you must sing it just as you did that night; if you change a note you will have to go back and do it all over again.'

"The witness got up and opened the book. There is a vast difference between singing to a congregation in sympathy with you and a crowd of court room habitues. Brother Spears was painfully conscious of the fact. You know how those oldtime hymns are sung in the backwoods settlements? You begin in the basement and work up to the roof, and then leap off from the dizzy height and finally finish the line in the basement. That's the way the witness sang. He had a good voice—that is, it was strong. It seemed to threaten the window lights. The crowd didn't smile—it just yelled with laughter. The jurymen bent double and almost rolled from their seats. The court bit his cob-pipe harder and looked solemn. It wasn't any use. There were only two straight faces in the house. One belonged to a deaf man and the other to 'Sam' Dysart. The singer finished and sat down. He looked tired. 'Sam' immediately excused him. When the time for speechmaking came 'Sam' remarked to the jury: 'If you gentlemen think you could go to one of Brother Spears' meetings and behave better than you have here, why, you may be justified in convicting these boys and girls.' That was all he said, but it gave the jury lots to think about. They brought in a verdict of not guilty, with the request that Brother Spears sing another song. But that gentleman had gone home and court adjourned."—Macon "Republican."

Pearls of Great Price.

To-day some of the finest pearls of the world go to China. There is a big demand for them among the mandarins there. Many go to India for sale to the rajahs, and a large number to Paris, whence they are re-exported.

Fine pearls are still of great value, but not so much so as they were in the past. In Roman times they were worth more than now. Julius Caesar once presented to the mother of Marcus Brutus a pearl valued at $240,000. Cleopatra is said to have swallowed one worth $300,000, and she had another equally valuable. Philip II. of Spain received a present of a Panama pearl worth $30,000, and a Spanish woman of Madrid owned one worth 30,000 ducats. During a visit to Constantinople I was shown the Sultan's pearl collection. He has about a peck of pearls of different sizes, some as big as a pigeon's egg, and some no larger than the head of a pin. He has quilts embroidered with pearls, saddle cloths decorated with them, and a great number of mirrors with pearl-studded handles, which are probably used by the ladies of his harem.—Buffalo "Express."

Every Little Helps.

"Here's another letter from that new tenant," said the secretary.

"What's he want now?" enquired the proprietor of the Highuppe Apartment House.

"Says he's got to have more room in his flat. Says it'll help some if you'll let him scrape the paper off the walls."—"Catholic Standard and Times."

When Miss Delavelle Barrington was playing Miami in The Green Bushes at the old Mary Street Theater, Cork, a ludicrous incident occurred. Miami has to jump into the Mississippi, but when Miss Barrington reached the rocky eminence from which she had to leap she saw there was no mattress below to receive her; also the ledge of rock in front of the supposed river was too low to conceal the actress after her leap. Miss Barrington, however, nothing daunted, took her leap, and came down with a thud on the bare stage. The situation struck a member of the "gods," for a stentorian voice called out: "Oh, be jabers, 'tis frozen!"

Why "Mike" Didn't Rise.

AMONG the employees of one of the important mercantile establishments of Chicago is a husky young man who is known as "Mike." There seems to be no clear understanding among "Mike's" immediate superiors as to the nature of his duties. He sits around among boxes at the rear end of the concern most of the time and smokes an old pipe that has the death-rattle in its throat.

Occasionally there is a rag-picker or a suspicious looking prowler to be driven out of the alley, but aside from looking after such persons "Mike" has no regular work to do. This gives him plenty of time to get fat and to ponder upon the great mysteries of existence.

The other day one of the firm's trusted men had occasion to look around among the boxes where "Mike" was on guard, and, finding the latter with his heels cocked up and his chin on his breast, while the old pipe gurgled and wheezed and threatened after every puff to give up the struggle forever, the man from the office proceeded to read his colaborer a little sermon.

"'Mike,'" said the one who amounted to something, "why do you sit around here wasting your spare moments? You are neglecting golden opportunities. Instead of idling your time away you might have a book and be studying. Many a man in your place would educate himself, and so become capable of taking a higher place in the world. I myself started in here at the bottom. But I was determined not to remain at the bottom. How do you suppose I got up? By sitting around and waiting for my employers to come and lift me out of my place? No, indeed, 'Mike,' I fitted myself for a better position. I put in my spare time finding out things about the way the establishment was run. I made myself too valuable to be kept at the bottom. I was determined from the start that I would be promoted, not merely for my own benefit, but for the benefit of the firm. I decided to make myself so valuable that they could not afford not to take advantage of my knowledge and my ability. I think a great many young men make mistakes in the attitude they assume at the start. They try to get up merely for their own profit. They should make themselves so competent that their employers could not help seeing that it would be unprofitable to keep them down. You have a hundred chances here for every one that I had when I started. Three-fourths of the time you have nothing to do. You could put in this time studying and finding out how our business is done. In that way you could make yourself worth more to the firm than you are at present. Why don't you do it?"

"Mike" slowly removed his heels from the box on which they had rested, and, after having gulped down a mouthful of nicotine, he replied:

"I've noticed one thing around this place. The less a feller knows the less he has to do."—Chicago "Record-Herald."

New Zealand Like Newfoundland.

There will probably be no inclusion of New Zealand in the Commonwealth of Australia during the next fifty years, if, indeed, it ever takes place. The scheme has now been condemned by the commission appointed by the New Zealand Government to study the federation question, and the commission's judgment seems well based. New Zealand is twelve hundred miles from Australia by sea, a fact that neutralizes the military argument drawn from the benefits of a joint defence in case of war. Again, should New Zealand be brought under Australian control, such a step would imperil the many economic and socialistic experiments being made under the auspices of the New Zealand Government.

Mark Hanna's secretary says that since 1896 over five hundred children have been named after the Republican "boss."

At the time when the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall were in Victoria, B.C., there were three families living in Quebec street named respectively "George," "Cornwall," and "York," and the eldest Miss George had the Christian name of "May."

An official decision of the much-discussed question whether there is such a condition of affairs in the Philippines as constitutes a state of war, has been given by the United States War Department in connection with a pending claim. The Department holds that the islands are still in a condition of war.

An important step has been taken toward the abolition of slavery in German East Africa by the publication of an imperial edict which permits every slave to end his condition of servitude by the payment of a sum of money, the amount of which is to be determined by the authorities. Every slave is to be permitted to work for himself two days in the week, or to use for his own purposes the corresponding proceeds of his labor. This will give the slaves an opportunity to accumulate the purchase money. It is further decreed that masters shall not transfer ownership without the consent of the slave.

It is understood that Seth Low, shortly after he was elected mayor of New York, sold a million and a half dollars' worth of securities owned by him in various banks that are doing business with the city, so that he might not in the least embarrass the city. He is determined that the conduct of New York city affairs shall not be liable to the slightest suspicion so far as lies in his power. Many of the stocks sold had been held by him for years, and were gilt-edged securities. His friends say that in disposing of those permanent investments Low made considerable of a sacrifice, as he can not find the equal of some of them as income producers.

The strange story of the elopement of an ordinary milch cow with a bull moose comes from Lake Onawa, a pretty sheet of water in the hills of Piscataquis County, Maine, much frequented by sportsmen from the big cities. The cow was the property of Dr. A. T. Sanden of New York, whose cottage is located on the shore of Onawa, and she was kept in a pasture enclosed by a rail fence. A big moose had been several times seen hanging around the cottage grounds late at night, displaying great boldness. One night he came close up to where the cow was, and the two seemed to be good friends. Late at night a tremendous crash was heard, and next morning the fence was a wreck and the cow gone. Neither she nor the moose has been seen since.

Too Much Parent.

IN these days of strenuous parentage, it may not be amiss to suggest mildly that there may be, in the constitution of a family, such a thing as too much parent. Time was when being a parent was incidental to other business in life. Our grandfathers brought up children, a dozen at a time, with a careless familiarity that takes away the modern breath. Each of the dozen was disciplined and duly chastened. They were whipped when they told lies, and occasionally when they did not. They learned to read at four; were put to work at five, as a matter of course; and developed, in due time, the stuff that men are made of. There was never any particular fuss about it. The larger the family, the more whippings it took. But there were always enough to go around, and no one the worse for it. The advertisement, "Boy missing. Run away from home," was not an uncommon feature of the weekly newspaper. But of the remnant who had the courage to stay at home and grow up, it may be said that they made admirable citizens. They had the rare privilege of passing their childhood and youth in the presence of men and women who had other and more important business in life than that of being parent to offspring. They grew up with a chastened sense of their own unimportance in the scheme of being, and a philosophic expectation of taking the hard knocks of life as they came.

We have changed all that. We have listened to the voice of Froebel, "Let us play with our children;" and to the educational moralist, "A father should be his boy's best friend;" and to our most famous and most unpractical poet, "The child is father to the man;" and the whole business of child-raising is turned other end to. We no longer raise them by the dozen. One or two at a time is as much as we dare venture, and very cautiously at that. We study the development and take notes on the bumps, phrenological; the other kind the modern child is never allowed to have. We agonize over our relation to his moral growth, and drop tentative, trembling seeds into the ground of his being, and exchange specimens if anything comes of it. The result, as a whole, is not, it must be admitted, altogether unpleasing. There is something about the well-born, well-bred, wholesome child of to-day that makes glad the eye and the heart. But the poor parent! We protest that he has never had a chance in life. Ten to one his own parents belonged to the old school, and disciplined him within an inch of life. And now his children belong to the new. He is ground between the upper and the nether stone. Only in scattered, precious moments does he dare call himself his own. Late in the evening, perhaps, when the all-important child has been adequately played with and encouraged and developed and put to bed on his hygienic pillow, there comes a moment when the exhausted parent may sit down before the fire and draw a comfortable, grown-up breath, and gather strength and wisdom for the morrow.

As we watch him, we are reminded of the pleasant old gentleman who, across the reception-plate, is accosted by the genial young girl: "After all, sir, there's nothing so delicious as the wing of a chicken, is there?" And the old gentleman: "I don't know, my dear. When I was young the old people always ate the wings, and now I am old the young people eat them. I have never tasted the wing of a chicken."—From the "Contributors' Club."

The White Lies of Society.

IN the white lies of society, women who are otherwise scrupulously truthful, are amazingly proficient, writes Geraldine Bonner in the "Argonaut;" they lie to be agreeable, to please. I have often heard women, who could no more have borne false witness against their neighbor than they could have robbed a church, say they would always send down the message "Not at home" rather than the honest but inhospitable "Engaged." "Not at home" was untrue, but hurts nobody's feelings. "Engaged," which accurately stated the case, was impolite and ungracious, and no one, if they could help it by a little judicious suppressing of facts, would ever be sent hurt from their door. I never shall forget some early lessons I received in the house of a lady who was a social leader and a famous charmer, although well on in years. On her day at home she used to sit where she saw the visitors as they came toward the entrance. One day a young woman appeared, and she exclaimed in a high key of annoyance:

"Good gracious, here's Miss So-and-So, just when I wanted to talk to you"—this to my companion, with a bewilderingly sweet smile. "What a bore she is, and always coming here."

The next moment Miss So-and-So entered, and was greeted with the most flattering air of delighted surprise.

"Why, my dear Miss So-and-So! How good of you to come! What a charming surprise! It's a hundred years since I've seen you," etc.

And Miss So-and-So beamed with the deprecating pleasure of one who feels herself appreciated.

When we had left and were descending the steps, I said somewhat ruefully to my companion:

"I suppose she said just the same about us before we came in, to the people who were there before us."

"Of course she did. Why shouldn't she? She's so charming; and one of the most charming things about her is that she's such a transparent liar. Everybody knows that she doesn't mean a word she says, but likes it just as much as if she did."

Ladies of this type will tell you that good manners are founded on a groundwork of amiable insincerity. If one were perfectly sincere, how horribly rude one would sometimes be! Imagine greeting the familiar remark, "Oh, I'm so sorry; I'm afraid I've disturbed you," with the truthful answer: "You have, and I'm not at all glad you came," or, instead of employing the old reliable "So sorry I couldn't get to see you last Friday," substituting the aggressive uprightness of "I had plenty of time to come round on Friday, but I didn't want to go." White lies do certainly grease the wheels of life, and personally I have the greatest possible respect for them. Anything that makes people more agreeable in the society sense ought to be encouraged. In one's social and domestic relations one should cultivate whatever promotes harmony and lessens friction. There is enough of that in the world outside; and, after all, the Recording Angel is not really on the lookout for white lies. The commandments only stipulate that we refrain from bearing false witness; they do not concern themselves in the least about polite falsehoods.

The Romance of a Necklace.

GREAT animation reigns just now on the blue shores of Corfu, where all the fishermen of the coast are busy trying their chances for a big catch. But up to now they have not succeeded in smoothing the capricious temper of Dame Fortune, and night after night they go back home very much downhearted. Why? Well, perhaps the story as told by a European correspondent is worth repeating.

At the moment when the news of her son Archduke Rudolph's tragic death was brought to her, the Empress of Austria was wearing a necklace of big pearls which was almost priceless. At night her chamberwoman saw with dismay that the lustrous pearls had become dull and opaque; she ventured to hint as much to her august mistress, who, however, only shrugged her shoulders with a weary gesture, and would not listen. A few weeks later the Empress asked for her pearls, but on opening the case she uttered a cry of surprise. There were her beautiful dewdrops resting on the white satin lining, which now looked brilliant and lovely compared with the dull and greyish pearls. "This is not my necklace!" she said angrily. But she soon knew that, like true old friends, her beloved pearls had gone into mourning with their mistress. She called to her aid all the jewelers of the world to try and bring back the splendid "Orient," which had made her pearls marvelous to look at. But in vain. At last a professor of chemistry at the Vienna University told the Empress that the only remedy for the pearls was to dip them into the sea and leave them there as long as possible. So one day, accompanied only by an old monk, she rowed into a certain little bay round the island, and, with his aid, hid the necklace in a little cranny in the rocks below the waves, and swore him to secrecy over the matter.

The secret, alas, was too well kept, for on hearing the news of his august mistress's tragic death, Father Ambrosia fell dead in the cloister as he was going to early mass; and now both the Empress and her confidant are buried, the one in a damp vault, and the other under the rose bushes at Corfu, while the precious necklace is resting somewhere among the seaweeds, its location unknown to any living being.

"Hello" Before Prayers.

A nervous looking girl consulted a doctor, who asked her what she was suffering from. Her answer was as follows: "I'm a telephone girl, doctor, and the work is a terrible strain on my nerves. The monotony of having a receiver constantly at my ears, and saying 'Hello!' tells upon my nerves. When off duty I am always having 'Hello!' ringing in my ears, and I am constantly saying it. When I go to bed, I wake up from sleep saying 'Hello!' And even when I kneel down to say my prayers I instinctively say 'Hello!' before I commence them."

Marriage Not a Failure.

Old Friend—Was your daughter's marriage a success? Hostess—Oh, a great success. She's traveling in Europe on the alimony.—"New York Weekly."

A lunacy commissioner was making his customary rounds. An inmate whose particular fancy it was to pose as a much-married man approached with the announcement that he had once again taken to himself a wife. "And who is the fortunate lady?" said the commissioner. "Ah," said the lunatic, smiling sweetly, "she's the daughter of the devil." "Indeed; and how do you get on together?" "Get on? Oh, well, I get on right enough with the [illegible], but it's the old people I can't put up with!"

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The small boys are playing marbles—a sure sign of spring.

—The smallpox tent at Jackson Park was taken down yesterday.

—We will start our new story in a few days. Watch for it.

—A large number of men were engaged in making water trenches on Water street yesterday.

—At the police court yesterday, John Oakley was sent up on the hill for two months for being a vagrant.

—The Times job rooms has just turned out the new bills for users of water. They are a reprint of the old form.

—Big bargains in bibles, purses, bound books, dolls, games, fancy goods and stationery during stock taking, for the next ten days, at Times Bookstore.

—A royal welcome was last night extended to the Lindsay curlers who won everything in sight at the Winnipeg, on their return home.

—A large number of enthusiasts from town accompanied the hockey team to Newmarket yesterday.

—The offices of the Central Ontario Power Co., have been removed from the Bank of Commerce building to apartments over Madill's drug store.

—Yesterday the Times Bookstore received a large order from Atlin, B.C. for a special line of stationery and blank books through an advertisement in the Times.

—An owner has been found for a false tooth, which has been in possession of the police for some time. The loser did not have much trouble in proving property.

—Whitan makes the best photos in town. His work took first prize in Toronto and Peterborough. Go where you get the best. Pictures framed to order. 168 Hunter street, west.

—Railway and Shipping World: The Kawartha Lakes Excursion Co., which was referred to in our issue of Dec. 1901, as having purchased the Str. Crandella, is composed of J. H. Lennon and E. Elliott, of Lindsay, Ont. It is stated that about $2,000 will be expended in refitting the Crandella.

—"Coal dealers make a lot of money at our expense in cold weather," grumbled the man who always believes the worst of everybody. "I got a load of coal in the other day, one of those bitter cold days, and when the driver tried to get it down the chute it was frozen into a solid cake. He had to climb up on the wagon and break it up. I really believe that it was half coal and half ice. I asked the driver what he meant by it, and he said that a load of coal was always watered before it left the yards, in order to settle the dust. He assured me that this wasn't done until after it had been weighed, but I have my doubts. Think what a graft it would be to water it first, let it freeze and then charge the customer for the weight of the ice that had formed."

—Miss Elsie Price, of Belleville, who has been the guest of Miss Ada McBain for several weeks, returned to her home yesterday.

—Mr. John Fitzpatrick, who has been under treatment in St. Joseph's Hospital, is improving. His case considered less serious.

—Mr. M. L. Henry has received a letter from his brother, Ernie, who is a member of the South African Constabulary, in which the writer states that he is enjoying life in South Africa very much.

—Mr. George Dixon, who has been visiting in town for the past few days, left yesterday for the North-west. He will visit Toronto, Chicago and other places en route.

—The Rev. James W. Adams, V.C., who is the only clergyman who has won the Victoria Cross, has been appointed one of the Chaplains in Ordinary to the King, is a brother-in-law of Maj.-Gen. A. C. Toker, who has many relatives living in this neighborhood, and other parts of Canada.

—Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Dunlop celebrated their 57th wedding anniversary yesterday. It is just 60 years since Mrs. Dunlop came to Peterborough with her father, the late Hon. A. T. Stewart. She was then a little girl and can relate many amusing incidents connected with the history of Peterboro since that time. The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Dunlop hope they will live to celebrate many more wedding anniversaries.

The Price of Eggs

"Eggs are a great luxury just now," said a well known citizen to The Times, yesterday. "I see by the papers that they are quoted at 40c per dozen in New York," he continued.

"They will soon be cheaper in the States," added our Horse Editor, "for Uncle Sam has just secured a German Hennery."

St. Luke's Church Notes

The Womens' Auxiliary will hold its annual meeting this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The meeting will be preceded by a service in the church at 3 p.m., when the rector will give an address on "Qualifications for Christian Work." After the service the business meeting will begin for the election of officers and other important matters. A full attendance is requested. Rev. W. L. Armitage will preach in St. Luke's this evening at 8 o'clock.

The Cause of Dyspeptic Pains

They arise from the formation of gas owing to improper digestion. A very prompt and efficient remedy is Polson's Nerviline. It relieves the distention instantly, and by its stimulating action on the stomach aids digestion. Nerviline cures dyspeptic pains by removing the cause. Nerviline is also highly recommended for cramps, colic, summer complaint and inflammation. Sold in large 25c. bottles everywhere.

Death of Miss Luny.

Friends will regret to hear of the death of Miss Lucretia Ann Luny, daughter of the late John Luny, which occurred yesterday at the residence of her sister, Mrs. Wm. Wand, Lake st., Ashburnham. The deceased lady who was 68 years of age, had been in poor health for some time, but had only been seriously ill for a day or two. She was a lady highly esteemed by friends. The funeral will take place from Mrs. Wand's residence, Lake street, Ashburnham, to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

THEIR LAST RESTING PLACE

Funeral of the Late Mrs. W. H. Gordon Yesterday Afternoon

The funeral of Mrs. Margaret E. Gordon, wife of Mr. W. H. Gordon, took place yesterday afternoon from the family residence, No. 136 London street, at 2.30 o'clock, and was very largely attended. A large number of beautiful floral tributes were placed on the coffin by the many friends of the deceased. The beautiful burial service of the Presbyterian church was held at the house, where Rev. Dr. Torrance officiated. At the grave, the usual service was conducted.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. D. H. Kerneghan, Wm. Langford, W. H. Moore, Robt. Harrison, J. W. Carey, G. W. Powell.

MUST BE SHOWN

Coffee Drinkers Require Proof

When persons insist on taking some kind of food or drink that causes disease it is not fair to blame a doctor for not curing them.

Coffee keeps thousands of people sick in spite of all the doctor can to to cure them. There is but one way to get well. That is to quit coffee absolutely; a great help will be to shift over to Postum Food Coffee.

A case of this kind is illustrated by Mrs. E. Kelly, 223—8th Ave., Newark, N.J., who says, "I have been ailing for about eight years with bilious trouble and indigestion. Every doctor told me to give up coffee. I laughed at the idea of coffee hurting me, until about three years ago I was taken very bad and had to have a doctor attend me regularly.

The doctor refused to let me have coffee, but prescribed Postum Food Coffee. I soon got to making it so well that I could not tell the difference in taste between Postum and the common coffee.

I began to improve right away and have never had a bilious spell since giving up coffee and taking on Postum. When I started I weighed 100 pounds, now I weigh 130. My friends ask what has made the change and, of course, I tell them it was leaving off coffee and taking up Postum.

I know husband will never go back to the old fashioned coffee again. You can use my name if you print this letter for I am not ashamed to have the public know just what I have to say about Postum and what it has done for me."

THE C. P. R. CAR SHOPS

What the Immense New C.P.R. Works Will Be Able to Turn Out

150 Locomotives a Year—Commencement of the Plans Await Mr. Henry Goldmark's Arrival.

Montreal, Feb. 26—Mr. Henry Goldmark, the expert engineer who has been consulted by the Canadian Pacific in regard to the new workshops, has severed his connection with the Swift Packing Company, of Chicago, and will, it is understood, be permanently attached to the engineering staff of the road. Mr. Goldmark has acted as engineer for the Swifts for the great establishment in Chicago, which is admitted to be the most complete on the continent. He also was consulting engineer for the Chicago and North-western railroad, and superintended the building of their shops. It is understood the executive is considering the reconstruction of the Chief Engineer's department, and that in the near future the work will be divided up into two sections, bridge work to be under the charge of Mr. H. E. Vautlet, and maintenance under that of Mr. Peterson.

Mr. McNicholl, second vice-president and general manager, who returned from Winnipeg yesterday, is figuring on the capacity of the works. The car shops will probably take out from 20,000 to 25,000 cars a year, and the locomotive shops one hundred to one hundred and fifty engines a year. The plans will not be commenced until Mr. Goldmark arrives.

LAID AT REST

Funeral of Miss L. Constance Thompson Took Place Yesterday Afternoon

The funeral of Miss L. Constance, daughter of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, took place from the rectory yesterday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock. A large number of sorrowing friends and acquaintances followed the remains to their last resting place. The deceased young lady was of a very bright and cheerful manner and drew to her side a number of steadfast friends who are deeply grieved at the death of one so young, and whose life was so full of promise. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. P. Wilson and Rev. D. O. Crossley.

The floral tributes were many and beautiful, showing the deep respect of many friends for the deceased. The remains were interred in Little Lake Cemetery.

THE LATE ROBERT M'INTYRE

A Well Known and Highly Respected Resident of Keene is Dead

Mr. Robert McIntyre, one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Keene, died on Monday at his residence, at the age of 60 years. Mr. McIntyre was a well known business man, and was also well known in curling circles, in which sport he took a deep interest. He was also known as a crack shot during his connection with the 57th regiment. In '66 he volunteered for service during the Fenian raid, for which he received a medal a few years ago.

About 30 years ago he married Margaret, daughter of the late Richard Reid, who with one son, John, of Indiana, and two daughters, Mrs. Wm. McFarlane, of Keene, and Mrs. Wm. Kindred, of town, are left to mourn his death. The funeral will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock. The service will be held in the Keene Presbyterian church.

Paine's Celery Compound

IS THE GREAT LIBERATOR FROM DISEASE AND SUFFERING

When All Other Medicines and Agencies Fail, Paine's Celery Compound Will Restore Lost Health

General good health depends upon the perfect action of the nervous currents, the vigor of the circulation of the blood and condition of the digestive organism.

If you are rundown, have no energy, feel lifeless, useless, fretful or despondent, use at once Paine's Celery Compound, and note well the great change. If you are a victim of neuralgia, rheumatism, dyspepsia, liver or kidney troubles, sleeplessness or headache, be assured that any of these ailments can be forever banished by the honest use of Paine's Celery Compound. This great and popular medicine is the noblest and happiest gift to suffering men and women that the world knows of. Mrs. E. Neary, Port Williams, N. S., tells of her experience with Paine's Celery Compound as follows:

"I have much pleasure in testifying to the beneficial effects of Paine's Celery Compound. I suffered for about five years with chronic dyspepsia and weakness of the heart. I had tried several other medicines but all to no purpose. No relief came until I used Paine's Celery Compound, which helped me at once, in fact it saved my life; I cannot recommend Paine's Celery Compound too highly, for I believe it to be the best medicine ever prepared."

Peterboro Double the Score At Newmarket

The Peterborough hockey team gave the Newmarket sports a big surprise last night when they put it over the hockey team of that place by a score of 6 to 3, Winning the round by 9 goals. This being the last round of the semi finals it leaves Peterborough to go up against the winners of Galt and Collingwood who play a sudden death game in Toronto as soon as ice can be obtained.

The young lady hockeyists of the town have got into the game again and will chase the puck on the ice with the young ladies' hockey team of Port Hope providing that arrangements can be made to obtain the rink for Thursday night, and the ice is good.

Nervous Dyspepsia

How it shakes one up, invades sleep, destroys strength, adds a real misery to life. Not the stomach but the nerves are affected. Starved nerves make the whole trouble. NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S
Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil seepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

MACKENZIE'S COLUMN MAKES A GOOD HAUL AND SEVERAL BURGERS TAKEN

Prince Nicholas Tries Ineffectually to Raise Money for Armaments--Scene in the French Chamber.

London, Feb. 26.—A despatch to The Times from Ermel says that Col. Mackenzie's column, operating near Lake Chrissie, in the southeastern Transvaal, surprised Hans Grobelar's small laager, capturing Stephanus Grobelar, Corporals Vandermewe and Schalkmeyer, prominent burghers, who have been active in encouraging resistance in the Ermelo district. Four other influential burghers were also taken.

MONTENEGRO WANTS A WAR LOAN.

London, Feb. 26.—A despatch from Vienna to The Times says the object of the recent visit of Prince Nicholas of Montenegro, to St. Petersburg is chiefly to raise a loan of tenmillion francs, which he failed to float in Rome and Paris. The Prince told the Russian authorities that he wanted the money to spend upon armaments to check Austria's encroachments beyond the Balkans. It is said that he failed to interest Russia.

SCENE IN THE FRENCH CHAMBER.

London, Feb. 26.—A despatch from Paris to The Times says that in the Chamber of Deputies, a member interrupted another deputy, calling him a Communist. A Socialist retorted that the appelation was an honor, and all the Socialists rose, shouting and singing. The President protested vainly, and both sides shouted wildly. Order was gradually restored.

REDUCTION OF THE SUGAR DUTY.

London, Feb. 26.—A despatch from Brussels to The Times says that the British delegates to the International Sugar Conference, insist on a reduction of the five franc import duty exacted by Germany and Austria. These states suggest a compromise, which the French and English delegates join in opposing.

ITALY TAKES ENERGETIC STEPS.

London, Feb. 26.—A despatch from Rome to The Times says the Italian Government is taking energetic measures for the preservation of order, and warships have been ordered to Naples, Leghorn and Genoa.

BRITISH ADVANCES IN CAPE COLONY.

Pretoria, Feb. 26.—General French, who commands the troops in Cape Colony, has made preparations for an extensive movement against the Boers who still remain in the colony. Commandant Maritz is in supreme command of the Boer forces, and his lieutenants include Pyber, Bouwers, Theron and Smuts. It is understood that in anticipation of the British advance the Boers have been sending large quantities of grain into Bushman Land, the vast, dry, and partly unsurveyed region, bounded on the west by Namaqualand, and on the north by the Orange River. It is expected that the Boers will retire into this district, where pursuit will be difficult, and campaigning very arduous, owing to the scarcity of water.

PROGRESS OF THE BOER WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

A Cheerful Outlook Caused by the Large Number of Boers Who are in British Ranks

London, Feb. 26—There were over 800 Boers enlisted last week in the British service. These men are earnest and anxious to bring the war to a speedy close. This is the most cheering news that has come from South Africa for a long time. There is said to be signs of general sentiment in this direction in the concentration camps. It is impossible to hear of such a movement without misgivings as to its reality and genuineness. The majority of the Boers are so wily and tricky that one is irresistibly impelled to doubt the good faith of any of them. On the other hand, it would be impossible for anything to occur more pregnant with hope as to a peaceful settlement after the war is over or more calculated to give the lie in trumpet tones to the slanders with which Europe has been filled by men who have thought to serve their country by falsehood. In the English parliament the anti-war sentiment has expressed itself, but recognises that it has not the country with it. There are many criticisms of army methods which may well be remembered later and there are many grumblings, of course, over the war burdens, but the nation as a whole simply sets itself more determinedly to the uphill pull and every scowl and sneer from the continent helps this determination. The people evidently want those in whose hands the war is now to be allowed to end it and properly settle matters after it. Except in the case of the Indian Mutiny there has always been in Great Britain an anti-war party, which is a good thing in itself. It is not always an advantage, however, that an embittered opposition should have the settlement of things immediately after a war, as it may be too precipitate in sacrificing the fruits of hard won victories. Of this sort of thing we have ourselves a poignant reminder in the French shore difficulty in Newfoundland.

Britain will Adopt Protection

London, Feb 26.—An important conference will be held in London next week, March 6. It is a gathering of parties from all parts of the United Kingdom to discuss the advisability of dropping the idea of a free market, which has so long been the means of keeping England and her colonies commercially apart, to the advantage of foreign countries. The Council of the United Empire Trade League have decided upon this course to obtain an expression of public opinion before the Government bring down the budget. While the principal aim of the conference is described by the Times as the development of trade between all parts of the Empire upon mutually advantageous terms and on a preferential basis, the council hopes that all schools of fiscal thought, in the direction of safeguarding British interests, whether agricultural, manufacturing or other, will be represented. Mr. James Lowther, M.P., will preside at the meeting, and he will be supported by Lord Masham, Sir Howard Vincent, many members of Parliament and representatives of industrial from all parts of the country.

The signs increase that the people of Great Britain are awakening to the necessity of adapting their tariff to unmistakable conditions. The Times says: "The increased fiscal hostility to British goods of foreign countries, the necessity owing to the war for a considerable addition to domestic taxation, and the strong inclination in South Africa, New Zealand and Australia to accord a customs preference to the manufactures of the mother country, after the example of Canada, have given a renewed impetus to the feeling, long prevalent in many quarters, that the time has come for a revision of the free market system inaugurated by Mr. Cobden, especially in the absence of reciprocity in any part of the world. The recent letters in the Times by Sir Robert Giffen, so long the statistical spokesman of the Board of Trade, have had a marked influence, it is said, in this direction."

WAR, NOT TRIBUTE

Hon. David Mills Utters Some Homely Truth for American Ears

London, Feb. 26— David Mills, the Canadian statesman, in an article in the March number of the Empire Review, written while Mr. Mills was Canadian minister of justice, bitterly assails President Roosevelt's and Senator Lodge's interpretation of Monroeism. He declares that the United States "are so long enamored of their own political institutions and so devoted to self worship that they think no others are deserving of admiration."

Mr. Mills says that it would be to the state of Maine's commercial advantage to enter the Canadian federation, and says, "America has no more right to dictate to South and Central America than to Canada." In conclusion Mr. Mills quotes the U. S. reply to the Barbary States: "We prefer war to tribute," adding, "The United States must not be surprised when the occasion arises if she receives from European statesmen an answer not unlike that she gave to the Day of Algiers. It is certain that a similar conclusion will be reached by Europe whenever an attempt is made to enforce against any great European power so degrading a species of vassalage as that embraced by the Monroe doctrine."

Items of Interest.

Paris, Feb. 26.—The series of Festivities to celebrate the centenary of the birth of Victor Hugo, which will last until Sunday next, opened to-day with a grand ceremony within the Pantheon under the auspices of the Government. President Loubet, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, the Premier, and other members of the Cabinet and the Chamber of Deputies, representative delegations from the Institute, and the other state bodies, including the leading lights of art, science and literature in France, and deputations from the various lycees and educational institutions, were present.

The ceremony began shortly after ten in the morning, and was concluded at 11.45 p.m. The program included eulogistic orations by M. Leygues, Minister of Public Instruction, and M. Hanotaux, president of the Institute; recitals of several of Victor Hugo's poems by members of the Comedie Francaise and the rendering of hymns based on Hugo's works by M. Delmas of the Opera, and a choir of 150 men and women. The band of the Republican Guards and an orchestra, numbering 180 persons, performed the instrumental part of the exercises.

The scene within the Pantheon was most imposing and full of color, owing to the brilliant toilettes of the ladies and the uniforms of the officials.

In all the public schools of France the day was celebrated by lectures on the life of France's national poet and by readings from his works by the professors.

CUBAN POST OFFICE FRAUDS.

Havana, Feb. 26.—Senor Zayas began yesterday, in the trial of the Cuban post office fraud cases, his argument in behalf of Charles F. W. Neely. He said he would discredit W. H. Reeves, former deputy auditor, and his testimony should have no weight. The prosecution's case rested he said, largely on evidence bearing the Government's stamp, official reports and facts and figures furnished by Washington, yet in the reports of the Secretary of War, and the Postmaster-General, of receipts and expenditures in the department of Cuba there was a difference of $103,000 in expenditures, and the experts' reports differed from both of these. He spoke at length on the extradition of Neely, and said the case was illegal from the start. Under Spanish law, he contended, the court had no right to ask for the extradition of Neely. "The fiscal has claimed," concluded Senor Zayas, "that the United States postal code covers the case, but that code cannot annul our laws of extradition."

WILL STAND HER TRIAL.

Butler, Pa., Feb. 26.—Three charges have been laid against Mrs. Kate Soffel, the wife of the Pittsburg jail warden, one alleging the crime of aiding in the escape of murderers and two alleging felonious assault and battery. The woman is now fully recovered from her wounds.

Malt Breakfast Food

Bestows a Fresh, Rosy and Healthy Complexion

This is a fact that has been frequently demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of a multitude of people. The fact that Malt Breakfast Food is a predigested food, a blood enricher, an aid to digestion, easily assimilated and rich in concentrated nutriment, combine to make it a health food that assuredly bestows a fresh, rosy and healthy complexion to those who use it.

Foods that tax the powers of the organs of digestion have a tendency to produce eruptions, skin troubles and disfigurements of the face. If you would be always well and hearty and have a clear and clean complexion, use Malt Breakfast Food regularly every morning. No other breakfast food is so delicious, palatable, and satisfying. Ask your grocer for it.

CAINESVILLE CORNERS.

—A very enjoyable evening was spent at the residence of Mr. P. Quinlan, on Thursday last, when a party of young people were hospitably entertained.

—Mr. Tom O'Brien was the guest of of Mr. Pat Conroy Sunday last.

—Mr. Edward Fitzgerald gave a talk on pitchholes and Daniel O'Callaghan has taken the contract of filling them in with sawdust. Dan always likes to keep things in shape.

—Mr. Tom O'Brien and Mr. John Conroy have made the purchase of two fast horses for the races.

INDIAN RIVER.

—Times are more than hustling around Indian River.

—Mr. Maurice O'Leary and Miss Mary were in Norwood on Sunday.

—Mr. S. Murphy has started up a new factory at Indian River.

—Dr. Smith has a new horse for spring work.

—Mr. A. Whibbs has bought out P. G. Maker & Co., and intends starting up a second hand buggy factory.

It Will Give You an Appetite

ANTI-ENGLISH OPINION MANUFACTURED ABROAD

George C. Musgrave Contributes Able Article About Pro-Boer Foreign Papers

London, Feb. 26.—Geo. C. Musgrave, a well known English writer, has contributed the following article on the foreign pro-Boer press:

"History shows few examples in which a cause could enlist for its purpose the mutual animosity of nations without touching conflicting interests. When Dr. Leyds was appointed foreign representative of a pastoral people without power to conclude a treaty, at a salary greater than that of the Viceroy of India, he was able to harness for his purpose the centres of Anglophobia from St. Petersburg to San Francisco. After the outbreak of war these anti-British elements were easily stirred into activity by a few subsidized agitators and a supply of doctored news. With judicious log-rolling public opinion acts on the snowball principle. Adherents to the Boer cause were won in shoals. Each centre soon became self-supporting and finally remunerative, until, with perhaps three exceptions, the movement in all civilized countries is reaching very dangerous proportions.

"The recent outbreak in Germany was but a single manifestation of the widespread agitation that is growing ominously every week, a source of danger that we cannot afford to regard with complacency. Columns of calumny are issued daily in several languages from Dr. Leyds' headquarters, and transmitted by subsidized news agencies to every corner of Europe. By systematized distribution even the smallest provincial papers receive columns of war "news" gratis and the numbers of readers of each inspired story are without precedent. The cost of this anti-British campaign is, of course, enormous, but it is more than covered by the growing subscriptions to the cause.

PRO-BOER LECTURERS

"Europe and the United States are flooded by pro-Boer lecturers, who collect large sums for the women and children in the concentration camps. These emissaries deduct expenses on a high scale, but are still able to transmit a substantial surplus to the Transvaal Legation, and a return of official thanks to the local committees satisfies the donors that their gifts have reached the proper quarters. As much as $5,000 has been gathered in at single meetings in the United States. Recent subscriptions from Germany have averaged $5,000 a week. One very ordinary lecturer who absconded last month after a tour through France and Belgium, was proved by his lists to have collected 18,000 francs for the women and children in a few weeks. On this scale it is easy to estimate how lucrative the plea of humanity is proving to the European exchequer of the republics. There is no record of these funds having been sent to the camps. Despite their assertions to the contrary, the only hope of Mr. Kruger's followers is to inflame public opinion to the point of forcing a crisis when some diplomatic complication arises. And to most of these advisers, who are encouraging the steadfast burghers in the field to prolong a useless agony, peace would mean the end of large salaries and attractive appointments.

"Since leaving South Africa in 1900 journalistic wanderings in many lands have given me voluminous notes of the ramifications of the anti-British propaganda. In the United States, the local consuls for the late Republics and Mr. Montague White received the unanimous support of the Irish factions directly war broke out. They soon won over the German element, but obtained little hold on the sympathies of true Americans.

"In France pro-Boerism in general is merely recrudescent Anglophobia that may be traced in part to history, but greatly to our exasperating habit of unconscious superiority, which we could appreciate only by seeing ourselves through foreign glasses. In its pro-Boer garb this hostility may be gauged by milestones from the South.

"Considering ties of race and religion the attitude of Holland is not surprising.

After Holland, where public use of English evokes insult, Denmark proves a refreshing change, as the Danish are eminently fair, and the press is impartial.

KRUGER THINKS BOERS WILL YET BE FREE

Tells Pastor He Hopes Americans Will Cry Out Against British Atrocitiee

THE OLD MAN UNRECONCILED

He Says That the War Was Forced Upon the Boers by the British

New York, Feb. 26—Rev. Dr. Van Broekhuisen, who arrived in this country recently in the interests of the Boer cause, says that in an interview which he had with President Kruger previous to leaving Holland, "the Grand Old Man" of the Transvaal said that he felt confident that God would yet crown with success the cause of liberty in South Africa and that he, President Kruger, would return to his native land as President of a free people.

"Tell the American people," said Kruger, "that we did not start this cruel war. It was forced upon us."

Rev. Dr. Van Broekhuisen says that very few Boers with rifles have been captured by the English; that most of those who are in the British prison camps are non-combatants, old men, women and children. He hopes the American people will cry out against the barbarous methods which England is adopting to destroy the independence of the South African Republics. The murder of Scheepers and others, he says, will bring down the vengeance of heaven on those whose hands are red with their blood.

Rev. Dr. Van Broekhuisen was pastor of President Kruger's church in Pretoria previous to the breaking out of the war, and received part of his education in the University of Edinburgh. In a speech delivered a few evenings ago before the Executive Committee of the American Society for Freedom, in the Morton House, he declared that the Boers would not accept anything short of complete independence, and that the war would be carried on while one man of them remained to bear a rifle.

BRITAIN'S MILITARY PRESTIGE ENHANCED

The Vast Increase in the Military Stength of the British Empire

IT IS NOW SUPREME IN EUROPE

Her Prestige as a Fighting Nation Never So High as at the Present Moment

London, Feb. 26—Not the least momentous consequence of the South African war is the vast increase which it has brought about in the military strength of Great Britain. The press of continental Europe and of the United States affects to believe that the resistance of the Boers has shaken the foundations of the Empire, but the newspapers merely give voice to the wish of their readers, and the foreign governments know well that the popular view is quite erroneous. It is probably no exaggeration to say that Great Britain is at the present time the foremost military power in the world. Counting the Indian army, she could bring nearly half a million seasoned soldiers into the field, under officers who have waged war on a grand scale, and who, if service is the advantage which military men believe it to be, ought to be able to sweep the forces of any continental country out of their path.

But it is not merely the improvement in her army which has raised Britain's prestige in Europe. Her rivals and enemies on the continent have perhaps been impressed quite as much by the rapidity with which she transported a force of 250,000 men, with munitions of war, a distance of many thousand miles across the ocean, as by the effectiveness of that force. Till she performed it the feat was considered impossible, and such a demonstration of power probably did more to raise her in the estimation of the rulers of Europe than a successful war would have done. There is little doubt but that the powers would have interfered in the South African war if Britain had been in the crippled condition portrayed by the continental press, and their studied courtesy is ample evidence that whatever may be the belief of the people the governments are under no delusion as to the power of the Empire.

Twenty Years of Bronchitis

Captain Dunlop, of Kingston, commander of the steamer "Bohemian," of the R. & O fleet, suffered unceasingly for twenty years, and although he took treatment all that time permanent relief was not obtained until he used Catarrhozone, which cured him quickly and permanently. BRITISH CONVOY TAKEN CAPTURED BY THE BOERS

Severe Fighting Takes Place Southwest of Klerksdorp in the Transvaal

OUTPOST LINE IS RUSHED BY THE BOERS

Six Hundred Burghers Attempted to Break Through Near Bethasberg and Many of Them Succeeded

London, Feb. 26.— Rumors are current on the Stock Exchanges of Paris, Brussels, and London that Gen. Louis Botha, the Boer commander-in-chief, is negotiating with Lord Milner for the surrender of the Boers.

Mr. Chamberlain was questioned in the House of Commons to-day regarding the report that Botha had approached Lord Milner with a suggested basis of settlement, the condition being that none of the Boer leaders should be exiled from South Africa. Mr. Chamberlain replied that there was no truth in that peace rumor or in others.

BOER DRIVE IN CAPE COLONY

Pretoria, Feb. 26. — General French has inaugurated a move against the Boers in Cape Colony similar to that recently adopted by Lord Kitchener against De Wet's forces.

Great interest attaches to this advance against the combined commandoes of Boers and rebels who have for many weeks been making themselves at home in the north-western and part of Western Cape Colony.

The strength of the enemy is unknown, but it is probably not less than 1,000 many of whom, however, are said to be unarmed rebels. The supreme command is in the hands of Commandant Maritz, who distinguished himself some months ago by raiding for horses within 30 miles of Cape Town. Under him are Commandants Pyper (successor to Scheepers), Bouwers, and Theron, and Mr. Smuts, formerly Transvaal State Attorney.

The last-mentioned will be remembered as the leader of the attack on the Lancers' camp near Tarkastad last September, in which the British sustained serious losses.

Commandant Maritz, in anticipation of the British advance, has been sending large quantities of grain into Bushman Land, the vast, dry, and partly unsurveyed region bounded on the west by Namaqualand and on the north by the Orange River. It is expected that the Boers will retire into this district, where pursuit will be difficult and campaigning very arduous, owing to the scarcity of water.

KRUGER'S SECURITIES SOLD

Paris, Feb. 26. —Securities valued at 6,000,000. ($1,200,000), belonging to President Paul Kruger, have recently been sold here. The money will be spent in furthering the Boer propaganda in Europe and America.

CASE OF DESTITUTION

The Graham Family in Dummer in Great Want—Two Children Taken to the Shelter

Mr. George Cochrane, agent of the Childrens' Aid Society, and Mr. Henry, caretaker, visited a home near Gilchrist bay in Dummer on Tuesday and found a family named Graham in a very destitute condition. The father has not been working this winter. The mother is very ill and there was nothing in the house for the children to eat. The cabin was about 12 x 12 and as there was no food in the place it was decided to bring two of the children, a boy of 10 and a girl of 8 years to the Children's Shelter. The father objected but he was given a warning and some sound advice by Mr. Cochrane and then he consented to the children being taken away. The children are seemingly rather smart and are receiving careful attention under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Henry at the Shelter.

LOCAL LEGAL

SINGLE COURT.

Before Street, J.

Re Bradburn and Turner. — Judgment (G. A. B.) on petition under the vendor's and purchasers' act. The testator Thomas Bradburn, by his will, dated 12 of January, 1900, in the first place appointed his three sons, who were the vendors, to be his executors, directing them to pay all his lawful debts out of his estate. Then followed devises and bequests of real and personal property to various members of his family. These were followed by a clause, declaring that all the foregoing property was to be free and clear of every incumbrance whatsoever. The next clause was as follows;—"I do hereby will the following property, subject to the payment of all my just debts; and when all my debts are fully paid, the balance shall be divided amongst my said four children,—Thomas, William, Rupert and Mabel, share and share alike. The property which I will to my children, share and share alike, is situated as follows." Then came a list of the lands referred to in this clause, covering the land which was the subject of the petition. Then the will proceeded; —"I would here suggest what I consider the best means of protection for all parties interested in this my will, to make no division of any of my property, but pool it altogether, and divide the proceeds share and share alike............The property willed and described herein is intended to go to the parties direct." Held, that the case came within the provisions of sec. 18 of R. S. O. ch. 129, under which, when a charge for debts is created, but the estate is not vested in any trustee or trustees by the terms of the will, a power of sale is given to the executors, and purchasers are (G. sec. 19) relieved from the necessity of inquiring as to the due execution of the power. Therefore, the executors can make title to these lands without the concurrence of any of the devisees. The children's rights are given to them only in the residue after payment of the debts, and the latter references in the will must be read accordingly. (2) The will contained various gifts to the widow, including an annuity of $1,500, payable quarterly, and declared that she was to accept them in lieu of dower. The petition stated that, after the death of the testator, the widow elected to, and did, accept the provision made for her in lieu of dower, and had since received regularly the annuity. Held, that the purchaser was entitled either to a release from her or to a declaration from her in a form sufficient to estop her as against him from claiming dower, for her receipt of the annuity was only prima facie evidence against her, and she might, in spite of it, be let in to claim her dower in case it should appear that she had elected in that proper knowledge of the effect of her so doing. Order declaring accordingly. No costs. A. P. Poussette, K.C., for the vendors. R.A. Peck, Peterborough, for the purchasers.

A PARABLE

Which Illustrates the Advantages This G. P. A. Offers to the Advertiser

A Canadian traveller, crossing Europe, bought a first-class coach-ticket for a day's ride through a mountainous country where there was no railroad.

After riding on the coach for some time it occurred to him that it was very foolish to have bought a first-class ticket, when all passengers on the vehicle apparently fared alike. And so, with that famous Canadian characteristic, he appealed to the driver as to "What he got on his first-class ride that the second and third-class passengers did not?"

The driver assured him that his value would appear before the end of the journey, and it was fully acknowledged by the Canadian traveller when, as they came to the bottom of a seven-mile hill, just after dinner, the driver threw down the reins and made this announcement: "First-class passengers, please keep your seats! Second-class passengers, get out and walk! Third-class passengers, get out and push!"

There is an exact parallel to this in the newspaper advertising business. When an ad. is put in the Times an advertiser may be excused from wondering what he gets that the advertisers in other papers, who pay a less price, do not secure. But it is sure to appear before long in greatly increased business.

Advice to Mothers

If your little boy or girl comes home with a sore throat, the first thing to do is to rub the throat and chest with Polson's Nerviline. Don't be afraid to use Nerviline freely—a whole bottleful wouldn't burn or blister the tenderest skin. Rub it until all taken up by the pores, and just before the child goes to sleep give him a glass of hot water into which 20 drops of Nerviline has previously been stirred. This is a sure, pleasant and speedy cure. Large bottle 25c.

Violent Crime on the Increase

New York, Feb. 26.—In the annual report of the Board of City Magistrates of the First Division, including Manhattan and the Bronx, submitted to the Board at the last meeting by Magistrate Joseph C. Deuel, important statistics were presented and recommendations made.

Particularly interesting was a sketch of police arrests in New York from the years 1861 to 1876, inclusive, with tabulation showing comparison with statistics of each of those and of recent years.

In comparison with the present, it is shown that medical malpractice and extortion have about held their own; that abduction, felonious assault, burglary, disorderly conduct, homicide, grand larceny, and malicious mischief are now more frequent, and that arson simple assault, bigamy, blackmail, conspiracy, forgery, kidnapping, petit larceny, libel, perjury, receiving stolen goods and robbery are now less, proportionately.

MANY WOMEN ARRESTED.

During 1901 there were 76,425 men and 18,139 women arraigned in the seven police courts of the First Division, making a total of 94,564 prisoners, Magistrate Deuel reports. This is an increase over the previous year of 2,158. Male prisoners constituted 80 per cent. and female prisoners 20 per cent, of the total arrests. The percentages for 1900 were 78.4 and 21.6 respectively.

Excluding the year 1879, the arrests for excise violations were fewer in number than for any year covered by these reports, and a smaller number was held for trial than during any of those years. In 1879 the number held for trial was 790 out of a total of 917 arrests, and 306 were held for trial during 1901 out of 977 arrests.

Cordial approval is given to the system of probating prisoners above the age of sixteen years, and it is strongly recommended that a reformatory for offenders between sixteen and twenty years be put in operation. Good results of the probationary system are set forth at length.

THE ASSESSMENT LAWS

There will, of course, be no action taken at the present session of the Legislature on the Assessment Commission report. A good precedent is to be found in the Drainage Act. Previous to 1890 the law with reference to the important work by which so much valuable arable land has been added to the Province of Ontario was in such an unsatisfactory condition that the annual attempts to mend and patch it became a Parliamentary joke. In 1890 a Commission was appointed to consider the whole matter. It made its report, and a bill was framed on the lines of it, but not at once submitted to the House. It was, instead, sent to the clerk of every municipality in the Province, and to others likely to be interested in the matter, with an invitation to peruse and make suggestions if it was thought to be inadequate to meet the case. Suggestions were received and considered, and then, and not till then, was the bill presented to the House. It passed and became law in 1894, and but little has been heard of the ditches and watercourses act, except by way of humorous reminiscence, since. A similar course was adopted, it will be remembered, by the Dominion Government with respect to the criminal code. After being drafted it was sent to leading judges and lawyers in all parts of the Dominion, and many valuable suggestions were sent in with regard to it, and a number of them adopted. The code thus carefully framed has stood the test of experience very well. Assessment is a subject of the first importance, and it would be desirable to get the thought of the country on it if important changes are contemplated, and the course adopted in the cases mentioned would seem to be suitable for application in this case.

THE OLD TOWN BAND

Dedicated to Messrs. Frank J. P. Metheral, Battle Hudson, Geo. Stenson, Tom Rutherford, Billy Sanderson and others.

I mean the band of olden time, when you and I were boys,
When music to be sweet to us, must drown all other noise;
When martial noise entranced our ears and every feeling fired,
When uniforms with golden braid were all our hearts desired.

Oh, how those fellows marched about on every holiday!
The park was filled with music sweet,
the streets with bright array.
The townsfolks stood upon their steps,
the country folk, discreet,
With horses prancing to the tunes, drove up some other street.

The boys! Well, you can easy guess;
we shall not try to hide it.
Whenever that old band was out we fellows marched beside it.
We kept the step the bandsmen did and kept it quite as well
And always held our corner up when it was time to yell.

Perhaps they made some discords; perhaps the side horn blew
About three times as strong and loud
as they by right should do;
Perhaps the cymbals didn't clang exactly with the bass;
Perhaps the "B flats" missed some notes and tooted out of place.

But what cared we when we were boys? To our uncultured breast
"The Girl I Left Behind Me," was as good as Gliddon's best.
Our little backs would straighten up,
our thoughts would soar away—
The acme of our earthly bliss—to play a horn some day.

I've heard full many bands since then and paid to get a seat
I've heard them play their loudest airs and softly, sadly, sweet;
But never has my being thrilled with rapture more complete
Than when I heard old Beckett's band go marching down the street.

RUSSIAN DEAL WITH COREA

Island of Kojo and the Coast Near Chemulpo Not to be Leased

Yokohama, Feb. 26.—Advices from Seoul are to the effect that a convention has been concluded with the Russian Minister to Corea, by the terms of which China agrees not to lease or grant to any Power, company or individual the island of Kojo, the shore opposite or any part of the coast littoral to Chemulpo.

A Rural School Board.

SOME up-to-date teachers tell strange stories of their conversations with school trustees regarding some of the studies that have been added to "the three R's" in country schools. In "Max Adler's" new novel, "Captain Bluitt," appears the following passage, which will remind many teachers of something similar:

"I should like," said Director Robinson, "to ask what is this metric system that I find some of the children trying to learn?"

The principal explained the metric system.

"Nothing to do with hymns, with long metre and short metre and hallelujah metres?" asked Director Robinson, who sang in the Baptist choir.

The principal said it had not.

"Did I understand you to say," enquired Mr. Matlack, "that the system came from France?"

"Yes," responded the principal.

"There's another queer move," said Mr. Matlack, with strong emphasis. "You start in with an Italian poet, Dant, and then you fetch along a French system with names nobody can understand, and after a while I reckon you'll be flying the British flag in the front yard and singing 'God Save the Queen.' There's a good deal too much foreign influence. This country's good enough for me. I'm an American and this is an American school. I say fly the American flag and sing American songs, and have American systems and shove the foreigners out. We can run our own business. Why don't you get a bust of General Washington?"

Director Ferguson asked if he might be permitted to interrogate the principal, and having obtained permission, he asked:

"Don't you think we are going just a little too fast?"

"In what particular?" enquired the principal.

"Well, in putting in this metric system, just at this time, for example."

"I think myself," interposed the president, "that the movement is somewhat permature."

"And then," continued Director Ferguson, "I found my boy last night rassling with algebra and nearly crying over it. I told him to drop it, and I'd have it dropped in the school if I run the school. I never knowed no algebra, and I'll be satisfied if my boy makes out as well as I did."

The principal attempted briefly to indicate the nature and purposes of algebra.

"That's all very well, Mr. Brown," said Director Ferguson. "It's your business of course to care for such things, but we're a practical people, with no nonsense about us. Figgers is for figgerin', and letters is for letterin'. There's no use of tryin' to figger with letters while there's plenty of figgers to figger with. Now is there?"

"You see"—began the principal.

"I don't care to argue about it," said Mr. Ferguson, interrupting him, "but the fact is you can't any more substract 'a' from 'b,' like my boy was tryin' to do last night, than you can substract the dinner-bell from the poker. It ain't in the nature of things."

The principal did not reply.

"My boy also says," continued Mr. Ferguson, "that his teacher won't allow him to say knowed. Why not?"

"Knowed?" asked the principal. "K-n-o-w-e-d?"

"Yes, knowed. He says the teacher tried to make him say knew."

"Of course," said the principal. "Know, knew. That's right; there is no such word as knowed."

"I guess there is," answered Director Ferguson, with a scornful laugh.

"I guess so, too," echoed Mr. Matlack, "and it's a good deal better to say knowed than to be putting Dant (Dante) up on the shelf and bringing the children's minds under European influences."

"Knowed is not good English," said the principal.

"Maybe not," said Mr. Matlack, "but it's good American and that's the best there is."

"You say mowed," asked Mr. Ferguson, "and rowed, and show, showed, and stow, stowed, and glow, glowed, don't you?"

"Yes."

"Very well, then, you say know, knowed, and grow, growed, and hoe, hoed."

And Director Ferguson tipped back his chair and looked around him like a man who has just won a great victory.

New Use For Cigars.

A NEW YORK young man just back from a trip in Canada was telling his friends of the times he had had.

"We took a horse and a buckboard," said he, "from Xavier Station out into the woods for a day's shooting. When we got there of course we unhitched the horse and took off the harness. Then we went hunting.

"At night, when we came in to hitch up, hanged if we knew how to do it! In about an hour we got nearly all the harness on, but the old horse wouldn't let us put the bit in his mouth. We couldn't drive him without that.

"My companion said: 'Say, have you lots of cigars?'

"'Yes,' said I; 'but what has that to do with it?'

"'Well,' said he, 'we shall just sit down and smoke till that brute yawns!' And we did it."

Domestic Reform.

Once upon a time there was a Woman who married a Man to Reform him.

And she did.

She made him Quit his Evil Ways, and he did not Drink, nor Chew, nor Smoke, nor Swear, nor Stay out at Nights.

In fact, he became as Mild as Skim Milk.

Now, when this Result was Achieved, the Woman began to Worry. He had lost his Charm for her. She Discovered that she had been more Interested in his Faults than in his Virtues, because after she had Passed him out he didn't Assay worth a Cent along the Line of Good Qualities. He was simply a Negative Equation.

But the Man had Some Sense, after all. He saw what was Bothering her, so he Swore just a Little, and Drank just a Little, and Smoked occasionally, and took a Chew on the Sly.

Then she had the Fun of Reforming him all over Again. And she was perfectly Happy, because she could Point with Pride to him at regular Intervals.

Moral—A little Backsliding adds to the Interest of the Good Work.—Baltimore "American."

A school inspector, having a few minutes to spare after examining the school, put a few questions to the lower form boys on the common objects in the schoolroom.

"What is the use of that map?" he asked, pointing to one stretched across the corner of the room; and half a dozen shrill voices answered, in unconstrained articulation:

"It's to hide the teacher's bicycle, sir!"—"Wasp"

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

A Bank on Wheels.

ONE of the most brilliant ideas of modern times has just occurred to the local authorities which administer the public moneys of the town of Mezieres, in the Ardennes. The new scheme consists in an "automobile savings bank." The term requires some explanation.

The inventors apply it to a new sort of motor car which they are having built. The vehicle is propelled by electricity and contains four seats, one in front and apart from the others, for the driver. The three places behind are arranged round a revolving table in the middle of the car, one at each side and one at the rear of the vehicle. Writing desks are fitted over each of the three seats and devised in such a way that they can be either folded flat against the sides of the carriage inwardly or opened outwardly. The central table also contains desks, besides bookshelves and a small metallic strong-box. Such is the new automobile. The use to which the authorities of Mezieres intend to put their invention is as follows:

The car will travel round the country, making stoppages of an hour or so on prearranged days in the different localities of the department. The passengers will be two clerks of the local treasury administration and a cashier. They will carry with them a complete collection of savings bank books, registers and forms, and the third of the above-mentioned officials will be empowered to receive moneys. Your readers will have now divined the purpose of the financial authorities of Mezieres. It seems that these gentlemen, assembled in council lately, came to the conclusion that something should be done to encourage thrift among the peasantry of the Ardennes. On the other hand, it was recognized that the saving propensity was already very marked among the country folk. What was needed was that the administration should meet their wants halfway. The peasants put by their earnings thriftily enough, but frequently fail to invest them in savings banks because, especially in the busy summer months, they have little time for journeying to the few principal towns where the offices are situated. So the authorities determined upon sending the savings bank to the country folk instead of waiting any longer for the latter to find time to come to the office.

The description of the vehicle which the authorities have had built, according to their own designs, requires no further explanation except to say that the movable desks are intended for use by the public, hence the arrangement by which they can be opened outward over the road. It is reported that the scheme meets with the unqualified approval of the savings bank clerks, whose days hitherto throughout the fine season have been spent in musty offices. But, contrary to what might have been expected, the public does not look upon the innovation with unalloyed delight. Some suspicious persons have spread a rumor that the administrative motor car will not always convey savings bank clerks, but will occasionally bring—more often, perhaps, than would be desirable—that unwelcome visitor, the tax collector.

The Phraseology of Sport.

THE London "Outlook," in a recent number, while conceding that every sport and pastime should, naturally, have an especial phraseology, deplored the fact that this phraseology is becoming mere jargon. In its "palmy days" the P.R. could boast a language of its own; and one regrets to notice that the picturesque reporter is now doing the same disservice to cricket. When an eleven makes a bad start it is suffering from "rot and rout." One batsman is "breezy," another plays with "graceful assurance," a third is "cheaply dismissed." A score that progresses unevenly is "streaky," and a very favorite formula runs that So-and-So "played excellent cricket." This might reasonably be expected on a cricket field, where Bridge or Ping-pong would be somewhat out of place. After all, however, it is the billiard reporter who most savagely dislocates the vertebrae of the King's English. Not long ago one of the brotherhood varied the monotony of life by describing the red ball as a "pinky round."

After all, the most glaring examples of idiotic phraseology in the English papers are exceedingly tame beside those of our own, says the "Bookman." For instance, let us take the American equivalent for the English game of cricket. The knowing reporter writing a description of a game of baseball never makes the mistake of calling the ball "the ball." To him, of course, it is the "sphere," the "pellet," the "pea" or the "leather." A batsman never makes his base on balls; "he strolls" or he gets "a free pass to the first corner." He does not make a base hit, but "he singles" or he "slams the pea to the center garden." He does not strike out, but "he fans" or "he pounds the air." The pitcher does not pitch; he does "slab duty" or he "bends them" or he "passes them up." We might continue in this strain indefinitely.

To refer to a baseball team representing a certain city by its proper name would be to betray a woeful lack of knowledge and experience. A few years ago, after the veteran ballplayer Anson relinquished his leadership of the Chicago team, that team was, for a short time at the beginning of the season, without any nickname whatever. Sporting writers all over the country were in a state of chaos. The Chicago newspapers opened their columns to suggestions for a suitable sobriquet, and matters generally were unsettled and unsatisfactory until the significance of the desertion of Anson dawned upon one ingenious scribe, and the Chicagos immediately became "the Orphans." During the first two years of its career in the National League the New York team was known as the "Maroons." In 1885 this title was dropped for that of "the Giants," a term which at a period when the team was unpopular was modified to "the Joints." The Bostons are, of course, "the Beaneaters;" the Washingtons, "the Senators;" the Baltimores, "the Orioles," or "the Birds;" the Brooklyns are "the Trolley Dodgers."

She (scornfully)—I despise you from the bottom of my heart! He (cheerily)—Oh, well, there is always room at the top.

THE RACE

Does not depend on the start but on the finish. It's staying power which carries many a runner to victory. It's like that in business. Many a man starts off in the race for business success with a burst of speed which seems to assure victory. Presently he begins to falter and at last he falls and fails. The cause? Generally "stomach trouble." No man is stronger than his stomach. Business haste leads to careless and irregular eating. The stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition become diseased. The body is inadequately nourished and so grows weak.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It strengthens the stomach and so strengthens the whole body which depends on the stomach for the nourishment from which strength is made.

There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

Accept no substitute for the "Discovery." There is no medicine "just as good" for diseases of the stomach and allied organs.

"Your 'Golden Medical Discovery' has performed a wonderful cure," writes Mr. M. H. House, of Charleston, Franklin Co., Ark. "I had the worst case of dyspepsia, the doctors say, that they ever saw. After trying seven doctors and everything I could hear of, with no benefit, I tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and now I am cured."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation.

A Spider's Genius

"I HAVE considerable respect for the female spider, notwithstanding the fact that she does not treat the male very considerately," says a correspondent. "I had an opportunity last summer to watch a large one that had a web by the top of a decaying peach tree with so few leaves that it was in plain view. I caught sight of her first when watching some birds with my glass. She seemed to be climbing from the top of the tree on nothing to a telephone wire some fifteen feet away and somewhat higher than her web. When she reached the wire she went around it and then back. In studying the situation, I found the web was so located that it required a cable to hold it up, and the spider had in some way got one over the wire so far away. This cable was, of course, a slender silken thread which evidently she had thrown out, and on account of its lightness it had floated to the right place and become attached there by its glutinous properties. It seems remarkable that it should have adhered to the wire firmly enough to allow so large an insect to climb over it, which she did every day as long as I watched her, evidently to mend or strengthen it. The spider must have brains in which the ability to construct its web and adapt it to conditions is highly developed."

In an article in "Chambers' Journal" the following account of how the spider forms its silken threads is given:

"One of the most interesting features in the economy of spiders is their power of emitting slender threads of a silk-like substance called gossamer, with which most of them construct mesh-like nets, and a few long, dangling cables, by which they are buoyed through the air with nearly as much facility as though they had been furnished with wings. The apparatus provided by nature for elaborating and emitting this gossamer is a beautiful piece of mechanism. Within the animal there are several little bags or vesicles of a gummy matter; and these vesicles are connected with a circular orifice situated at the abdomen. Within this orifice are five little teats or spinnerets, through which the gossamer is drawn. It must not be concluded, however, that there is only one film of gossamer produced by each spinneret; the fact is, these teats are studded with thousands of minute tubes too small for the naked eye to perceive, and each of these emits a thread of inconceivable fineness. These minute tubes are known as spinnerules, and the films which proceed from them unite like so many strands of a rope to form the thread of gossamer by which a spider suspends itself. The finest thread which human mechanism can produce is like a ship's cable compared with the delicate films which flow from the spinnerules of the largest spider. The films are all distinctly separate on coming from the spinneret, but unite, not by any twisting process, but merely by their own glutinous or gummy nature. Thus the spinning apparatus of the disdained spider, when viewed by the eye of science, becomes one of the most wonderful pieces of animated mechanism known to man. The animal has great command over this apparatus, and can apply it at will as long as the receptacles within are replenished with the gummy fluid, but as soon as this gum is exhausted all its efforts to spin are fruitless, and it must wait till nature, by her inscrutable chemistry, has secreted it from the food which is devoured."—"Waverley Magazine."

An English mining engineer who has come out from the Yukon brings among other interesting things evidence that the higher the latitude the greater the latitude. Watching a poker game in which the stakes were heavy, he saw a player give himself four aces from the bottom of the pack. Burning with indignation at such shameless cheating, he turned to a bystander and whispered, "Did you see that?" "See what?" "Why, that fellow dealt himself four aces!" "Well, wasn't it his deal?"

John McNairn, Prospector.

By SID HOWARD.

GOOD old John McNairn is down from Whitefish to see about his mine. Whitefish, a map-forgotten station up on the north shore, be it known, is John's postoffice address, and where, tiring of the woods and hungry for the gentle ways of civilisation and the sight of petticoats and clean, smooth faces, John comes to camp in the sectionmen's house and watch the trains go by. Two passenger trains a day, one from the east and the other going back there—the east where the money is, where the soft-mannered, gentle-voiced women are, from whom John, having lived all his life in the woods, is now forever cut off.

For that is the saddest part of John's life. He is absolutely alone. His friends are dead or lost, and the relatives of his boyhood away down on the St. Lawrence. All the days of his manhood John has dwelt in the wilderness, in the lumber woods of the Gatineau and far up at the head waters of the Ottawa, where the mighty river rises on the lower Canada side. At the time of the construction, the great birth epoch of the West, the building of the C.P.R., John found himself with the trestle gang at Whitefish. And when the last rail was laid and the North Shore section was finally, after laborious years, complete, John took his money, made up his pack and struck north into the woods. It was a new country, and he intended to make a "stake" some day; then, in the hazy future, go back east, marry maybe, and settle down. He had a girl back there once, but she died. So John didn't care much where he went for a while. As he said, "There was no strings on him." There were no strings on him then, and there are none on him now. But sometimes, after playing the mouthorgan to him in his little log shack at night, he used to tell me that he "sort of wished he had somebody belongin' to him."

"But I've waited too long, I guess," he'd say. "Nobody'd take to me now, a wild man o' the woods like me."

He'd smile and sigh at the same time, with that lovable gentleness that belonged to him in spite of his grizzled, weather-beaten face.

"Do you think," he'd say, lighting his pipe and holding his hands so as to half hide his face, "do you think there be's any old spinsters, or widow-women, down there in Toronto who'd be willin' to stake out a claim up here with a feller like me? I guess not, eh?"

His face would brighten when we assured him there were plenty of unmarried ladies who would be only too glad to have him. He smiled always, but he didn't believe it, and neither did we. He had waited too long.

"There was one time here," he said once, "I had an ambition to board up the floor, but I never done it."

Two-inch cracks between the squared spruce logs which now separate John from the bare earth make his shack a decidedly precarious place when it comes to dropping little things for which one has any immediate requirement.

"A man grows careless," explained John. "You're easily satisfied when you're by yourself. It's let her go, Casey, any ways at all; good enough, good enough!"

He showed me a photograph one time of himself before he became a prospector—before the construction, as they date things up on the North Shore. It pictured a straight, vigorous man, with a strong, clean-shaved chin and a full moustache. Evidently roughing it in the bush had begun to tell during the last years. John was a much older man than the photo showed—older than the years since it was taken should have carried him. He handed me another picture too, a faded tintype affair, of a woman. He didn't tell me anything about that one.

Good old John! Owner of two or three mining locations that he half believes will one day make him a millionaire. If he lives long enough they may, but he's lived the heavier end of his life already. The North Shore is not a poor man's country. Money makes money the world over, and it takes capital to crush the gold out of the low-grade ore of the North Shore. But John hunts and traps and works in the other mines of the district, and waits. In the summer he goes out into the woods and the splintered granite hills alone with his gun and his pack-sack for weeks at a time, living on pork and biscuit and fried "pa'tridge," ragging at rock exposures with his geologist's hammer or crushing quartz in an iron bowl and washing it out to look for "colors" in the dregs. He hopes that the people down east will take a hold some time soon and put their money into the country and make it hum. "How are you pannin'?" is his "how do you do," and when you return the question he is always cheerful in his reply, "Pretty good." "She's bound to boom," he says when you ask about prospects in the North Shore country. "She can't help it. Man, dear, the mineral's here, ain't it?"

And recently he came to town! Good old John, with his camp-stained pack-sack instead of a trunk, and the rough, square-cut suit of tweed he ordered from the department store catalogue five years ago. But he disdained a collar, just as he disdained the water they offered him after his whiskey. He put up in a good down-town hotel, gave the manager his money to put in the safe, and hung uneasily about the smoking-room, going in to his meals with welcome relief. They set half a dozen knives and forks to each place at that hotel, but John gives his order to His Dress-suited Haughtiness—who would most surely die if it came to carrying a hundred-pound pack over a portage—with the quiet natural dignity of simplicity. He doesn't go right through the course, John. His idea is merely to coal up, to eat what will keep him working. Meat and bread and potatoes—and, "Hey, young feller, a dish o' tea"—that's all he calls for, and he eats with his knife as an unaffected matter of course. And then a pipe. Tea and tobacco are about the only artificial luxuries to be had in the bush. Sunshine and fine weather are the greatest comforts, but they are doled out spasmodically, by nature. A brush bed and a "white-man's fire" may be had for the swinging of an axe, but tea and tobacco come under a different head. John depends as utterly upon tea as a nervous old woman of sixty. But he couldn't find his tobacco the other day.

"Have you got a cigar?" he asked finally.

I had two pure mild Havanas, which a quarter had provided especially for this occasion—cool, mellow fifteen-centers. I passed him one. John had his old black pipe in his teeth. He took the cigar, and before I could stop him he had cut half of it up and packed it into his pipe.

"Good heavens, John!" I said. "Here's half a plug of T. & B."

"This is just as good," said John, holding his "six-day" match in the hollow of his brown leathery hands. "I'm just come out to settle up my affairs," he explained. "I've put it all in the hands of my l'yer. Soon's he says I kin go—shake hands—good-bye—away I go."

"Well, you'll stay and see the Duke?" I said.

"Oh, I've seen hundreds o' men," said John. "I seen his father close as you are, up in Ottawa. He was just a man. Men's men wherever you go. The Dook o' Cornwall's train stopped at Whitefish for coal and water when I was comin' down. I was gittin' shaved in the section house and I didn't come out. I wasn't goin' to let him see me just out o' the woods, not shaved up or nothin'. Besides, I've seen lots o' men, thousands of 'em."

It's a dyke this time, a mile and a half straight across country, with gold, silver and copper.

"This man knows about whiskey, don't he, and feedin' people to make 'em fat? I've gained seven pounds since I been here. It's his business." (John and the hotelkeeper are already fast friends, and John's going to send him down some "pa'tridge.") "Well, I know about rocks, and quartz, and minin', don't I? It's my business. Well, get down where the rock is wet and she's good, she's first-rate. It's the truth. I know, don't I? Look!"

John is loaded down with quartz specimens. He must be carrying pounds around with him. He pulled out a jagged fragment as big as his fist and flashing with yellow blotches.

"Mile and a half she goes, up and down, across cricks and everything. An' nobody knows nothin' about it, Government nor nobody. But my l'yer says the money's all in real estate. There ain't no money fer minin'."

"Come and have something comfortable, John," I said, "to meind us of old days on the survey."

"All right," exclaimed he, with his peculiarly cheerful emphasis on the "all."

It may be a mine ostensibly, but I fancy it's loneliness that's at the bottom of John's "comin' out" this fall. For he confided to me presently that he'd like to meet a "nice, sociable gal afore he went back north."

And if any nice, sociable spinster doesn't mind a one-roomed, log-walled, tar-paper-roofed cabin, with two-inch cracks in the floor, she might do worse. For she'd get one of the far-fabled "nature's gentlemen" in Old John McNairn—philosopher, dry humorist, prospector and backwoodsman.

Grasshopper Bricks For Hens.

GRASSHOPPERS are being put to a new use out in Nebraska. The farmers have killed incredible numbers of them by the help of a machine which is, perhaps, the most effective ever devised for the purpose. It is called a "hopperdozer," and is nothing more nor less than a large flat pan, with a small amount of kerosene contained in a depression in the rear part of it. The contrivance, being attached to a horse, is pushed along in front of the animal as the latter is driven across the fields. Pretty nearly every grasshopper is encountered, jumps upon the pan, and is promptly suffocated by the kerosene.

This ingenious instrument has been in use for a number of years in parts of the West, but hitherto it has not occurred to the farmers to make any use of the dead grasshoppers. Most commonly they were burned, though some more enterprising agriculturists turned a portion of them to account as poultry-feed. They found that the hens liked them exceedingly; for it is a fact that a grasshopper is to a hen what a canvasback duck is to a human epicure—the very choicest and most esteemed of delicacies.

Hence the idea which is now being developed on a commercial scale. The grasshoppers, after being killed by the hopperdozer, are left in windrows in the fields, where they are soon dried. When they have been exposed to the sun for a sufficient time to reduce them to a properly desiccated condition they are gathered up with rakes, shoveled into carts, and conveyed to a shed, where they are put into a press somewhat resembling an ordinary cheese-press, and converted into solid bricks.

The bricks are shipped in quantities to poultry-raisers, who find this new kind of hen-provender most satisfactory, and they are anxious to get more of it. Apparently, it is a great encourager of egg-production.

It is not necessary to grind the bricks before feeding the stuff to the chickens, but merely to break them into pieces and soften with water.

His Marriage Fee.

A poor couple living in the Emerald Isle went to the priest for marriage, and were met with a demand for the marriage fee. It was not forthcoming. Both the consenting parties were rich in love and in their prospects, but destitute of financial resources. The father was obdurate.

"No money, no marriage."

"Give me lave, your riverence," said the blushing bride, "to go and get the money."

It was given, and she sped forth on the delicate mission of raising a marriage fee out of pure nothing. After a short interval she returned with the sum of money, and the ceremony was completed to the satisfaction of all. When the parting was taking place the newly-made wife seemed a little uneasy.

"Anything on your mind, Catherine?" said the father.

"Well, your riverence, I would like to know if this marriage could not be spoiled now?"

"Certainly not, Catherine. No man can put you asunder."

"Could you not do it yerself, father? Could you not spoil the marriage?"

"No, no, Catherine. You are past me now. I have nothing more to do with your marriage."

"That aises me mind," said Catherine, "and God bless your riverence. There's the ticket for your hat. I picked it up in the lobby and pawned it."

A lunacy commissioner was making his customary rounds. An inmate whose particular fancy it was to pose as a much-married man approached with the announcement that he had once again taken to himself a wife. "And who is the fortunate lady?" said the commissioner. "Ah," said the lunatic, smiling sweetly, "she's the daughter of the devil." "Indeed; and how do you get on together?" "Get on? Oh, well, I get on right enough with the wife; but it's the old people I can't put up with."

Anecdotal.

On one occasion Governor "Dick" Oglesby of Illinois went down to Joliet to inspect the State prison, and in one of the cells he found a very ugly man. "How did you get in here?" asked Oglesby. "Abduction," was the reply; "I tried to run off with a girl, and they caught me." "I'll pardon you as soon as I get back to Springfield," said the governor; "I don't see how you could expect to get a wife in any other way."

When he was plain Professor Thompson, Lord Kelvin invented the mirror galvanometer and siphon recorder, which made submarine telegraphy commercially practicable. It is related that one day when he was engaged on his deep-sea soundings work, he was discovered by a visitor experimenting with a long coil of wire. "What is that for?" enquired the visitor, pointing to the wire. "Making sounds," replied the professor. "Ah," said the guest, jocularly, "what kind of note does it give off?" "The deep C, of course," came the answer, like a shot, accompanied by the well-known twinkle in the professor's eye.

Not many years ago there was a veteran teacher in an Ontario high school who often made his classes wince under the lash of his bitter sarcasm and ready wit. One day a little half-starved yellow cur strayed into the school and the boys thought they saw a chance to express their feelings toward "Fussy," who was temporarily absent from the room. The frightened mongrel was picked up, fitted with a pair of spectacles and tied yelping on the teacher's chair. "Fussy" entered the room, walked to the desk, calmly surveyed the work of his pupils, and then turning to them said pleasantly: "In my absence, I see you have held a business meeting and elected one of your number chairman."

The late Professor Blackie, who was familiar to everyone in the streets of Edinburgh, had long, venerable, white locks. He was one day accosted by a very dirty little bootblack, with his "Clean your boots, sir?" The professor was impressed by the grime on the boy's face. "I don't want my boots cleaned, my lad," said he, "but if you'll go and wash your face I'll give you sixpence." "A' richt, sir!" was the boy's reply. Then he went over to a neighboring fountain and fulfilled his part of the bargain. When he returned he held out his hand for the money. "Well, my lad," said the professor, "you have earned your sixpence. Here it is." "I dinna want it," replied the boy, with a self-important air. "Ye can keep it and get your hair cut."

It is scarcely credible that so faithful a servant and so good a courtier as John Brown of Balmoral could ever deliberately have kept his sovereign waiting, but the London "Tatler" relates an anecdote which shows that he had a very human side. Brown was very fond of fishing, and one day, when he had a fine salmon on his hook, there came a message from the castle on Deeside, desiring his presence at once. Queen Victoria was going for her afternoon drive, and it was Brown's duty to attend her, as he always did, sitting in the rumble of the carriage. "Tell Her Majesty that I'll be quickly," he said. But the salmon was strong and could not be landed at once. Another and more urgent message reached him. "Tell Her Majesty that I have a salmon on, but I'll be in in a few minutes." Still the salmon held out, and a third and imperative command arrived. "Tell Her Majesty," shouted Brown, "that it's not possible for me to leave without the salmon!" Nor did he. But whether the Queen knew enough of fishing and fishermen to appreciate the circumstances is not told.

The Original Mr. Squeers.

THE thoughtlessness of writers in caricaturing people for grotesque purposes in their novels has been the cause of much annoyance and suffering to sensitive persons. Both Dickens and Thackeray sinned in this respect through their perfectly evident portraiture of persons who could easily be identified.

A writer in the "Literary Era," after citing the offences of Thackeray, Disraeli and others, brings up the notable case of the schoolmaster in "Nicholas Nickleby," and says:

The grossest injury which Dickens ever inflicted on a fellow-being was his too accurate portrait of an innocent man in his Squeers. That Yorkshire schoolmasters were, as a rule, cruel and wicked enough, it is true. But the particular schoolmaster, who was recognized and who recognized himself as the original Squeers, seems to have been an exception to the rule.

It will be remembered that Dickens and his illustrator traveled together to the north of England for the purpose of collecting material for "Nickleby," and especially for the Dotheboys episode. At Great Bridge they visited a boarding-school known as Bowes Academy. The master, William Shaw, received the strangers with some hauteur, and did not as much as withdraw his eyes from the operation of pen-making during the interview.

"Phiz" sketched him in the act. "Boz" described the act. The personal peculiarities of William Shaw were recognized in Squeers. Shaw became a butt of popular ridicule, lost his pupils, and finally died of a broken heart. Yet there is abundant evidence to prove that he was a really excellent and kind-hearted man, who was made to suffer for the misdeeds of his neighbors.

A Pretty Broad Hint.

AN anecdote is told of one of the smaller South American republics which illustrates the methods which are adopted when it comes to a question of making war. The "navy" of the particular power referred to consists of a single, old-fashioned, side-wheel steamer, armed with one gun. In time of peace she is engaged in hauling freight up and down the river which runs close to the capital. At the outbreak of one of the periodical wars, not so very long ago, the president of the republic took charge of the steamer and started up stream on a recruiting expedition, leaving his senior general in charge of the military preparations at the capital. A couple of days later the steamer returned, and some seventy miserable-looking natives, each firmly bound with a strong rope, were marched off and turned over to the general, with a note from the president, which read: "Dear General—I send you herewith seventy volunteers. Please return the rope at once."

Curious Bits of News.

Mr. and Mrs. John Williams of Danville, Kentucky, lately celebrated their golden wedding, and one of the gifts they received was a handsome tombstone with their names engraved upon it. This was from J. E. Wright, a local monument dealer, and, strange to say, the old couple were delighted with the unique gift.

The authorities of the city of Rouen, the home of the famous cathedral, are considering a plan to utilize the street trolley wires for the extinguishment of fires. The scheme is to place electrically driven pumps at suitable points along the electric tramway system which covers the city, and then, in case of fire, to switch on the current from the trolley wires to drive the pumps.

A quantity of jewels and trinkets which had played important parts in murders and other crimes were sold at auction by the police authorities of Paris the other day. Most of the articles brought prices far above their intrinsic value, their worth being enhanced in the eyes of the morbid because of the gruesome associations connected with them. Those which were bloodstained were in great demand.

The Hong Kong "Daily Press" says that the Tartar General of Canton having been troubled by an evil influence in his yamen, which in one month caused the death of his wife and daughter, as well as of a former Tartar general, a fung shui professor was finally called in. He looked over the city, and decided the evil influence was the roof of the library of the Government school for foreign languages. The roof, which was a peaked one, was at once removed, and is now being replaced by a flat one.

Mr. Charles Frohman, at the commencement of Kubelik the violinist's American tour, insured the latter's right hand against injury for $10,000. It might be supposed that the chance of a musician getting his hand hurt was remote. Yet when Raffael Joseffy first came to Chickering Hall and made a sensation a felon on his thumb interrupted his engagement. Josef Hofmann fell from his bicycle and hurt his hand under similar circumstances. Ole Bull, Wieniawski and Paderewski were also subjected to accidents that interfered with their tours.

A lively debate has taken place in the Senate of the Australian confederation, as a result of a statement of Senator Sargood's that he had seen women ploughing in South Australia. A gentleman from that State doubted the assertion and hotly resented it, but it was backed up by another senator, Pearce. A writer in the Sydney "Bulletin" adds that he has often seen women ploughing in South Australia. "The last occasion was near Mount Gambier. The plough-lady was wearing Wellington boots, and her husband, a fat German gentleman, sat on a fence near by, complacently smoking."

The people of Galveston, Texas, are perfecting plans to protect themselves from another invasion of the sea, such as the one which devastated their city over a year ago. These plans provide for a sea-wall, to be built on the beach, and to extend the whole length of the city limits; and for raising the grade of the entire city. It is a mammoth undertaking, which will cost the already impoverished city millions, and involve considerable additional outlay by each property-owner. The city is to fill in, with sand pumped from the Gulf, an area of ground on the Gulf side of the city, four miles long and one mile wide, to an elevation of ten feet. The city will also raise all the streets and alleys.

Her Love For Her Lions.

AN instance of the affection felt for wild beasts by their tamers cited by "St. Nicholas" is the case of Madame Bianca, the French tamer, who in the winter of 1900 was with the Bostock Wild Animal Show giving daily exhibitions in Baltimore, where her skill and daring with lions and tigers earned wide admiration. It will be remembered how fire suddenly descended on this menagerie one night and destroyed the animals, amid fearful scenes. And in the morning Bianca stood among the ruins and looked upon the charred bodies of her pets. Had she lost her dearest friends she could scarcely have shown deeper grief. She was in despair, and declared that she would never tame another group; she would leave the show business. And when the menagerie was stocked afresh with lions and tigers Bianca would not go near their cages. These were lions indeed, but not her lions, and she shook her head and mourned for "Bowser," the handsomest lioness in captivity, and "Spitfire," and "Juliette," and the black-maned "Brutus." Nor could money tempt her. And the outcome was that this most successful woman lion-tamer in the world retired into private life—gave up her career simply because of her grief for these dead animals.

Past His First Youth.

THE swan is said to be excellent eating when young; but as it is one of the longest-lived of all creatures, it is well to learn if possible how old your bird is before you cook it.

A gentleman in Lincolnshire, England, sent a dead swan to the Athenaeum Club, addressed to the secretary. A special dinner was to occur that week, and the committee without question turned the bird over to the cook.

At the dinner the swan, resting on a great silver dish, was a delight to the eye; but when it came to carving and eating the bird, no knife seemed sharp enough to cut it, and of course eating it was out of the question.

A few days later the donor met the secretary and said, "I hope you got my swan all right."

"That was a nice joke you played on us," returned the secretary.

"Joke? What do you mean?"

"Why, we had the thing boiled for thirteen hours, and even then we might as well have tried to cut through the Rock of Gibraltar."

"You don't mean to say you had the swan cooked!"

"Why, of course."

"Man alive! I sent it to be stuffed and preserved as a curiosity in the club. That swan has been in my family for two hundred and eighty years! It was one of the identical birds fed by the children of Charles I.—you've seen the picture of it. My ancestor held the post of 'master of the swans and keeper of the king's cygnets.' Well, I have no doubt it was a bit tough."

Anecdotal.

George Ade, the Chicago man who writes the "Fables in Slang," hails from Indiana, which he has said is a State which a man "should never go back on—or to." The other night he met an Indiana woman who asked him if he had ever noticed how many bright people come from Indiana. "Yes," he replied, "and the brighter they are the quicker they come."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

WILL GREAT BRITAIN PROFIT BY THE NEW TREATY MADE WITH JAPAN?

The London Spectator Thinks England Would Regret Her New Alliance

WILL PAY DEARLY FOR HUMBLING RUSSIA.

A Triple Alliance of Germany, Russia and France Against Great Britain May Follow—A Naval Combination Stsonger Than Britain

New York, Feb. 27.—Amid the chorus of congratulations with which the announcement of the Anglo-Japanese treaty is received in London, one Cassandra voice is heard. It proceeds from the most sober, clear-headed and far-sighted journal published in the British metropolis. We refer, of course, to the Spectator, which regards the treaty with a doubtful eye, and confesses a misgiving lest, of the two parties to the compact, Japan should derive much the greater profit by it, and lest England, by her new alliance should have provoked enmities which, at the present critical conjuncture, she could ill afford to excite.

There is some ground for the Spectator's foreboding. Japan's interest in averting the absorption of Corea and Manchuria by Russia is unquestionably of a primary and paramount kind. England's interest in the matter is of a secondary sort. Were Russia once firmly planted in the Corean peninsula and in the three Manchurian provinces, England might lose at the utmost a little trade, but the Japanese would see themselves condemned to age-long isolation in their overcrowded islands. Admitting, however, that the new alliance has averted any further dismemberment of China, and has assured the maintenance of the "Open Door," we must recognize, as we suppose that the Spectator recognizes, that a material benefit has been conferred upon British commerce by securing to it permanent access to the whole of the Middle Kingdom. Unquestionably, that is a gain; but is it not a gain for which, under the circumstances, England may have paid too dearly by definitely blocking the territorial ambitions of Russia, Germany and France in Eastern Asia and compelling them to seek satisfaction for their land hunger in other quarters of the globe?

What field is there now left for Russian, German and French expansionists? We have rendered South America tabooed by our assertion of the Monroe Doctrine. If we except Morocco, Abyssinia, Tripoli, a part of the Sahara and Liberia, the whole of the Dark Continent has been partitioned among the Christian Powers of Europe. So have New Guinea and the other great islands of Malaysia. So have the isles of the Pacific. Barred permanently out of China, as they are by the Anglo-Japanese treaty, Russia, Germany and France can henceforward hope to expand only at the expense of England's colonial Empire. They could divide it among each other with the utmost ease, if they could master England on the ocean; and they could shake it to its foundations, could they gain command of the sea long enough to permit the transportation of considerable armies to Cape Colony and Egypt. With a German force at Cape Town and a French force controlling the Suez Canal, England would experience great difficulty in sending troops to India, even if she had any troops to send.

Is a triple alliance of Germany, Russia and France against Great Britain inconceivable? There is no proposal that would be welcomed with so much enthusiasm by the masses of the German people, and it is certain that England's friends among Frenchmen and Russians are few and far between. Could the three Continental countries named reasonably hope, however, to cope with England on the ocean? Touching this point we should bear in mind that even the most sanguine believers in England's naval strength of two other Powers. England might, the optimists have said, face France and Russia together, or France and Germany, but they have never contended that England's naval power would prove equal to that of France, Russia and Germany united. A glance at naval statistics will show that, on paper at all events, the three Continental Powers would be, should they cooperate, decidedly stronger than Great Britain. Moreover, the excess of strength is continually increasing. England is spending this year about one hundred and fifty million dollars on her fleet. Germany is spending one hundred and sixty million dollars to which must be added the great sums devoted to a like purpose by France and Russia. According to statistics, such a coalition as we have named, ought to be able to crush England on the ocean to-day, and it is certain that the task should prove far easier a year or two hence.

There is probably some basis for the suggestion made on Tuesday by one of The Sun's correspondents that, when England entered into an alliance with a non-Christian Power, and took the first step, and a long step, toward blocking forever the territorial ambitions of Russia, Germany and France in Eastern Asia, she obeyed the counsel of despair. There may have been naught else left her to do, but, in doing it, she may have taught the three great Continental Powers that there will be no room for their expansion on the narrow earth until England has been swept out of their path.

THREE DAYS' RIOTING IN KIEFF BY STUDENTS.

Significant Feature of the Affair is the Increased Number of Workingmen Who Joined the Students

London, Feb. 27.—A despatch to The Times from St Petersburg says that the recent student riots at Kieff began in the theatre where leaflets announcing a demonstration were distributed. The trouble commenced in the street on a signal from a student who was joined by workingmen armed with clubs and other weapons. The crowd, swelled to thousands, sang "Down with aristocracy," and waved red flags; whereupon the police and cossacks interfered. The rioting began on February 15th, and continued three days, the students being outnumbered by the workingmen. A significant feature of the disorders was the increased support the workingmen are giving the students. Discontent was formerly confined to the large cities, and is now spreading to the smaller towns and villages owing to the Government's policy of expelling malcontents to the country. All news of the rioting is suppressed. Not a single newspaper in Russia has printed the facts. The Times correspondent vouches for the correctness of his own account, and adds that he believes the riots are now occurring in the other university towns.

GERMANY INJURES HER NEIGHBORS.

London, Feb. 27.—A despatch to The Times from Vienna says the common interests of Austria, Hungary and Russia in the economic sphere have been brought closer together as all find themselves in antagonism to Germany. Germany's commercial policy has already seriously damaged its neighbors, and the new tariff threatens worse.

WHY NOT HERE

The Telephone Company are to Put Cables Underground in Brantford

The Bell Telephone Company will make extensive improvements to their plant in Brantford this spring and summer and will introduce in Brantford the system of having the cables underground, says the Expositor. This will not mean that there will be a smaller number of telegraph poles on the streets, but it will mean that there will be fewer wires on the poles. It is the intention to have no wires entering the central office from overhead at all and the underground system for the cables will be adopted on Queen and Dalhousie streets. The company is about also to introduce a new system of switches at the central office, which will enable a much quicker service. This is an improvement that should be introduced in Peterborough without unnecessary delay.

Malt Breakfast Food

is a Perfect Food Product

A perfect food product is one that is soothing and grateful to the stomach, and does not tax the powers of digestion, that keeps the blood pure, that clears the brain and bestows restful sleep, that builds up flesh, bone and muscle. Users of Malt Breakfast Food secure all these blessings and advantages. No other food can equal it as a delicious and satisfying breakfast or supper dish. A prominent physician and a user of Malt Breakfast Food writes thus:

"When I go home tired out and in a condition to have a restless night, if I eat anything, I find I can eat a meal of Malt Breakfast Food and go to bed without apprehension. It digests itself. I find that it soothes and quiets the nerves, and gives me a feeling of rest and refreshment." All grocers sell it.

The Boers Being Rapidly Dissolved

London, Feb. 27.—Whenever a few raw recruits just out from England fall into a Boer ambush, (and it has not happend very frequently of late), the American and European newspapers hail it as an evidence of British military incompetency and as a proof that the Boers are going to win in the long run. Meanwhile without anyfuss or feathers Lord Kitchener goes on making his weekly bag, and the hostile critics scarcely think his steady and rapid progress worthy of mention. Mr. Kruger may have been right when he said that the British could only win at a price that would stagger humanity, but the Boers are paying the price, and if they are not paying more dearly, it is due to the humanity of their conquerors.

LECTURE AT ST. ANDREWS

Delivered by Rev. J. W. McMillan B.D. of Lindsay, Last Night

A most interesting and instructive lecture was given in St. Andrew's Sunday School last night by Rev. J. W. McMillan, of Lindsay. The subject of the lecture was "A Trip Through Scotland and Germany."

Rev. Mr. McMillan is a very good speaker and pictured the scenes and events of his trip with startling vividness. His description was so plain that he carried the audience with him in a mind journey over land and sea. He described many amusing and touching incidents he witnessed on his trip. The Sunday school room was filled by one of the most attentive audiences that ever listened to a speaker. The chair was occupied by Rev. J. G. Potter in a most satisfactory manner. After the lecture a very hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker for his pleasing and descriptive address. The admission was a silver collection for the Home Mission Fund.

WHO IS JOHN WATSON

He Has Been Arrested for Burglary in Sarnia —Says His Home is Peterboro

The Chief of Police has received the following letter from Provincial officer A. Murray, Sarnia:—

Dear Sir,— We have a man under arrest here by the name of John Watson for burglary. He claims his home is Peterborough. Description, 30 years old 150 lbs, 5 ft., 7 in., thin features, small dark moustache, dark complexion, rather bow-legged, and very quiet. Any information you can give concerning this man's reputation will be thankfully received.

Fraternally yours,
A MURRAY,
Provincial Officer.

Sarnia, Feb. 24, 1902.

The police have made enquiries and cannot find out who the man is.

MEN ON STRIKE AGAIN

At the Cereal Works—This Time All the Men are Out

A few days ago there was some trouble between the contractors and the men at the Cereal Works which resulted in a strike, the men being out for a day or two. Yesterday a general strike was ordered and as a result the entire work is stopped. The cause was the objection of the brick layers to a new man that had been employed by Mr. Bogue. The man had been discharged at the settlement of the first trouble, also a number of the laborers. As a result the bricklayers have gone on strike and at present a general strike is on, and work at the buildings is at a stand still. The present trouble will likely be amicably settled in a very short time as the union men have every confidence in Mr. Scott, manager of the works.

A DESERVED PROMOTION

Mr. E. W. Cox Becomes General Manager of the Canada Life

The many Peterborough friends of Mr. E. W. Cox will be pleased to learn that he has been promoted to the position of General Manager of the Canada Life Assurance Company. Mr. Cox has been connected with the company for many years, latterly as Assistant General Manager, and under his able management that company will maintain the successful progress which has so long distinguished it. His deserved promotion will meet with the hearty approval of everybody connected with the Canada Life, as well as the general public. The Times joins in extending congratulations.

Weak Back and Spinal Pains

Pains in the back number their victims in thousands. Only very powerful and penetrating remedies will reach these distressing complaints, but Polson's Nerviline is as sure to cure them as anything in this world can be sure. Rub Nerviline over the sore parts night and morning, and see how quickly it drives out the pain. Five times stronger than any other. Good for internal and external use. Large bottles 25c.

Peterboro's Next Game Next Week

Peterborough's outlook for intermediate championship honors is very bright and the boys are picked to win by many who have seen both Galt and Peterborough teams on the ice. The Peterborough team played seven games before they reached the final, losing one game and winning six. The game lost was won by Lindsay. It being the first game of the season the boys were not in condition and showed lack of practice.

The Peterborough aggregation have piled up a score of 46 goals to their opponents' 20. 13 of the 46 was booked against the R.M.C.'s of Kingston in their first game with Peterborough at Peterborough, the R. M. C.'s scoring five.

The Galt hockeyists are figuring on winning the intermediate championship and think they will have no trouble in putting it over the Peterborough seven. They intend entering the senior series next year. Their intentions may be good, but they are [illegible] next year. Their informed on a very poor basis and no doubt they will still be in the intermediate running next season.

Secretary A. H. Beaton of the O.H.A. announced to-day that the Weather Man had promised a cold wave for next week, which would enable the different hockey championship series to be completed. The wave is expected to strike Toronto about Saturday night.

The final senior game between the Wellingtons and Cornwall will take place at the Mutual street rink on Monday night, when Mr. Roy D. Schooley of Osgoode Hall will make his first appearance in Toronto as a referee.

The "sudden-death" game in the semi-final of the intermediate series will be played at the Mutual on Tuesday night between Galt and Collingwood. Both towns will run big excursions to Toronto. Mr. E. P. Brown of Osgoode Hall will likely referee. The winner will play home-and-home games with Peterborough for the championship.

In the junior series Upper Canada College will play the first of the home-and-home games at Stratford on Monday night, and the return game will be played here on Friday night.

With good ice these three games should be the most exciting of the season.

The Wellingtons will probably meet the Ottawas in an exhibition game here as soon as Jack Frost again puts in an appearance. The Ottawas have been playing the strongest kind of game recently, defeating all their opponents in the Eastern League. The match ought to be an interesting one and to some extent would indicate the chances of the Eastern club to lift the Stanley cup.

Montreal, Feb. 28.—Montreal practically won the senior hockey championship to-night by defeating the Victorias in the decisive game by 3 goals to 0. Owing to the intense interest taken in the result of the match the Arena Rink was crowded with a monster attendance, between six and seven thousand spectators being present. It was an enthusiastic crowd, too, and as the supporters of the Montreal team were in the majority they received a regular ovation over their great victory.

In the first half Montreal scored 2 goals. In the second half the Victorias made a big effort to even things up, but without avail. The Montrealers maintained their advantage and added another goal to their score before time was called.

Mail and Empire: Secretary Stiles, of the Cornwall Hockey Club, has notified the O.H.A. that if there is no ice in Toronto the Factory Town team are quite willing to meet the Wellingtons for the O.H.A. senior championship in Kingston or in Ottawa. Cornwall does not care to wait till December for ice to form in Toronto. Cornwall has an idea that after their experience here last Saturday the Wellingtons are not anxious to meet them. The local team is keeping in condition, and is not without hope of turning the tables on the Iron Dukes when they next meet.

CURLING

Possibly the greatest honor which the Lindsay rink won at the Winnipeg bonspiel—and they carried off several—was the capturing of the prize given by a Glasgow firm for the largest number of actual wins at the bonspiel. This prize was announced whilst the bonspiel was in progress. Only actual games were counted, byes and defaults were not considered. Mr. Flavelle's rink made a record of sixteen wins and three defeats out of nineteen games actually played, and the next highest record was fifteen wins and four defeats. Truly the interests and reputation of Ontario curlers were well cared for by Mr. Flavelle and his fellow-players, who deserve all the honors which awaited them on their return home.

A Barber's Troubles

"Competition is so great nowadays," said a reflective barber into the deaf ear of a Times' man, as he gently amputated a few superfluous hairs, "that a business man has to lie awake of nights and scheme how to economize. The great captains of industry obtain their position on account of their success in paring and filing away at expenses. In my business I have been thinking of various plans to save or make money. Why cannot we make some use of the hair we cut off of our customers? I obtain about a basketful of human hair each day, which now all goes to waste. Why could it not be cleaned and made into stuffing for pillows, mattresses or something of the sort? The hair of all animals is used in some way; why not that of the two-legged animal, man? How comforting it would be for a widow, we'll say for instance, as she dropped into her downy couch to feel that her weary head was supported by the curly locks of her deceased husband. Sentiment aside, it ought to be a practical scheme. And then, think of the razors we use up. A razor lasts a barber only a year. There are about Twenty-five barbers in Peterborough, who use up 25 razors each year. Think of the great saving which could be effected if the life of these razors could be prolonged. Think of $1,000 more to be distributed among the barbers of the town. Seeing it slip away from us makes me groan."

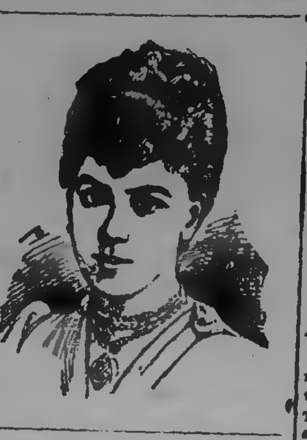
Scared by Cheering a Stallion Made a Dash Towards the Prince and Princess Causing Great Excitement

New York, Feb. 27.—A special cable to The Herald from London says:

The Princess of Wales had a very narrow escape at the Shire Horse Show to-day. The winning stallion, Hoxton Tom, was being led down the ring as as the Royal party was leaving the enclosure. The cheering started the animal, which got almost beyond control of the groom. He made a dash for an exit, through which the Prince and Princess, with the other members of the Royal party were just about to pass.

They appeared totally unaware of the danger until the shouts of warning from all parts of the building attracted their attention. Then the Princess, who was nearest the animal, realized her danger and stopped short. The stallion rushed by her Royal Highness, missing her by a foot or two only. It was only the skill of the groom, who managed to pull the animal to one side as it dashed past the Royal party, that a very serious and deplorable accident was averted.

It was on the 10th of October last and a few of the succeeding days that the Prince and Princess were in Toronto, and the news of the narrow escape of the Princess will be received with interest by citizens, who were greatly impressed by Her Royal Highness' graciousness.



LIFE AND WORK OF MOODY

Lecture by Prof. McConachy, at the Y.M.C.A. Last Night

The attendance at the lecture by Prof. McConachy in the Y.M.C.A. last night was not up to expectations. This was due perhaps more to the fact that several other attractions were offered, than to any lack of interest in the subject of the lecture. Those who were present received a treat.

Mr. McConachy is teacher of bible study in the Mount Hermon School for young men, and also in the school for girls.

When Dwight L. Moody was a mere boy he left home and went to the town of Greenfield, and was taken by his brother to a gentleman who made a practice of giving a penny to every new boy who came to town. He, however, became homesick and returned home. His uncle, a prominent shoe merchant, of Boston offered to take him on condition that he would attend church and Sunday School regularly. This he most faithfully did, and became actively engaged in the work of the Congregational church. Removing to Chicago, he became more actively engaged than before. He rented one, and as his means increased, more pews and filled them with strangers. He collected a class of boys and taught them in Sunday School, and in this work he had the strong sympathy of Mr. J. Farwell, the first President of Chicago Y.M.C.A.

In a room in his own house in Northfield, with a class of eight girls, he commenced the work of what became his great Seminary for girls. The girls who come to this school are usually from 15 to 17 years old; the work taught is largely bible teaching and domestic work.

With the aid of the lantern views, Mr. McConachy gave a splendid description of the scenery surrounding Northfield, and of the gradual building up of the school for young men, in which he was particularly interested.

On the East bank of the Connecticut River, just after it has left Vermont and New Hampshire and entered Massachusetts, lies the beautiful town of Northfield. Twenty-five years ago it was, in proportion to its population, the strongest Unitarian town in New England. About that time Mr. Moody came back to make his home amid the scenes of his boyhood. Gradually he made Northfield the centre of evangelical influences and activities which have reached out to the ends of the earth. To a multitude Northfield has become one of the best-loved spots on earth. The very name has become a synonym for earnest, evangelical, practical Christian faith and service.

Four miles away, on the opposite bank of the river, twenty-one years ago Mr. Moody founded Mount Hermon School. The buildings, now more than a score in number, are picturesquely located along a rounded hill or ridge two hundred feet above the Connecticut. From its Chapel tower a view is to be had, which, in extent and beauty, can scarcely be equaled. For twenty miles from north to south, running parallel with the river, the high hills guard the eastern and western horizons. In between lies the valley with its villages and farms, its knolls and woods.

In the early history of his labors Mr. Moody owed much to the assistance rendered by his wife and mother, and an infirmary which he built is named the Betsy Moody Cottage, in honor of his mother.

The Student's conferences held here from year to year are the scenes of great enthusiasm, 700 students attending last summer.

Mr. Moody's grave is situated on the "Round Top," a knoll just a short distance behind the house, and a simple slab bearing the dates of his birth and death, has these words: "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." Here was shown an interesting picture of four generations, Mr. Moody, his mother, his eldest son, W. R. Moody, and his grandchild. Mr. Moody left two other children, Emma, Mrs. A. P. Fitt, and Paul, now studying in Edinburgh.

Among other interesting objects shown was the large summer hotel, accommodating the guests, the work in which is all done by students of the schools. In the winter this building is used as the Northfield Training School, for bible study. Another feature, in which Mr. Moody took great pride, is Camp Northfield, where 600 young men enjoyed themselves last summer.

While the Mount Hermon School teaches the elementary subjects, it is largely different from them.

It is as unique among schools as Mr. Moody was individual among men. In his own words he desired "to help young men of very limited means to get an education such as would have done me good when I was their age. I want to help them into lives that will count the most for the cause of Christ." It is a young men's school rather than a boy's school. No student is admitted under sixteen years of age and a large number are really men. Those whose studies were cut short in boyhood by the need of going to work to support themselves or others, and who now feel the need of more training for usefulness, are especially welcome.

It is not required that a student shall be a Christian and a Church member before entering, but no young man is accepted unless he has formed an earnest purpose in life and has a strong desire for such aid as the school can render toward making him a useful man.

The students indulge in all the popular sports, such as baseball, football, etc., skating etc., but the bible study forms the centre of the whole work. In this connection was shown the chapel, which was a gift from Mr. Moody's friends in America and Europe, on the occasion of his 60th birthday.

The lecture concluded with a reference to the convention going on in Toronto this week.

Items of Interest.

San Jose, Cal., Feb. 27.— R. Croffield of Los Gatos, who has just returned from a visit to England, says, regarding the disappearance about a week ago of Miss Coole of Buffalo, N. Y., that on February 13 he stopped off at the town of Niagara, and while viewing the cataract from the foot bridge picked up a woman's purse containing a small sum of money, a return ticket to Buffalo, and two of Miss Coole's visiting cards. In the purse was this note:

"Good-bye mamma, papa, Ray, and all the dear ones; do not think that I do not love you all, for I do. The waters are calling for me."

Mr. Croffield did not know of the young lady's disappearance, but sent word to the address on the card. He heard nothing further until he reached home, where he found a message awaiting him, asking for full particulars, and saying the young woman had probably committed suicide.

ADDED TO THE SMALLPOX LIST.

Three new smallpox cases are reported to-day: From Dunn Township, on the Seneca Indian Reserve, in a lumber camp; Mt. Eagle Township, North Hastings; and at Sarnia.

London, Feb. 27.— The attack made by the Boers, numbering 400, and driving cattle before them, to rush the outpost line near Botha's Berg, Transvaal Colony, during the night of Feb. 24, was most determined. They were led by two well known fighters, Ross Hands and Manie Botha. When the Boers realized that their attempt to actually break through the wire fence was frustrated, they crouched beside the dead cattle with which the ground was thickly strewn, and from that defence poured a heavy fire on the British troops. The fusilade was steadily returned, and finally the Boers were driven back leaving fifteen dead and six wounded on the field. They also left 170 dead or wounded horses and the entire herd of six thousand head of cattle.

FAVORABLE TO AMERICANS

Madrid, Feb. 27. — The Foreign Minister, the Duke of Almodovar, at the conference with the Senators yesterday opposed to inserting a clause in the Spanish-American treaty prohibiting Americans from acquiring land in Spain, as Spaniards acquired property and stocks in the United States. The Minister declined to promise to submit a draft of the treaty to Parliament before it was signed.

PRINCE HENRY CABLE DENIED

Berlin, Feb. 27.— There is no foundation for the statement cabled to the United States from London by a news agency that Prince Henry of Prussia will visit Canada before returning to Germany.

WANT RANSOM BACK.

Constantinople, Feb. 27.— It is understood that the United States will shortly take steps to obtain a reimbursement of the sum (72,000) paid to the brigands as a ransom for Miss Ellen M. Stone, and Madame Tsilka, holding Turkey responsible, inasmuch as the capture of the missionaries was effected on Turkish soil. This question of responsibility may have serious developments, since Turkey emphatically disclaims responsibility and lays the blame on Bulgaria.

Just a Cold in the Head

But if followed by another cold, or some extra exposure, is liable to result in nasal catarrh. Unless a radical cure is obtained, the throat, bronchial tubes and finally the lungs become affected. Nothing cures colds so quickly and pleasantly as Catarrhozone. The Inspector of Mines for Nova Scotia, Mr. Neville, says "Catarrhozone is the best remedy I have ever used. It cured me of Catarrh of the Head and throat, and I am pleased to recommend such a satisfactory remedy." Catarrhozone is a safeguard against colds, coughs and catarrh. It can be used while at work, in the church, theatre or street cars. Simply inhale Catarrhozone and it cures. Price $1, small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston Ont.

THEY CANNOT STOP RUSSIA

Gen. Wilson Discusses the England-Japan Treaty

He Declares No Earthly Power Can Prevent Russia From Taking More Chinese Territory Whenever She Decides to Do so—Banquet of Delaware Society

New York, Feb. 27—Gen. James H. Wilson was one of the guests of the Delaware Society at its twelfth annual dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria last evening, said that the recent treaty which has been published with so much excitement of interest, the treaty between England and Japan in which they have allied themselves against Russia, was written by an American. I think that that treaty was drafted by Henry W. Denison, a cousin of Charles A. Dana.

After remarks upon other subjects Gen. Wilson returning, asked what of the significance of the publication of the England-Japan treaty and said:

Ordinarily it would be taken as a bluff of the allied powers against Russia and her threatened aggression. Well, Russia has taken already about 2,000,000 square miles from China, and in my judgment there is no earthly power that can prevent her from taking more when she decides to do so.

The Siberian Railway cannot be reached nor interrupted by any army in the world, and Russia can concentrate herself along it. There is nothing to stop her, so far as I can see, except Russia's moderation. And Russia, like any nation, can no more stop herself in the line of growth than an iceberg can help going down the current.

Probably England and Japan could to-day drive Russia from the Amur river, but they could no more keep her from there than they could stop an avalanche down a mountain side. The wise American policy of entangling alliances with nobody is to my mind the best one.

Gen. Wilson had a word to say about the open door. "When two go in the same door at the same time one usually goes behind the other," he said. "I don't believe the open door means as much as we have led ourselves to believe. About all it means is that the various powers won't interfere with our treaty rights in China. Well, I'd like to see any of them interfere with our rights there, but its a pleasant assurance to me to have them agree to this in writing as they have done."

T. A. S. Reading Circle.

The large lecture room of St. Peter's T. A. Society was filled to overflowing last night. Miss Maggie McCabe, by special request, read for a second time, her essay on Charles Dickens, which was presented at the Reading Circle a few weeks ago. She has been highly complimented on the excellent paper, and its presentation last night brought forth the warmest praises from the large audience. A musical and literary program of a very high order was also presented, which was greatly appreciated. The entertainments given by the Ladies Reading Circle are of a very high standard, and the ladies are to be congratulated upon the grand success which they attain.

APSLEY

—Our merchants are hustling to get in their spring goods before the roads break up, and it keeps them busy hanging up teams, as all goods now are brought by sledge teams from Lakefield, and that means in the present state of the roads a two or three days' trip, and chances for several upsets, as hardly anyone can travel over them now without at least one upset to vary the monotony of the drive, and you may count yourself fortunate if you escape without wounds, bruises or sprains. However, the weather is much warmer, and there have been some bright days. Am sure the doctor must enjoy the change, as he had some pretty hard luck during the cold snap several mornings. When he attempted to light his office fire he found the stove would not draw and on taking down the pipes found two of them full of frozen smoke and flames, and had to take them over to Robs to get them thawed out. That's what he says, so it must be true.

—Our town pump gets cranky at times, and one should be careful then how you handle it as you may get it in the neck or on the nose. When a pump goes on a strike it hits hard, and is apt to leave a mark.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

The following letter is from Mr. F. Mooney, of Minden:

It has been said that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing, which may or may not be a truism, but if so, by parity of reasoning an excess should augment the danger. It is a standing boast of Ontario that its school system is the quintessence of perfection, and that its efficiency in teaching the "young idea how to shoot," is unparalleled. This if true is undoubtedly grand. That you can pay too much for your whistle is a dogma now hoary with age. And herein apropos, the higher education may be commercially considered, if cost of production is in excess of sale, financial loss is the result. This is a simile involving no doubt. That education judiciously administered is conductive of good, goes without saying, and that same is a powerful factor in the development of the latent intellect of the rising generations is equally true. And to which at a moderate cost of production, no reasonable person should object. "But handsome is that handsome does," and here we must draw the line and insist that the higher education now of such colossal proportions under the existing school regime should be self-sustaining, and that the arbitrary system now in force, viz., compulsory taxation in support of same, be abolished. As not being conductive to the public weal; the inordinate tax now imposed in support of schools, is a cause of much indignation and is the almost universal "ipse dixit" of the discontented taxpayer, the enormity of which extortion will be shown further on. The country is at present flooded with young people who have at the public expense been largely educated in the higher branches, but many of whom are utterly incapable of utilizing same by reason of lack or want of adaptation. In support of which the taxable portion of the public under the existing school regime are financially handicapped, and for which no adequate compensation is received. In illustration,—the writer pays $61.46 township and county taxes for 1901, of which $31.75 is his school tax, being 52 per cent. of the whole tax; as the writer sends no children to school he is arbitrarily compelled to pay the aforesaid enormous tax in support of an institution from which he receives no benefit. That the school law in this behalf to 90 per cent. of the ratepayers can be advantageously amended, is an axiom or self-evident proposition. The writer is of the opinion that municipal support to high schools should be discontinued, and only accorded to those of a moderate character. And that the Ontario Legislature should be asked at the ensuing session, through the medium of the respective members to pass an act, whereby all persons who having paid a school tax for any [illegible] to [illegible] years, or if a man of family, until his youngest child attains its majority, should be exempt from further liability in respect of schools.

CASE OF DESTITUTION

The Graham Family in Dummer in Great Want—Two Children Taken to the Shelter

Mr. George Cochrane, agent of the Childrens' Aid Society, and Mr. Henry, caretaker, visited a home near Gilchrist bay in Dummer on Tuesday and found a family named Graham in a very destitute condition. The father has not been working this winter. The mother is very ill and there was nothing in the house for the children to eat. The cabin was about 10 x 12 and as there was no food in the place it was decided to bring two of the children, a boy of 10 and a girl of 3 years to the Children's Shelter. The father objected but he was given a warning and some sound advice by Mr. Cochrane and then he consented to the children being taken away. The children are seemingly rather smart and are to [illegible] special attention under the care [illegible] and Mrs. Henry of the Shelter.

Giant Tortoises.

FOUR giant tortoises have recently been added to the reptile collection of the Zoological Gardens in Bronx Park, New York. They are from the Galapagos Islands, in the Southern Pacific Ocean, and differ from any tortoises native to Europe, Asia, Africa, or America.

These enormous tortoises are living reminders of the age of giant reptiles. They represent the sole survivors of the gigantic cold-blooded creatures whose massive bones in the different scientific museums illustrate the wonders of the Pliocene Age. In that age lizards attained a length of forty feet and more, and possessed strength enough to tear down small trees in order to browse upon their leaves. All reptilian life was gigantic in proportion, and a comparison of an ordinary tortoise of the present day with one of the giant tortoises shows the decadence of the reptile race. The average land tortoise of Europe or America, for instance, weighs five pounds, while the largest tortoise at Bronx Park weighs 310 pounds.

There are fourteen distinct species of the giant tortoise. Of these, six inhabit the Galapagos Islands, four the Aldabra Islands and four the Mauritius-Rodriguez group. All the species are rapidly becoming extinct, and reputable scientific authorities have declared several species to be entirely extinct for some time. On the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa these creatures are represented only by fossil remains; the living individuals are confined entirely to the islands mentioned.

To procure these reptiles a number of expeditions have been planned. The first of these resulting in the arrival of specimens in this country was made by the United States ship "Albatross." The specimens procured were placed in the National Museum at Washington. In 1812, long before the visit of the "Albatross," the United States ship "Essex" had explored the islands of the Galapagos group, and two large tortoises were captured and presented to a South Sea Island chief. In 1898 these same reptiles were obtained by Walter Rothschild, and were shipped by him to London.

In 1897 Mr. Rothschild despatched his expedition for giant tortoises to the Galapagos Islands. The total expenses of this expedition were $14,500. Fifty-nine tortoises were procured, but none exceeded two hundred pounds in weight. All the islands were visited. On Duncan Island twenty-seven specimens were captured, representing a species scientifically known as Testudo ephippium. The tortoises collected in this expedition were taken to London in 1898 by Frank B. Webster of Boston. As a special exhibit in a zoological conference then in progress they excited great interest, and their owner finally distributed them among the zoological gardens of Europe.

In 1899 twenty tortoises from the Galapagos Islands were landed in San Francisco by a Captain Noyes. Mr. Webster, acting as special agent for Mr. Rothschild, purchased all the reptiles. A number were lost in shipment from San Francisco to Boston, but six reached Boston alive. These comprised specimens of Testudo vicina and Mycrophyes. The specimens were then shipped to London, where they arrived in good condition.

The third and by far the largest lot of these reptiles arrived in San Francisco early this summer. This lot consisted of twenty-four specimens. They had been brought in a schooner from the Galapagos Islands by Captain William Johnson of San Francisco. Three of the tortoises in this lot are the largest ever captured, weighing more than three hundred pounds each.

F. B. Webster purchased this lot of tortoises, and shipped them to his place in Hyde Park. On the way three of them died. One of the three largest specimens was purchased by the New York Zoological Society, together with four smaller ones. Six specimens have been purchased by Mr. Rothschild, two go to Count Peracca, in Italy, and the remainder will probably be disposed of among zoological institutions.

The five giant tortoises at the New York Zoological Gardens now occupy a plot of long grass opposite the reptile house. In the mornings they are often let out of their enclosure to browse about at will. In the heat of the day they sleep in the shadow of a piece of tarpaulin that has been spread to shelter them from the sun.

The principal article of diet with these strange creatures is the cactus, but they feed on all sorts of vegetation, and seem to thrive.

These tortoises live to a great age. There is one in captivity known to be 127 years old, and it was full grown when caught. The largest of the collection at Fordham is supposed to have attained the great age of two hundred years.

The dimensions of this enormous tortoise are: Length of shell, on curve, 4 feet 3 inches; width of shell, on curve, 4 feet 7 inches; height, 30 inches; weight, 310 pounds. This giant was caught in the crater of an extinct volcano. To carry it thence to the shore were required the efforts of fourteen men for twelve days. A stretcherlike carrier was improvised, and the reptile placed upon it.

Next winter a special tortoise house will be ready at the east end of the present reptile house. There the giant tortoises will be housed from the cold, and a glass roof will give them the full benefit of the sun.

Shuffle and Cut.

Perceiving now that the block was inevitable, the noble prisoner bethought him of suicide.

"Shall I shuffle off this mortal coil?" mused he.

But the executioner, being a man of some wit, withal, divined his thought.

"You shuffle after I cut!" quoth this functionary, briefly.

The duke was silent at this. It was not his grace's wont to bandy words with one from the commonalty.—Detroit "Journal."

"Harry," she said, thoughtfully. "What is it?" responded the worried business man, rather shortly. "I wish you could rearrange your business a little bit." "How?" "Going to be a bear on the Stock Exchange instead of at home."—Exchange.

"It's to hide the teacher's bicycle, sir!"—"Wasp."

A Highland laird who could not afford to keep his own piper was accustomed to employ the village piper when he had company. On one occasion, through some oversight, Donald had not been given his preliminary glass of whiskey before he began his performance. Accordingly, he found his bagpipe in a most refractory temper. The laird asked him what was the matter with it, and Donald replied that the leather was so hard that he could do nothing with it. "What will soften it?" asked the anxious laird. "Och! just whuskey," said Donald. A tumbler of whiskey was at once brought, which Donald immediately drank. "You rascal!" said the laird; "did you not say it was for the bagpipes?" "Och, yess, yess," said Donald, "but she will be a ferry peculiar pipes this. She aye likes it blawed in."

Gladstone was fond of loitering around the second-hand book-shop windows, and fingering the volumes which were there displayed. If he picked up a book that interested him, he frequently became quite oblivious to his surroundings. On one of these occasions, a loafer, who must have carefully studied Mr. Gladstone's habits, whispered quietly: "Half a crown, please, sir." Without raising his eyes from the book, Mr. Gladstone put his hand in his pocket, and handed over the half-crown. A few minutes later he was going off with his prize, when the bookseller, who knew him well by sight, stopped him with a demand for one shilling, the price of the book. "But I have already given you half a crown," said Mr. Gladstone, and explanations followed.

In the heyday of the glory and power of the late Ward McAllister, the leader of New York society, he was a slave to conventions. Like most young conservatives, he grew liberal with years. When his brother, the late Hall McAllister, came to visit him from San Francisco, he looked upon it as an affliction of a country relative. Hall was developed here, and he wore a broad-brimmed hat, and had something of the Western breeziness in his manner that distressed his brother, the New York society leader. Ward asked Hall if he would please wear a silk hat, frock coat and gloves. "No," said Hall, "you attend to all that nonsense for me. I am too old to change. Let me go my own way." Hall had the habit of shaking hands with ladies upon making new acquaintances. This especially distressed his brother. "It is very bad taste to offer your hand to a lady," explained Ward. "Don't do it, Hall." Finally Ward introduced Hall to Mrs. Astor, and she cordially offered him her hand. "No, madam," said Hall. "I should like very much to shake hands with you, but I can't. My brother Ward says I mustn't."

A Large Covey.

Two old hunters were swapping yarns and had got to quail.

"Why," said one, "I remember a year when quail were so thick that you could get eight or ten at a shot with a rifle."

The other one sighed.

"What's the matter?" said the first.

"I was thinking of my quail hunts. I had a fine black horse that I rode everywhere, and one day out hunting quail I saw a big covey on a low branch of a tree. I threw the bridle rein over the end of the limb and took a shot.

"Several birds fell and the rest flew away.

"Well, sir, there were so many quail on that limb that when they flew off it sprang back into place and hung my horse!"—Los Angeles "Times."

Wealth's Milestones.

"Spring has came," mused Mr. Gotrichkwick, as he stood before the window with his hands thrust deep into his pockets.

"Aw, now, how kind you tell, pap?" gurgled his diamond-bedecked daughter.

"Because——," said the father, as he clinked the coins in his pocket, "because the snow has went."

"Stop that noise, Jimmie, or we will send you to bed." "Pa, you don't act like I was your real child at all; you act like I was jes' somebody else's orphan."

When Miss Delavelle Barrington was playing Miami in The Green Bushes at the old Mary Street Theater, Cork, a ludicrous incident occurred. Miami has to jump into the Mississippi, but when Miss Barrington reached the rocky eminence from which she had to leap she saw there was no mattress below to receive her; also the ledge of rock in front of the supposed river was too low to conceal the actress after her leap. Miss Barrington, however, nothing daunted, took her leap, and came down with a thud on the bare stage. The situation struck a member of the "gods," for a stentorian voice called out: "Oh, be jabers, 'tis frozen!"

A salutation of respect in China is to comment on the mature and even venerable appearance of one's guest. When the United States Minister to Siam (Mr. Barrett) called officially on Li Hung Chang he was accompanied by a prominent missionary, a man eighty years of age, with white hair and beard, who was to serve as interpreter. Unknown to Mr. Barrett, the missionary and the Chinaman had had a falling out some years before. Li came into the reception room, saluted Mr. Barrett cordially, and bowed stiffly to the patriarchal interpreter. To the youthful Minister the Premier said: "I congratulate you, sir, on your venerable mien;" and then, nodding toward the octogenarian, he asked: "And is this your son?"

Young Girls

Are often engaged in doing the work of a home under the most trying conditions. Nature cries out against the stooping and lifting, the running up and down stairs at times when labor should be as light as possible. It is owing to overstrain or self-neglect under these conditions that the foundation is laid for serious womanly disease. Irregularity is the first step to impaired womanly health.

Perfect regularity may be established by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It will heal inflammation and ulceration and cure female weakness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"It gives me much pleasure," writes Miss Lilie Sapp, of Jamestown, Guilford County, N. C., "to thank Dr. Pierce for the great good received from the use of his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I had suffered for three years or more at monthly periods. It seemed as though I would die with pains in my back and stomach. I could not stand at all without fainting. Had given up all hope of ever being cured, when one of my friends insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With but little faith I tried it, and before I had taken half a bottle I felt better. Now I have taken two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I am entirely cured, and in two months' time when all other medicines had failed."

By employing compressed air, a Dresden manufacturer has lately succeeded in producing glass vessels of extraordinary size. Heretofore, it is said, concave glass could be blown into vessels having a capacity not exceeding about 26 gallons, but by the new process glass bath-tubs and large glass bottles can be blown.

The highest tunnel in the world is now in course of construction by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Crow's Nest Pass. It is at an altitude of 4,500 feet above sea level. The Loop Tunnel, as the work is called, will be 840 feet long, of which over 300 feet are completed. A force of 200 men is working day and night, and it is anticipated it will be finished by December next. This tunnel will shorten the route by fourteen miles, and will greatly reduce grades and curvatures.

Not long ago a Western Kansas politician was asked by his wife to lay aside politics long enough one day to dig the potatoes in the garden. He consented, and, after digging for a few minutes, went into the house and said he had found a coin. He washed it off, and it proved to be a silver quarter. He put it in his jeans and went back to work. Presently he went to the house again and said he had found another coin. He washed the dirt off of it, and this time it was a silver half-dollar. He put it in his jeans. "I have worked pretty hard," said he to his wife; "I guess I'll take a short nap." When he awoke, he found that his wife had dug all the rest of the potatoes. But she found no coins. It then dawned upon her that she had been "worked."

At the Lotus Club dinner to Ambassador Choate, Senator Chauncey M. Depew told a story on Mr. Choate which caused the assemblage to roar with laughter. The occasion he referred to was a dinner given in New York some years ago to the Earl of Aberdeen, Governor-General of Canada, and head of the Clan Gordon. The earl attended in full regalia, "the wearing of which," said the senator, "consists in leaving off some articles of dress we deem quite essential." He continued: "At the dinner I sat on the earl's right. Choate was next me. Just after the earl seated himself, Choate whispered to me: 'Chauncey, are Aberdeen's legs really bare?' I raised the table-cloth cautiously, and gave that scratch that all Scotchmen appreciate, and said: 'Yes, Joe, they are.' When Choate got up to speak, he said: 'Gentlemen, my invitation did not convey to me the information that the Earl of Aberdeen was to be here to-night in full regalia. If I had known it I would have left my trousers at home.' Well, you never saw a madder crowd of Scotchmen. They thought it a reflection on the national costume of the earl, who had done the diners honor to appear in it. Well, four years have passed since then, and now the earl regards that as a joke, and tells it at least once a day, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year."

Smoking-Cars For Women.

SMOKING seems to be growing in favor among the fair sex, especially on the Continent. So apparent has this become of late that the railroad authorities of Belgium have been seriously considring the advisability of introducing cars in which only women shall be allowed to travel. What has particularly served to bring the matter before the officials' notice is an incident that happened a few weeks since, when a young woman entered one of the carriages on the Southern Railroad reserved for ladies, and in a few minutes after the train had started from Brussels lit a cigarette and began to smoke it. Whereupon the other women in the compartment became very indignant, threatening to complain to the guard as soon as the train stopped. "I am in a carriage reserved for ladies," observed the smoker, blandly, "and I am not aware of any law which prohibits ladies from smoking." When the train stopped, the guard was informed of the proceedings, but was loath to interfere, and the result was that when the woman smoker arrived at her destination, she consulted a lawyer, who has now by an action in court raised the interesting question: Should railroad companies be compelled to provide separate smoking cars for women who wish to smoke while they are traveling? Some of the companies, however, appear to have taken time by the forelock, for it is understood that arrangements have already been made on some of the Belgian railroads to provide smoking compartments exclusively for women addicted to the use of tobacco.

An English mining engineer who has come out from the Yukon brings among other interesting things evidence that the higher the latitude the greater the latitude. Watching a poker game in which the stakes were heavy, he saw a player give himself four aces from the bottom of the pack. Burning with indignation at such shameless cheating, he turned to a bystander and whispered, "Did you see that?" "See what?" "Why, that fellow dealt himself four aces!" "Well, wasn't it his deal?"

His First Deer.

By REGINALD GOURLAY.

MY English friend, Tom Dare, was an enthusiastic sportsman. There was nothing strange about that. Most Englishmen of his type and class are. But then he was besides one of the worst shots when he first came out to this country (he improved afterwards) that I ever saw "waste his lead upon the desert air."

Now, most Englishmen of his class (he was the younger son of a Buckinghamshire squire) are excellent shots, being to the manor born as it were, which made this defect the more remarkable. He was very credulous about some things, particularly as regarded game and shooting in America. Here, again, he resembled many other Englishmen. He was brave, generous and impulsive, much more resembling an Irishman than an Englishman in this last respect. He was also very near-sighted, which accounted in part for his frequent bad shots, and he always wore what he called "glawses."

When I first saw Tom Dare it was on the Canadian Grand Trunk train going west, somewhere between Kingston and Toronto. His compartment in the Pullman car resembled a small shop for the sale of sporting goods, or an exhibit of deadly and murderous weapons. Gun and rifle-cases lay all around him. He had evidently not been able to endure their removal from his sight to the baggage-car. At every stop he would move forward to the latter car and inspect a huge St. Bernard, a pair of pointers and an evil-minded bulldog, with deep solicitude. These interesting animals were making about as much noise as a pack of hounds in full cry, and two of them—the St. Bernard and the bulldog—were dangerous to come near. Some ideas exchanged on sporting topics, and the timely assistance I was able to give him in soothing his excited quadrupeds, made us friendly at once, for there is a singular freemasonry among sportsmen. But when he found that I lived in the very city he was bound for, and that I knew well several people he had letters of introduction to, Englishman-like, Dare expanded completely, and I was soon in possession of his experiences, tribulations and trials since his arrival in the New World, and some of his hopes and plans for the future.

It seems that, having had some property left him by a maiden aunt, as well as the usual younger son's allowance, he was free to realise the chief desire of his soul, which was to visit North America and do his utmost to lessen the number of wild animals on that continent. He confided to me in a burst of enthusiasm, invoked by some appreciative remarks of mine, betokening a congenial spirit, "that spawt—real wild spawt"—was the guiding star of his existence, and that to enjoy it, unfettered by any of the effete restraints which hedge it in at home, was the chief reason of his leaving his native shore.

We reached our destination at last, and Dare departed to a neighboring hotel with his arsenal and canines. In due time he presented his letters of introduction to various families, was taken up very kindly by society, and "put up" at most of the clubs; and was even to be seen, with an intense expression of hopeless gloom overshadowing his countenance, assisting at various fashionable functions.

I met him often at the club and elsewhere, and got to like him very much. I gathered from some remarks that fell from him that he was not altogether happy among his fashionable engagements and surroundings, and that he sighed for the hour when he could escape from them into the wilderness and hunt bears in peace. Like Lady Clara Vere de Vere, "the languid light of his proud eye was wearied with the rolling hours," and he counted the moments till the deer-shooting season opened, and till he could fly from the blandishments of dear Jane or charming Gladys or Ethel to the northern forests.

The happy, longed-for day at last arrived. A generous friend had placed his hunting lodge (he being detained at home by important business) at our disposal for the season. It was situated in Northern Algoma, in what was then—and is now—a great game country. So it happened that just forty-eight hours after the opening of the season Dare and I were standing on the porch of the comfortable little rustic house looking out over the most beautiful little lake in the world. Our four men were bringing packs and baggage from the canoes up to the house with that beautiful calm deliberation and absence of all fussy feverish haste characteristic of the Canadian "halfbreed," while in front of us, leaning on his rifle, stood our guide, the redoubtable Kit Todd, best of hunters and trappers between Lake Superior and the Ottawa.

Tom Dare was in the seventh heaven. During his sojourn in Canada he had learned something about the game of the northern part of this continent. He had found out, for instance, that elk and cariboo did not abound in the neighborhood of New York; that buffalo were extinct in Ohio, in Illinois, and in the vicinity of Toronto, Canada. In fact, that they were virtually extinct everywhere in America. Also, that to get big game anywhere in America you had to go a long way back. He quite understood that in the forests he saw clothing in wild beauty the hills around him he could only expect to get a shot at red or Virginia deer, at small game—if he cared to shoot them—as often and as fast as he could fire, with now and then, by good luck, a chance at a bear or moose. "These," he remarked to Kit Todd, the guide, with great magnanimity, "were quite good enough for him. All he asked was to be led to the fray at once."

This was, of course, impossible, as it was within an hour or so of sunset, and the long black shadows of the hemlocks and birches already stretched far over the glossy waters of the little lake. But very early next morning Kit Todd, moved by Dare's pathetic entreaties, took us out for a short, informal still-hunt over the ridges, "to sorter prospect like," as he expressed it.

Tom's emotions on being at last a denizen of the vast and trackless woods were genuine and uncontrolled. I could appreciate them, for a more glorious October morning never dawned. It was pretty enough by the lake, where our lodge was, the light blue of the water exactly matching the color of the sky, while the startlingly vivid hues, by comparison, of the brilliant autumnal foliage of the trees enshrining its shores, made the water seem almost unreal—like air.

But in the great woods it was grand! The endless contrast of tints—the dark red of the oak against the light yellow of the beeches; the vivid crimson of the maple standing out like a fire on a dark night against a black belt of cedars; the scarlet of the sumach and the gold of the birch; the great white pines and hemlocks, with mighty column-like stems, lifting their changeless mass of dark needles far above the medley of gay colors beneath, as if in disdain of their tawdry fickleness—all this wealth and confusion of color was the first thing that struck the intruder into this great temple of nature. And next the silence—or, rather, what seemed a great silence at first, for one soon discovered that it was broken by innumerable undertones, the many voices of the great forest, the never-ceasing tokens of the eternal unrest of nature. The creaking of one giant bough against another, the far-off drumming of a grouse, the bark of the red fox, the dropping of a pine cone—even the vague, uncertain descent of a leaf, or the cry of the jay or ivory-billed woodpecker far off in the deep melancholy forest, filled one with the idea that here at last were the frontiers of that great wild Nature which man in America is ever driving further and further away. But she—patient and biding her time—will perhaps come back in a few thousands of years and hide him and his works, as she has hidden those of many a race and dynasty in the Old World and the New since the earth was young.

Dare felt all these things so much that he asked to be allowed to take care of himself for a while, "to give him the true feeling of solitude," he said. So Kit and I went along one ridge, and Dare made his way along another running parallel with ours, and about a hundred yards to the right. He hadn't been gone twenty minutes when he put a bullet (45.75 Winchester) through the top of my fore-and-aft cap, which I had foolishly decorated with a deer's tail, an absurdity which almost invited accident when a "tenderfoot" was one of the party.

"That gent with the goggles is out after meat," said Kit dryly, as he surveyed the two holes. "An' seemin'ly he ain't noways pertic'ler what kind he gits."

Tom's consternation, of course, was extreme, but it was mingled with a sort of injured feeling towards me for not having been a deer. After that Todd accompanied Dare to prevent these little mistakes as to the nature of his game, and also to prevent his indulging in what Todd called "permiskyus gunnin'"—i.e., firing his rifle at partridge, rabbits, etc., which he showed every disposition to do, and which would effectually settle any hope of our even getting sight of a deer. I went along the parallel ridge alone.

There were many deer in the Algoma woods in those days (there are many now, for that matter), so we saw plenty of tracks. Still, I didn't expect much success, for several reasons. For one thing, the day was too fine. There was no wind in the woods, and the rustle of our steps in the dead leaves would be audible to the keen hearing of a deer far away. Then there were too many of us. The solitary, silent sportsman is the one that gets game, still-hunting.

So I was agreeably surprised when, not five minutes after we had separated, Dare and Todd "jumped" a deer from an oak top with the leaves still on, left by lumberers. Todd let drive at it with his single-fire rifle as it made its first long, beautiful bound out of cover, and, strange to say—for he was a first-rate shot—only scraped its flank. The deer, a spike-buck, went straight away up the ridge in full view, while with frenzied haste and uncertain aim crack! crack! crack! went Tom's repeater.

The buck was just topping the ridge, about two hundred yards off, when Dare fired a last wild, despairing shot, and the deer gave a great bound, stretching his fore and hind legs stiffly out. Then all its limbs collapsed in mid-air, and it pitched straight forward on its head.

"By gum, sir, you killed him!" yelled the guide, looking at Dare with a wild surprise, similar to that which Mark Twain's musing spider exhibited when he stepped on the red-hot shovel.

But Dare had uttered a long, loud yell of triumph and victory, and was tearing along the ridge, brandishing a murderous-looking knife. We followed, and arrived just in time to prevent his cutting the dead buck's head off on the spot for a trophy. As Todd and I came up the ridge together I heard the guide muttering: "Killed in his tracks! Goin' full lick! Two hundred yards good, an' by a tenderfoot as takes a man's hat for a deer! Meeracles ain't through happenin' yet, by gum!"

The buck was hit in the back of the head, just below the horns. The bullet had passed through the brain and out at the forehead, killing him instantly. It was a ghastly fluke, but a lucky one, for Dare had killed his first deer the very first day out, and fairly too.

We now thought we had done enough for glory that day, especially as our whole outfit had still to be unpacked. Dare, too, was most anxious to get his prey back at once to our hunting-lodge. He seemed to think that it would vanish into thin air if he took his eyes off it for a moment. So with considerable difficulty we dragged the animal back to the lodge.

And for the rest of that day, amidst all the clatter of unpacking, the talk and the chaff, Dare sat silent and happy, his head enveloped in a cloud of tobacco smoke, replying only in monosyllables when addressed. But on his face was a deep, seraphic peace, like that which illumines the countenance of a Sioux or Pawnee chief who has just succeeded in "collecting" the scalp of his deadliest enemy. For the time his heart's chief desire was realised. He had slain his first deer.

How it Looked to Him.

This is what "Short Stories" tells of a staunch young churchman who is most careful in his observance of the feasts and fasts of the year:

When the owl lunch wagons in Herald Square were still a novelty, he visited New York and saw one for the first time.

"What have we here?" he said to his companion.

"What a question from you!" was the retort. "A good churchman like you not to know a movable feast when he sees it!"

"Oh, I should call it a restaurant a la carte," promptly replied the "good churchman."

A lunacy commissioner was making his customary rounds. An inmate whose particular fancy it was to pose as a much-married man approached with the announcement that he had once again taken to himself a wife. "And who is the fortunate lady?" said the commissioner. "Ah," said the lunatic, smiling sweetly, "she's the daughter of the devil." "Indeed; and how do you get on together?" "Get on? Oh, well, I get on right enough with the wife; but it's the old people I can't put up with!"

Anecdotal.

While preaching from the text: "He giveth his beloved sleep," a minister stopped in the middle of his sermon, gazed upon his dozing auditors, and said: "Brethren, it is hard to realize the wondrous unbounded love the Lord appears to have for a good portion of this congregation."

The "Green Bag" tells of a lawyer who was about to furnish a bill of costs. "I hope," said his client, who was a baker, "that you will make it as light as possible." "Ah," said the lawyer, "you might perhaps say that to the foreman of your establishment, but that is not the way I make my bread!"

While James McNeill Whistler, the eccentric American painter, was in a London shop one day a customer rushed in, and, mistaking Mr. Whistler for a clerk, exclaimed: "I say, this hat doesn't fit." The artist eyed him for a minute, and then replied, scornfully: "Neither does your coat, and I'll be hanged if I like the color of your trousers."

An attorney named Else, rather diminutive in his stature, and not particularly respectable in his character, once met Jekyll. "Sir," said he, "I hear you have called me a pettifogging scoundrel. Have you done so, sir?" "Sir," said Jekyll, with a look of contempt, "I never said you were a pettifogger, or a scoundrel, but I said you were 'little Else.'"

When Bishop Potter was asked, the other day, what he thought of woman suffrage he made the diplomatic reply: "My dear madam, I have gotten away beyond that; I am trying to make the best terms with the sex that I can obtain." This brings to mind the mot of William M. Evarts when asked by a lady if he did not think that woman was the best judge of woman. He replied: "Not only the best judge, madam, but the best executioner."

"S. Paul" is the name above a chemist's shop in a London suburb. It arrested the attention of a convivial gentleman returning home in the small hours, and he rang the bell vigorously. The chemist's head appeared above. "What is it?" he called out. "Want speak t' you ver' pert'clar," said the convivial one. "What is it; d' you want some medicine?" "Want speak t' you ver' pert'clar." The chemist hastily dressed, came down, and opening the door exclaimed impatiently, "Well now, what is it?" "I want know—did you ever get answer to that terr—terr'ble long epistle you wrote to Thes'lonians?"

J. Pierpont Morgan makes his boast that he never has been interviewed, and declares that in the last seven years but one interviewer ever has been able to approach him. This was on a recent trip to Europe, when a representative of the London "Times" would not take "No" for his answer. "Tell the 'Times' man my time is worth ten pounds a minute," at last said Morgan. "The 'Times' man says he'll take two minutes at that," came back the reply. The interviewer handed Mr. Morgan twenty pounds, talked just two minutes by both their watches, did all the talking himself, and rose to go on the instant. "Why did you want to see me?" Morgan asked in curiosity. "Oh, I wagered one hundred pounds that I would interview you personally, that's all," was his reply. Morgan congratulated him on his enterprise, and dismissed him within the third minute of his call. When asked, the other day, if he kept the twenty pounds, Morgan said: "Yes, and I haven't earned money in a long time that gave me the satisfaction that twenty pounds did."

Lincoln, even as a young man, was always ready and resourceful on the platform. In the new book, Lincoln in Story, it is related that in 1836 Lincoln made a telling speech in an election campaign for the State Legislature of Illinois. George Forquer, an old and respected citizen, who had changed his party, and almost simultaneously had been appointed to a fat office by his new friends, was present. Just at this time Mr. Forquer had completed the finest house in Springfield and over it erected a lightning-rod, the first in that region. At the conclusion of Lincoln's speech, Forquer took it upon himself to reply, commencing thus: "This young man will have to be taken down, and I am sorry the task devolves upon me." He then proceeded to answer Lincoln's argument in an able and fair but patronizing manner. At length Forquer ended and Lincoln had the floor to reply. "The gentleman has seen fit," said he, "to allude to my being a young man, but he forgets that I am older in years than in the tricks and trades of politicians. I desire long life and I desire place and distinction, but I would rather die now than, like the gentleman, live to see the day that I would change my politics for an office worth $3,000 a year and then feel compelled to erect a lightning-rod to protect a guilty conscience from an offended God."

Hard Luck in the West.

The cowboy sat down on the ground, fingered a roll of bills and looked sadly at his pard.

"Bill," he said, "it's no use. I can't go to town with you to-day."

"Why?" asked Bill.

"I've only got $35 to my name."

"Figger it up ag'in," said Bill.

"No use. I've figgered it up a dozen times, and it always comes out the same. It'll take $30 for the drunk, dollar an' a half for bed an' breakfast, three an' a half for ca'tridges, an' that won't leave a cussed cent to pay the fine."—Indianapolis "Sun."

Ouida in Her Old Age.

Ouida, as Mlle. De La Ramee prefers to call herself, is now an elderly lady, but she still affects the white muslin frocks and pale blue ribbons of a bygone era. She is the autocratic queen of a large circle of admirers at Florence, where she has an ideal home, and an extraordinary collection of dogs. Ouida does not like England or English life and food, and not infrequently at London dinner-tables has asked for cold roast beef and beer, that being the level, she says, on which she places English cookery.

"I thought you were given a job in the public service because of the work you did for the party." "I was, but I quit." "Why?" "Why! Why, hang it all, they're getting so blamed particular now that they want a feller to work for his salary."—Chicago "Post."

Curious Bits of News.

The present mace of the British House of Commons has been in use since the reign of Charles II. It has accordingly witnessed the rise and development of constitutional principles and practice, and of the responsibility of Ministers of the Crown to the House of Commons, and through the House of Commons to the people at large.

Most people, if they were asked to state the color of the sun, would say that it was orange, and they would as confidently assert that the color of the atmosphere was blue. Recent researches and investigations, however, says "Knowledge," point to the conclusion that the real color of the sun is blue, while that of the atmosphere surrounding the earth is orange.

A good many formalities are necessary for the women of Sumatra before they can lay aside their widow's weeds, says "Womanhood." Immediately after the husband's death the disconsolate widow places a flagstaff in front of her door, and on this a flag is raised. As long as the flag remains untorn by the wind etiquette forbids her to marry, but with the appearance of the first rent she can lay aside her mourning garb, begin to take notice and to receive offers of marriage.

A little machine which threads one thousand needles a minute is at work in St. Gall, Switzerland. The purpose of the machine is to thread needles that are placed afterwards in an embroidery loom for making Swiss or Hamburg lace. The device is almost entirely automatic. It takes the needle from a hopper, carries it along and threads it, ties the knot, cuts the thread off a uniform length, then carries the needle across an open space and sticks it in a rack. The work of threading these needles was formerly done by hand.

The highest waterfall in the world, geography tells us, is the Cerosola cascade, in the Alps, having a fall of 2,400 feet; that of Arvey, in Savoy, is 1,100 feet, and the falls of the Yosemite Valley range from 700 to 1,000 feet. But higher yet is the fall in the San Cayatan canyon, in the State of Durango, Mexico. It was discovered by some prospectors ten years ago in the great Barranca district, which is called the Tierras Desconocidas. While searching for the famous lost mine, Naranjal, a great roar of water was heard. With great difficulty the party pushed on and up and down the mighty chasms, until they beheld the superb fall that is at least 3,000 feet high.

The date-palm may solve the problem of what to do with the arid and alkali lands of Arizona and other Western States. Experiments have been made in the past, but renewed interest is being taken by the section of plant introduction of the Department of Agriculture at Washington. According to the New York "Sun," Professor D. G. Fairchild, agricultural explorer for the department, now traveling in Africa, has procured a number of suckers, or off-shoots, from the Delta of the Nile, which will be distributed in the southwestern States. In the United States the date is an article of luxury, but in its native country it is a most important food, many regions in Arabia and the Sahara being uninhabitable but for the date-palm.

President Harper of the University of Chicago recently received the following letter from a prospective girl-student at Pecatonica, Ill.: "Dear Dr. Harper—I know you will be pleased to learn that I have decided to attend the university school of education this fall. I am going to Chicago next Saturday on the morning train, and as I have never been in the city before, I would be glad if you would meet me at the depot. I am five feet four inches tall, have light hair and eyes, and a pleasing appearance. I shall wear a dark-brown traveling skirt and a blue waist with white yoke. I think I shall know you from your pictures, but for fear I make a mistake, will you please wear your card in your hat?"

"A pathetic incident in connection with a biograph scene occurred in Detroit, Mich., March 17 last," says "Popular Science." "A view made at the occupation of Peking was being flashed across the screen. It represented a detachment of the Fourteenth United States Infantry entering the gates of the Chinese capital. As the last file of soldiers seemed literally stepping out of the frame on to the stage, there rose a scream from a woman who sat in front. 'My God!' she cried hysterically, 'there is my dead brother Allen marching with the soldiers.' The figure had been recognized by others in the audience as that of Allen McCaskill, who had mysteriously disappeared some years before. Subsequently Mrs. Booth, the sister, wrote to the War Department and learned that it really was her brother whose presentment she so strangely had been confronted with."

Citizen—Madam, why do you persist in punching me with your umbrella?

Changed Her Mind.

The house was "handy to the street car line" and in good repair, there were the proper number of closets and the rental was reasonable, but before coming to terms the house-hunting matron said to the agent:

"It is only fair for me to tell you that we have five boys."

"That won't make any difference, ma'am," he said, with a smile. "You will find big families of boys on both sides of you."

"Oh, then I don't want the house at all!" she exclaimed. "I want to find a neighborhood where there won't be any boys but mine!"

At last accounts she was still hunting.

AUTHOR AND PHYSICIAN

Writes Interesting Tale

The author of "Under Palmetto and Pine," "Norma Trist," "Four Years on Wheels," etc., Dr. J. W. Carhart of La Grange, Texas, in addition to his literary efforts is a hard working physician in general practice.

He writes interestingly of how his freedom from heart trouble was gained by leaving off coffee and using Postum. "I drank coffee in the ordinary form for many years; nervous trouble involving disturbance of the heart's action resulted.

On coming to Texas I fell into the habit of drinking coffee after hard, cold rides in my practice or when in camp or on the trail. My heart trouble soon became exceedingly aggravating, resulting in frequent attacks of what was pronounced angina pectoris, a severe agonizing pain over the heart extending to the back and sometimes down the left arm.

In some of these attacks but for the timely administration of morphine injected hypodermically I could have survived but a short time.

At different times I abandoned the use of coffee, believing it the cause of my troubles, and invariably improved, but as I had nothing satisfactory to take its place in the way of a beverage I returned to its use.

The literature of Postum Cereal Coffee came to my notice and I resolved to try it. The directions for preparation were strictly followed and I found it an agreeable, appetizing, invigorating table beverage. I continued its use in my family for the past year and a half or two years during which time I have never had an attack of my old heart trouble, am capable now at the age of 67 years and do as much professional and literary work as at any period of my life. I can endure physical exercise without weariness but with zest and relish, and have gained in weight from 134 pounds to 165 pounds."

The doctor further refers to the widespread prevalence of heart trouble from the use of coffee and tobacco, and speaks of the advantage gained by patients when they leave off coffee and take Postum.

It must also be added that the poison of the coffee does not affect the heart in some patients but shows its work in the stomach and bowels with one, perhaps in the eyes with another, and kidneys with another, and general nervous prostration with another.

It is never possible to tell just where the result of the poisoned nerve centers will show forth. There is but one way to surely cure such cases and that is by insisting upon leaving off coffee and using Postum in its place. Postum contains the elements for rebuilding the nerve cells and brain. Albumen is furnished in a variety of foods, but albumen cannot be made into the soft gray matter of the brain and nerve cells except by the action of phosphate of potash upon it and the system will not always take up the crude phosphate of potash, whereas, it can be depended upon to take up the delicate particles of that element when presented as Nature presents it in food. It is in both Postum Coffee and Grape-Nuts.

C. O. C. F. CONCERT

A Very Pleasant Evening Spent in the S.O.E. Hall Last Night

The concert under the auspices of the Canadian Order of Chosen Friends in the S.O.E. hall, on Hunter street, last night, was one of the most pleasant and successful functions of the kind held this season. An excellent program had been prepared, and was presented as follows:

Instrumental	Miss Armstrong
Chairman's address	Mr. Harding
Song	Mr. Joe Halpenny
Reading	Miss White
Song	Mr. Halpenny
Distribution of Prizes.
Musical and juggling act	Mr. Dundas
Recitation	Mr. Halpenny
Recitation	Miss White

God Save the King.

A striking feature of the entertainment was the gifts given to each ticket purchaser. The prizes consisted of jewel trays, Japanese bowls, fancy pen and pencil holders, potato mashers, egg beaters and many other articles. The distribution of prizes was a very amusing part of the entertainment.

Mr. Harding performed the duties of chairman in a very pleasing and acceptable manner.

The large hall was packed to the doors with a most appreciative audience.

Impossible to Dye Cotton and Wool Fabrics With One Dye

Do not allow any dealer to sell you a dye that claims to color cotton and wool with same dye. Cotton being a vegetable fibre, requires a specially prepared dye. Wool, being an animal fibre, calls for a dye that cannot give satisfactory results on cotton goods. The manufacturers of Diamond Dyes prepare special dyes for the coloring of cotton goods that cannot be produced by other makers of home package dyes. These cotton dyes are fast and solid. Washing or sunlight cannot fade them. Fast Diamond Dye cotton colors are used by all who make up homemade carpets and mats and rugs. All druggists and dealers should have these special cotton colors for your convenience.

If you are thinking of using your cotton or wool rags in the making up of pretty mats and rugs, send your address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., and they will send you free of cost, sheets of the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns.

CASE OF SUSPECTED FOUL PLAY

The Death of David Valentine to be Investigated by the authorities

There seems to be some doubt in the minds of some as to the events leading up to the death of David Valentine which happened on Saturday evening Feb. 8th. On Monday morning the dead body was found in the snow by Mr. John Telford, when he was going to his work in the woods. There seems to be some mystery about the death. Whether there was foul play or was death the result of his becoming exhausted in the terrible snow storm that raged that night. These questions have been raised and it is possible that a coroners jury will be called to investigate the matter and to gain all possible information regarding the mans death.

The occurrence is quite fresh in the minds of the people of the community and the result of the investigation will be watched with very deep interest.

The following particulars were given by the Lakefield News of the accident,—

"On Thursday, February 6th, Mr. Valentine, who was about 68 years of age, left Mr. Hick's house in order to go to Lakefield and Peterborough to transact some business. He attended to this at both places and reached Burleigh safely on his way home on the following Saturday night between seven and eight o'clock. He had stayed at Young's. He was last seen alive by Mr. John Telford, who lives about a quarter of a mile from Burleigh Falls hotel. Mr. Telford was awakened during the night by someone rapping on the door. He got up lit a lamp and went to the door with it. The wind, however, blew out the light, but he saw a man walking down the road, whom he at once recognized, by his walk, to be Valentine. Mr. Telford thought nothing more of the matter, as there was nothing in the man's appearance to betoken that anything was the matter with him, so naturally he allowed him to pass on. The night was, as every one knows, a very stormy one, and the poor old man must have lost his way. This has been made evident from the fact that where he was found it was discovered that he had beaten down a hard path in his efforts to keep himself from freezing. Exhaustion evidently supervened and he finally sank face downwards in the snow."

The remains were taken to St. Thomas and interred there.

After the funeral at St. Thomas, the daughter of the deceased, accompanied by a friend came to town and visited the scene of her father's death. On returning to town on Friday she interviewed Coroner Gray and swore out the necessary information for an inquest, stating that she believed her father had come to his death by foul play or through the negligence on the part of others. The information stated that a dent had been found in the skull, blood from his nose and mouth was on some of his clothing.

Acting on the information Coroner Gray issued a warrant for an inquest. The difficulty that next confronted the authorities was the fact that the body had been interred at St. Thomas, and the body could not be produced at an inquest here without being first disinterred.

Mr. R. E. Wood, County Crown Attorney, therefore wrote to the Attorney General's Department, at Toronto, enclosing the papers, to allow the authorities to look into the matter. As a result, Detective Greer, of the provincial staff came to town and interviewed the authorities. After looking into the matter he left for St. Thomas to have the body taken up and a post-mortem made to see if the statements in the information were correct. If such proves to be the case an inquest will be held. If not correct then it is probable that the inquest will be withdrawn. It is said that some suspicions are held by the authorities but they are very reticent regarding them and are awaiting the results of the post-mortem examination.

An Old Land Mark Gone

A popular tree which for the past half a century has grown and flourished on Charlotte street, near the G. T. R. station was cut down yesterday. The lot on which the tree grew is owned by Mr. R. A. Morrow.

In 1848 Mr. James Stevenson, of town planted this tree with several others and has watched it grow to an enormous size. No less than five cords of wood was cut from the tree.

AN ARMY OF AFFLICTED WOMEN

NERVOUSNESS IN VARYING FORMS IS ON THE INCREASE IN CANADA

Paine's Celery Compound

RESTORES THE NERVOUS SYSTEM TO FULL VIGOR AND STRENGTH

Paine's Celery Compound is the true physical strengthener and nerve nourisher for women suffering from physical exhaustion, tired nerves and brain, and sleeplessness. This great medicine quickly bestows energy and vigor, banishes headache, tired feelings, despondency, languidness, makes rich, pure blood, and imparts a health that copes with all the duties and work of life. Paine's Celery Compound does for weak women a work that no physician can accomplish; it brings true womanhood and happiness as nothing else can do. Mrs. E. Hurd, of Summerville, Hants Co., N.S., writes for the benefit of suffering women as follows:

"I cannot speak too highly of your wonderful curing medicine, Paine's Celery Compound, from which I have derived such direct benefit after suffering from nervous prostration, sleeplessness and general debility. I first used one bottle and was highly improved; I afterward used two bottles more, and now am quite well. I wish to recommend Paine's Celery Compound to others, and trust it will be found in every home where sickness prevails."

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated,

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

Business Chances

THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY—$5.00 per month for 10 months will buy 1,100 shares in a well equipped working gold mine, situated in one of the best districts in Colorado, and is surrounded by producing mines. Our proposition will stand the most rigid investigation. Write at once for particulars; bank references. The Bunnie Investment Co., 14 & 16 Nevada Bldg., Denver, Colo.

Notice.

To Contractors, Builders and all employing carpenters, joiners and wood working machine hands:

Union No. 672 respectfully ask you to give union men the preference on your work on and after March 15th, 1902, after which date the above named union mechanics cannot work with non-union of the same class.

TWO MORE WARDS

Taken in Charge by the Children's Aid Society of Town

The good work of the Children's Aid Society is flourishing. Two children by the name of Armstrong, whose mother a Mrs. M. LeLaughlan resides in Cardiff Township, Haliburton, were given over to the care of the society yesterday. The children are a girl and boy, ages 10 and 11 years respectively. For some three years the children have been living with their grandmother, in town, and a few days ago their mother came and wanted to take charge of them. The children said they would rather live with their grandmother and an order was made giving the children into the care of the Children's Aid. The society then entered into an agreement with the grandmother to look after the children as heretofore.

CANADA ASKS GREAT BRITAIN FOR HELP

Has Made all the Possible Concessions to the United States Regarding the Alaskan Boundary Question

London, Feb. 28.—Canada has recently informed the British Government that she has made all possible concessions to the United States, regarding the Alaskan boundary, and she wishes England to support her demands.

DESPERADO TAKEN BY YUKON POLICE.

Dawson, via Ashcroft, B.C., Feb. 28—Mounted Police at the Stockade Road House Yukon, captured William Brophy, a notorious robber, after a ten-weeks' hunt. During the scuffle while arresting him, a revolver belonging to one of the policemen, exploded the bullet going through Brophy's abdomen and emerging near the spine. The police have spent over $10,000 in the search, and the capture is the most noted since that of Murderer O'Brien.

GREAT BRITAIN WARNED AGAINST GERMANY.

Dr. Morrison Suggests That German Extortion and Secret Privileges Should be Protested Against

London, Feb. 28.—Dr. Morrison, (Pekin correspondent of The Times, protests against British and European indifference to Germany's acquisitions in Shan Tung. Dr. Morrison says the reason of the menacing attitude of the German consul at Sinan Foo and the Minister at Pekin, as well as the presence of German troops at Tien Tsin and Shanghai and the refusal to reduce the number, is that the conclusion of the Shan Tung agreement may be enforced, while the attention of other Governments is diverted to Manchuria. He suggests that before it is too late the powerful and unanswerable note of the American Secretary of State to Russia should also be sent to Germany as a protest against extortion and secret privileges at Shan Tung. He declares that Germany already monopolizes railway construction at Shan Tung, that all material is exclusively purchased in Germany; that Germany holds the mineral rights for ten miles on each side of the railway, and that all the mining machinery is purchased in Germany. Now, Dr. Morrison says, Germany is acquiring rights which give her the entire mineral wealth of a province larger than England and Wales combined. He hopes that Britain will at least decide that the undertaking not to build another railway from Wei-Hai-Wei has been rendered null by the German violation of the British-German agreement.

EXILE NOT INEVITABLE.

London, Feb. 28.—The Colonial Secretary, Joseph Chamberlain, made an interesting statement in the House of Commons yesterday, to the effect that the proclamation providing for the banishment of the Boer leaders did not preclude Lord Kitchener or Lord Milner from accepting the surrender of Boer leaders on modified conditions.

Lord Kitchener, on his own authority, has already accepted the surrender of some of the minor leaders, on the understanding that the provisions of the banishment proclamation would not be enforced.

THE TIMES ON PRINCE HENRY'S VISIT.

London, Feb. 28.—An editorial in The Times, discussing Prince Henry's visit to America, says: "The more closely Germans adopt American principles, the more steadfastly they act upon them in China and elsewhere, the better pleased will be the English-speaking race on both sides of the ocean."

TITLES FOR JAPANESE DIPLOMATS.

London, Feb. 28.—A despatch to The Times from Tokio, Japan, says that in connection with the conclusion of the British-Japanese treaty, the Emperor granted the title of Baron to six Cabinet Ministers. Premier Katsura was made a Count.

STEAMSHIP RATES WILL NOT INCREASE.

Paris, Feb. 28.—A despatch to The Paris edition of the Herald, from London, says that in Liverpool shipping circles it is stated that owing to disagreement among the owners of the transatlantic lines, negotiations regarding uniform rates and fares have fallen through.

A VERY UNHAPPY WEEK FOR GREAT BRITAIN.

Frederick Greenwood Writes of the Prince's Visit—Grief and Surprise at Our Flirtation with Germany

London, Feb. 28.—Frederick Greenwood, the well-known writer on political subjects has an article in the Pall Mall Gazette to-day on the United States, Germany and Great Britain in which he says:

"A more rapid or more striking change of scene has rarely been witnessed than when a short while ago the sun went down upon Germany raging full front against these shores, to rise the next day upon the same Germania with her plaits in order, blowing kisses to the United States. Though the correspondents of our newspapers have done their best in assuring us again and again that the merest flirtation is meant, and genuine affections of America are fixed on England, a long week's unhappiness awaits us. Indeed, at the first glimpse of what was going on in Germany and the United States there was some grief and much surprise in England, and neither has been done away with. Whisperings of the sundering of ties of gratitude and forgotten bonds of obligation arose immediately where silence on such matters would have been not only more dignified but more business-like. It would have been more business-like even if the services rendered to the United States by our Government had been greater than those we hear of and if, in asserting them, they had not been unfortunately exposed to contradiction and dispute.

"Until Lord Cranborne opened the subject, England's services to America at the crises of the quarrel with Spain were but vaguely known on either side of the Atlantic except to an official few. By degrees we in England were getting prouder and prouder of the good turn we had contrived for our American cousins, though we did not know exactly what it was. In the meantime our American cousins were swelling to an adequate sense of gratitude, though they did not know exactly why. One thing, however, is generally understood.

"If the friendship was English the enmity was German. Whatever was its scope and intention the plot was made in Germany. However baffled, it was baffled by England. Therefore it must be allowed that England might naturally be overcome with chagrin for the moment, when, at the very time the German quarrel rose to its worst, her enemy and her friend were seen running to embrace. Did our old political instinct remain unimpaired we should have felt that there was not much pride in recalling claims to gratitude, nor even much wisdom, for such claims are most in danger when reproachfully asserted. Friendship there was in what we did, but policy also.

"As an independent consideration it is not foolishness but wisdom and something more if the Americans decide that German interference was "all in the game." This we ought to be sensible of. The Americans can be quite sufficiently grateful to England for a kindly turn and yet cherish no long resentment for what on the other hand was neither a very novel nor unfair stroke of diplomacy.

"The reception of Prince Henry may bring us solid benefits. We do not all know how to value yet the first correction of the kith-and-kin illusion. Indeed, the most excellent consequence of the second and clear understanding of the conditions upon which the United States enters upon its imperial career and of the obligations prescribed to its Government by wisdom as much as by necessity is that its foreign policy demands complete freedom from all understandings and alliances except such as have a definite, limited and separable purpose."

The article concludes: "As for the Anglo-American understanding, such as we heard so much of two or three years ago, it will be just as likely after the visit of Prince Henry as before—that is to say, it will never be likely until the two nations are threatened by a common enemy."

BOER AND FILIPINOS

A Buffalo Paper Tells Uncle Sam Some Wholesome Truths

Buffalo, March 1—The News of this city prints the following:

These pro-Boer meetings by Americans are the strangest anomalies of the present times, which fully illustrate a condition wherein the Scriptures admonish the removal of the beam from one's own eye before attempting to extract the mote from your neighbor's optic, and may not other nations have the laugh on us regarding these meetings denunciatory of the English policy in South Africa, when we are following exactly in her footsteps in our unjust war upon the Filipinos? England, in justification of her proceedings, held suzerain power over the Boers, who declared war, invaded her territory, took possession of cities, proclaimed annexation, burned defenceless farm houses, murdered non-combatants, and robbed them of their horses and cattle, ere England drew a sword in their defense. On the other hand, our only right to the possession of the Philippine Islands was the payment of twenty million dollars to the hated Spaniards, who were not able to deliver the same, as the long and costly, and thus far unavailing struggle to subdue their inhabitants fully proves.

BRITISH AMERICA ASSURANCE

A Splendid Report Presented at the Annual Meeting

The report presented to the Shareholders of the British America Assurance Company, at the annual meeting held at the Head Office, Toronto, on Thursday last, is one that reflects the greatest credit on the management of this great and popular Canadian institution.

The remarks of the President, Hon. Geo. A. Cox, will be read with interest and profit, as they show the trend of events in fire insurance work. The progress of the British America, which is so well and favorably known to the people of Peterborough and Eastern Ontario, is entirely due to careful management and just and honorable dealings with its patrons. Mr. J. J. Kenny, the Vice-President and Managing Director, has good reason to feel proud of the very high position which his company has attained in the confidence and the esteem of the people.

KING DESIRES TO COME

Ruler of Abyssinia May Attend St. Louis Exposition

St. Louis, March 1—The World's Fair management yesterday received information that the presence of Menelik, the king of Abyssinia, at the exposition, is quite within the range of possibilities. The information is that an invitation, properly extended to the king, would meet with acceptance. This will receive early attention.

Catarrh is a Germ Disease

Science, armed with the microscope, has established it a fact, and this conclusion renders obsolete the practice of treating asthma, catarrh and bronchitis by stomach drugging, sprays, snuffs, etc. Such treatments are an utter failure because they cannot penetrate the delicate air cells of the lungs, or permeate the air passages of the nose and bronchial tubes where the germs of catarrh have their stronghold. Catarrhozone is the only certain remedy. It is inhaled by the mouth and after spreading through all the respiratory organs is exhaled through the nostrils. Catarrhozone kills the germs, heals the inflamed tissues, clears the head and throat in two minutes, and heals in a few hours. Nothing is so effective, pleasant and simple as Catarrhozone. Two months' treatment $1.00, small size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Stringent Orders to Prevent the Spread of Smallpox

MINISTERS WILL FIGHT A DUEL.

Officers, Seamen, Firemen and Immigrants of all American-Bound Vessels Sailing from English Ports Affected

London, Feb. 28.— Commencing today, all American-bound vessels from English ports infected with smallpox must have their officers, seamen, firemen and immigrants vaccinated, unless they can show signs that they were recently inoculated with vaccine virus. The order includes Liverpool, Glasgow and London, but Plymouth and Southampton so far excepted. The United States consular officers are instituting a rigid system of inspection. If the epidemic increases they may suggest even more strict measures.

THE LIVERPOOL CUP

Liverpool, Feb. 28.— The final heat of the annual coursing match for the Liverpool Cup was run off to-day, and resulted in a victory for G. F. Fawcett's brindled dog. Farndon Ferry by Fiery Furnace-Fair Florence.

MINISTER WILL FIGHT A DUEL

Athens, Feb. 28.—M. Topalis, the Minister of Justice, has resigned in order to fight a duel with Colonel Koumoundouros. The quarrel which caused the encounter to be decided on was the outcome of proceedings against one of the deputies charged with inciting to commit murder.

ANOTHER AMERICAN SCHEME

London, Feb. 28—A Moscow telegram to The Standard says that among the colossal schemes which Americans have endeavored to push in Russia is one for taking up and reorganizing the entire traffic of the River Volga.

MINING DISTRICTS AGITATED

Madrid, Feb. 28.—The mining regions are in a ferment of agitation. At Albujon and Madridejos rioters have set fire to the municipal revenue offices and burned the documents they contained. There has been another outbreak of disorder at Barcelona. Frequent meetings are being held with the object of declaring another general strike. The metal workers are constantly assaulting their comrades who have returned to work, and refuse to resume their tasks until all the imprisoned workmen are released.

OFFICIAL STORY OF RUSSIA R O'S

St. Petersburg, Feb. 28.—According to an official account of the disturbances Feb 22 at Moscow University, four hundred students, armed with bludgeons, iron bars and revolvers, wrecked the interior of the University buildings, barricaded themselves within, and hung out red flags from the windows. The police and troops forced an entrance into the interior, and arrested the ringleaders of the rioters. A decree of the Minister of Public Instruction has been gazetted, ordering the expulsion from the university and high schools of all students arrested in connection with rioting.

RUSSIAN AMBASSADOR PROTESTS

Constantinople, Feb. 28.— The Russian Ambassador here, I A Zinovieff, has made vigorous representations to the Porte concerning the belligerent situation in the neighborhood of Ipek, Albania, where a tribal fight, during which two Turkish soldiers were killed, occurred February 23rd, pointing out Turkey's responsibility for the safety of the Christians in Albania.

A SMALLPOX CURE

Correspondent Gives Description of a Remedy That Cured in 1854

A correspondent writes: It may be of interest to the public generally, now that smallpox is, figuratively, in the air, to know that about the year 1854 this dread scourge was more or less a live topic as it is to-day. Remedies were then discussed the same as now and among the number, if my recollection is not at fault, the following had been tried in India with success. When a person was seized with the disease Croton oil was applied to the patient's chest, thereby bringing out a violent eruption to the exclusion of all other parts of the person, thus relieving the sufferer by hastening the progress of the malady in its most dangerous stage. It is said that owing to the thickness of the skin of dark races the disease is nearly always fatal. Therefore croton oil will ensure an eruption on either a white or black. If the above is of any value it would be well to give it a wide publicity; it is certainly deserving of a trial.

FIRE AT STONY LAKE

Dwelling House of Mr. John Hubble Burned—His Loss is Heavy

On Friday of last week, while Mr. Hubble and others were eating their dinner they heard a cracking noise and in looking to see what was the matter they discovered the roof of the house on fire. The men made a great struggle to put out the fire but it gained steadily on them and in a short time the house was reduced to ashes. The furniture in the lower story was saved but the beds, bedding and clothing in the upper flat were burned together with a large amount of provisions stored in the cellar. The loss will amount to about $700 while the insurance is only about $400.

Mr. Hubble has been very unfortunate during the past few years, having suffered severely from fires a number of times. He has always been unfortunate in not having any insurance on his buildings until recently.

CURIOS FROM AFRICA

Received by Lieut. Col. Rogers from Capt. Cockburn of Sierra Leone

Two very strange looking musical instruments were received yesterday by Col. H. C. Rogers, for the Victoria Museum from Capt. Cockburn now in Sierra Leone. The instruments are very crude and convey to some degree, the rude ideas of music of the natives there. One of the instruments is a drum, a half-globe like shape, covered with some kind of skin. This instrument, when touched by the drum sticks makes a very dull sound. The other instrument has no name—that anyone here knows. It is made of a species of very hard wood, has gut strings and a number of cells for producing sounds. In all some seventeen different sounds can be produced with this instrument. The keys are made of wood and varying in length to make the required sound. This instrument is played by striking it lightly with two small sticks.

WEDDING BELLS

Miss Emma Stewart Becomes the Bride of Mr. George Lacheur, of Town

A very pretty and interesting event took place at the residence of Mr. Noble Stewart, Otonabee, on Thursday afternoon, when his eldest daughter, Miss Emma Louise, was united in marriage to Mr. George Lacheur, of town.

The bride was given away by her father and wore a becoming gown of steel grey with trimming of white silk and appliqué, and carried a large boquet of white roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Lena Stewart, sister of the bride wore a becoming gown of white organdie, trimmed with Valenciennes lace and insertion, and carried a large boquet of pink roses. The duties of groomsman were performed by Mr. Harry Lacheur, of town brother of the groom.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Thompson, of Ashburnham, in the presence of a large number of friends of the contracting parties. The bride was the recipient of a large number of beautiful and costly presents as a mark of esteem by her friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Lacheur will take up residence on College Street.

A SPLENDID REPORT

Annual Meeting of the Shareholders of the Toronto Loan and Savings Co.

We congratulate the shareholders of the Toronto Savings and Loan Company on the report which was presented at the annual general meeting of the Company, held at the Head Office, Peterborough, on Tuesday last.

The report speaks for itself. It is one that reflects the greatest credit on Mr. W. G. Morrow, the popular and efficient manager, as well as on the Board of Directors.

Polson's Nerviline Cures Rheumatism

The remarkable strength and marvellous soothing power of Nerviline renders it quite infallible in rheumatism. Five times stronger than any other remedy, its penetrating power enables it to reach the source of the pain and drive out the disease. Nerviline is stronger, more penetrating, more highly pain-subduing in its action than any other medicine heretofore devised for the cure of rheumatism. Sold in large 25c. bottles everywhere.

A Challenge From Barrie.

The Barrie Hockey Club challenges Galt, Collingwood, or Peterboro' to play the Barrie team home-and-home games for a prize consisting of seven gold lockets, same to cost not less than $65, to be donated by the Barrie Club. The games to be played under the conditions given below:—

1. Referee to be appointed by the O. H. A.
2. Number of goals to count in deciding the winner.
3. Each club to pay its own expenses.
4. O.H.A. rules to govern contest.
5. The first game to be played in Barrie.
6. Expenses of the referee to be paid by the home club.

In the event of the three clubs accepting this challenge, we shall ask the secretary of the O.H.A. to decide which club is to be our contestant.—Jos. Selley, Manager Barrie Hockey Club. Barrie, Feb. 27.

Lacrosse.

The Minto Cup is again causing discussion in Montreal. The present lacrosse champions, the Shamrocks, held a meeting of the Executive, to consider the New Westminster challenge, which had been forwarded and duly accepted by the trustees in Ottawa. The meeting was a somewhat lengthy one, and was held behind closed doors, but when it was all over it had been decided that the challenge from the New Westminster Club should be accepted and the dates were set as follows:—Saturday, June 28, and July 1, and, if a third match should be necessary, July 5. Captain O'Connell will still hold command of the team.

A League at Port Hope.

Port Hope, Feb. 27.—The lacrosse enthusiasts around town are already on the move, and are intending to organize at once. It is, as yet difficult to state as to how strong the Ontarios will be the coming season, but a rumor is afloat that every effort will be made to capture that Intermediate championship for 1902. Several prominent stick handlers in town have stated that the team will be a fast one without doubt.

The juvenile players around town should receive big encouragement this year. There are about six or eight clubs, and a league could be nicely formed, which would increase the now growing interest 50 per cent. A set of medals for the winners of this league can be secured at a very low figure. This scheme should be carried out.

BASEBALL.

Ald. Carson's League.

Kingston, Feb. 28.—Ald. Carson was asked to-day, "What about your baseball league?" "It will be all right," was his answer. "What teams will you have?" "Well, there will be Canton, N.Y., Watertown, N.Y., Ogdensburg, N.Y., Belleville and Kingston." "Are you sure of Belleville?" "Yes, quite sure." "What about Port Hope and Cobourg?" "They are not strong enough as drawing cards." "Did any other teams want to come in?" "Yes, a Montreal team, but that city is too far away. We will have a first-class league, however.

IT WILL NOT APPEAR

This Great Family Journal a Literary Offer He Wants to Know

A coy young creature sends the Times a short story entitled "Roy's Jelousy," with the following touching request:

"This is my first attempt at story riting, and is all emaginary. I wish you would use my story, but if it is not acceptable please return it.

And don't use the name of the author, if it is acepted, or tell the name.

The Times is sorry this promising young writer has imposed these limitations, as otherwise we might be tempted to publish a few samples from the story, the literary style of which is certainly unique. But without the name of its gifted author the tale would fall flat, for the fiction of today is judged, not so much by its quality as by the name, social standing, antecedents, personal peculiarities, and mental idiosyncrasies of the writer. Anonymous authorship is out of date. If the writer of "Roy's Jelousy will send stamps for the return of the manuscript, accompanied by her photograph and a sketch along the lines suggested above, this g.f.j. will have no trouble whatever in disposing of the story.

ONE TRIAL OF

Malt Breakfast Food

WILL SET YOU THINKING

One trial of Malt Breakfast Food, delicious, appetizing and stomach-comforting, will surely set you thinking in a way that will benefit yourself, family and friends.

In thinking over the matter you will regret that you have been so long a stranger to Malt Breakfast Food, and you will be pleased and willing to give up forever your old dish of oatmeal or other grain foods with their starchy ingredients, their blood heating properties and their irritating tendencies, and you will never cease to recommend Malt Breakfast Food to your friends.

When you make a morning friend of Malt Breakfast Food you go from strength to strength; your digestion becomes properly regulated; your blood is kept pure and cool, and the nerves firm and strong. Malt Breakfast Food is a perfect health food for all seasons. It is an especial blessing for old and young in the spring and summer seasons. All grocers sell it.

Weather Notes

Showery becoming colder at night. Sunday: Colder.

A storm of unusual energy, which appears to have originated near the Pacific Coast early in the week, is now centered in Illinois. Rain and gales prevail in Ontario and are likely to extend to Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.

BRITISH AMERICA Assurance Company

SHAREHOLDERS MEETING

The sixty-eighth annual meeting of the shareholders of the British America Assurance Company was held at its offices, Toronto on Thursday, the 27th inst. The president, Hon. Geo. A. Cox, occupied the chair, and Mr. P. H. Sims, who was appointed to act as secretary, read the following:

ANNUAL REPORT

Your directors have pleasure in presenting the sixty-eighth annual report and financial statements, duly vouched for by the auditors of the company.

There has been a moderate increase in the premium income in all branches, the Canadian fire business, particularly, showing a considerable increase over that of any previous year this being mainly due to the advanced rates which have been obtained.

The balance of Revenue account, $98,590.00 has been applied as follows: $85,000.00 for two half-yearly dividends, the first at the rate of seven per cent., and the second at the rate of six per cent. per annum, $4,045.26 written off office furniture and securities, and the balance, $9,544.74, added to the reserve fund, which now stands at $612,001.96.

Although considerable progress has been made during the year in the direction of advancing rates throughout Canada and the United States, the results of the business, owing to the increase in fire losses, have not proved satisfactory to companies generally, and measures are now being taken for further advances which should bring about a material improvement in the condition of the fire insurance business on this continent.

GEO. A. COX, President.

SUMMARY OF FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Total cash income	$2,040,1[illegible]7 16
Total expenditure, including appropriation for losses under adjustment	1,946,007 16
	$ 98,590 00
Dividends declared	85,000 00
Total assets	$1,755,849 22
Cash capital	$1,000,000 00
Reserve fund	612,001 96
Security to policy-holders	$1,612,001 96

The report, on motion of the President, seconded by the Vice-President, was carried unanimously. In moving the adoption of the report the President said:

The Revenue Account shows that after deducting losses and expenses from the premiums for the year, there is a balance, or underwriting profit, of $58,797. This, with the earnings from interest and rent, $40,793, makes the total balance at the credit of Revenue Account $98,590. Compared with the preceding year the figures before you show a gain in premiums (after deducting reinsurances) of $127,169, and a reduction in losses of $16,124.

This increased income is derived mainly from the fire business, and, as stated in the report, is chiefly due to the better rates that have prevailed. In the marine branch there has been little change in the volume of business we have done, but while the income from this source represents less than one-fourth of the total premiums reced, we are indebted to this branch for nearly one-half the year's profits.

Taking into consideration the large amount of fire business transacted, the results of the year—although they show a marked improvement on those of the year 1900—cannot be regarded as affording an adequate margin of profit, but those of you who have noted the records from month to month of the serious fires in Canada and the United States, beginning with the conflagration in the business centre of Montreal in January last, must, I think, regard the accounts presented as more favorable than might have been anticipated. We can at least claim that they will bear comparison in their general results with those shown by other companies operating in the same fields as ourselves, and this is perhaps the best test of the judgment exercised by the officers and agents of the company in the prosecution of its business. The problem as to what rates will be adequate to meet the losses of any one year is a difficult—I might say an impossible—one for the most experienced underwriters to solve. They can only meet the changed conditions that confront them from time to time by readjusting their rates in accordance with the loss records which these changing conditions produce. The adverse experience of Companies engaged in the fire business on this continent for the past two years has shown the necessity of increases on many classes of risks, and we have benefited to a considerable extent from the advanced rates which prevailed during the year 1901, and in view of the action taken during the past ten days by all the leading companies doing business in the United States to bring about a more radical advance than has been hitherto been attempted, I feel that we may safely anticipate that these improved conditions will have even a more marked effect upon the business of the present year.

In reviewing the business of the past year, as well as of the preceding eight years during which I have had the honor of occupying this chair, it is very gratifying to observe the progress which the company has made in its fire business in Canada, as well as the profits which have accrued upon this notwithstanding the losses by the conflagrations of the past two years. A company which has been doing business—as the British America has—for upwards of two-thirds of a century, should we have felt, occupy a prominent position in connection with the business of its home field, and while an income equal to that of some leading British offices, which carry much larger amounts on individual risks, might not be looked for, it should command a liberal share of the business and be able to show results equal to, if not better than, the average results of its competitors. The progress which the British America has made in this direction under its present management is indicated by the following figures:—In 1892 the total fire premiums of the company in Canada were $173,951; in 1901 they amounted to $361,565. These figures represent the net premiums (after deducting reinsurances), so that during these nine years the income of the company in this branch has increased upwards of 100 per cent., while the total increase of all companies reporting to the department is about 40 per cent. It is still more gratifying to find from the annual returns of Companies doing business in Canada, published by the Dominion Government, that while for this same period the average loss ratio of all companies reporting to the Canadian Insurance Department is 70.3 per cent., our losses have been but 60 per cent. of the premiums received.

While this has been our experience at home, the progress we have made in other fields in the way of securing advantageous connections has been such as to warrant our looking for equally favorable results from our agencies outside the Dominion, particularly when we bear in mind the improved outlook to which I have referred in the United States, from which territory a large proportion of our income is derived.

In conclusion, I desire to avail myself of this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of the work of the officers of the Company, both at its Head Office, and at its Branch Offices, and our obligations to our General and Local Agents for their services in the Company's behalf during the past year.

The following gentlemen were re-elected to serve as Directors during the ensuing year:—Hon. Geo. A. Cox, J. J. Kenny, Augustus Myers, Thos. Long, John Hoskin, K.C., L.L.D. Hon. S. C. Wood, Robert Jaffray, Lieut.-Col. H. M. Pellatt, and E. W Cox

At a meeting of the board, held subsequently, the Hon. Geo. A. Cox was re-elected President, and Mr. J. J. Kenny, Vice-President.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 1, 1902

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY SUNDAY

At a legislative hearing on a question of legal restriction of Sunday trade, a gentleman favored wider liberty because we were at the opening of a new century, implying that Sunday laws are a relic of the dark ages. Not of the darkest ages, he should reflect. They do not prevail now in "Darkest Africa," or in any dark or savage land, nor ever did. Sunday observance is not a mark of rude uncultivated life. Only enlightened Christian nations observe Sunday rest, and protect the civil rest day by law, as a wise provision for the good of society. Not only savages, but bad men everywhere do without Sunday. Either they are not able to see that it is a necessity of wise living, or they do not wish to live wisely. Just in proportion as men advance in enlightenment, and in a desire to live according to the best light, they keep Sunday. There are exceptions, but on the large scale, and in the long run, exactly as men gain in spiritual insight, attain breadth of view, and a comprehension of the forces and tendencies which govern human life, if they also are wise enough to conform their conduct to their increased knowledge, they will prize Sunday, and keep it with all their heart. This is absolutely sure. How do we know it? On the word of Him who cannot err, who is Truth, for He said, "The Sabbath was made for man"—for man as man, always and everywhere; not for Jews alone; not for certain centuries only, but for all the centuries, for the twentieth and the fortieth, for all those blissful and prosperous ages when human progress shall have lifted man to the high vantage ground of enjoying the blessings a kind Providence makes ready for his use. And of all those blessings, one of the richest in value in itself, and most prolific of other blessings is the day of Sunday rest and worship. And when God made the Sabbath for Man, he thereby declared that the Sabbath is something man needs in every age and land. It is indispensible to his prosperity. Therefore a kind heavenly Father will see to it that this precious gift shall not always be as pearls cast before swine. He will educate men and train them up to see what is good for them and will give them wisdom enough to take what is good for them. Many men spurn it now, for they are like very young kittens—they have not got their eyes open yet. But the day of vision and of wisdom will come, if not for them, for "the coming man," the man who will not fly in the face of Providence, and trample its best gifts under his feet.

Through the voice not of written revelation alone, but through the cry of man's entire nature, body, soul and spirit, by the examples of Christ, and by the Providential favor shown to Sabbath keeping in its good results, God has made known His will, that man should take one day in seven, so far as the claims of necessity and mercy allow, to rest the body and train the soul.

March is a Favorite Month For Home Dyeing

In all well regulated homes in city or country, the work of home dyeing is largely done in March. The dresses, skirts, capes, jackets, blouses and other articles of wearing apparel used and worn a year ago, but now dingy and faded, will be brought out, carefully looked over and re-dyed with some new and stylish color for this season's wear.

With such aids as the popular Diamond Dyes, it is folly to spend money for new materials and garments. The Diamond Dyes always make old and faded things look as good as new. The best as well as the humblest families use the Diamond Dyes successfully and profitably every spring.

Have you decided to make up a pretty and stylish mat or rug from your rags and waste materials? There is a pleasure in being able to point to your own homemade mats and rugs. Send your address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., and you will receive sheets of designs for your inspection.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

APSLEY

—Lumbering operations for this winter are nearing a finish. The camps of the Dickson Co. and A. McDonald have put out a large number of logs, the winter being very favorable, although the snow was deep latterly, but it was light and there was no crust. Some of the boys have been at the camps all winter, and as wages were high, will have a nice sum to their credit this spring. There are a few of a roving disposition, who try different camps, staying only a short time at each, and generally get back home through the winter. Either the grub, or the work, or perhaps its the water don't suit.

—Andy is home from the lumber camp, with his team, and has been nursing a good healthy boil since. He says he is going to help build up Apsley, and has no money to throw away on subscriptions.

—Curly is breaking in a fine colt and is preparing it for the next fair. When the roads are good in summer he will find a first-rate course to trot on, through the mountain. You want to be careful, Curly, as we see Garry has one also, and gives it a trip to Apsley occasionally, and does some fancy driving around the tie post, cutting corners closely, without going through the window. Go look out for Garry.

—Last week there was rather a poor attendance at the O.M.L. Club. The President was away to Niagara, and his assistant, Anvil Jim, not being as proficient in the finer arts, could not fill his place in a satisfactory manner. However, under the circumstances, we did the best we could to keep up the credit of the club and outdo Ananias.

—The mill is running full time now. What with sawing, grinding and turning Sandy has a busy time. Custom logs are piling up at the mill every day. Building operations on an extensive scale will go on as soon as the weather will permit.

—T. J. Wilson will move about the 20th March into Lindsay's store until his new house is built. He expects to be in the new one about the 1st July.

—Mrs. Wm. Wilson is home again after several weeks' visit among her friends in Otonabee and Harvey. We were glad to see her home again.

—Mrs. Wm. Sheirp had the misfortune to lose a fine cow last week. It had wandered up the creek from the watering place, got through the ice and was drowned. Almost as soon as it was known the people with their usual generosity, got up a subscription to replace it, and there has been nearly enough collected now to make good the loss.

—Josie wishes now he had not advertised for a hound or two, as nearly every day some one brings in a dog for sale, warranted to run deer, cattle, bears, or tree partridge. W. S. brought in a long yellow dog the other day and offered it to Josie for 63 cents and a plug of chewing tobacco. Josie asked him what breed it was anyway. He said it was half hunter and half setter—half the time it would hunt bones and the other half set around the stove eating them. Josie told him he would let him know later, as he would consult Spike, Fred and Bennie before investing.

—Mr. Torpey shipped a car load of hogs from Indian River last week.

—Mr. T. Crowley, of Hastings, was the guest of Miss Nora Devlin on Sunday last. Be sure and call again, Tim.

—Mr. Maurice O'Leary has just finished his large dwelling house. More power to your elbow, Maurice.

—Mr. John Lonergan is more than pleased with his new hog pen.

—On Monday evening, 24th inst., a pleasant time was spent at the residence of Mr. John Grady, the occasion being the twentieth birthday of his youngest daughter Mary. About one hundred couple assembled at the residence and showed their esteem in many different ways. Miss Mary received many presents, some of which were very costly. All afternoon was spent in merriment, hand-shaking and match-making. The elite consisted of the neighboring counties, viz. Douro, Ennismore and Keene. In the evening a sumptuous repast was served, after which a song was sung by Mr. J. Walsh, entitled, "The girl I leave behind," also by Mr. Michael Torpey. Short speeches were delivered by Mr. S-ollard and Mr. Allen, which were loudly applauded. The party [illegible] ed by [illegible] Miss Mary [illegible] many happy [illegible]

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4 00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map wil aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property a d being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the conditions of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

The Subtle American Joke.

An American once said to a German who claimed that he had the real New England sense of humor, "Did you ever hear the joke about the guide in Rome who showed some travelers two skulls of St. Paul, one as a boy, and the other as a man?" "No," said the German, beginning to anticipate a good story. "Tell me at once, mein friend, dat joke."

P. A. Minakoff has made an exhaustive study of the nails of the hand, some of the results of which he regards as of medico-legal importance. Among other things, he asserts that the nails of the right hand in a right-handed person are wider by from one-half to two millimetres than the corresponding nails on the left hand; while in left-handed persons the reverse obtains, and in the ambidextrous the nails are of equal size on the two hands. The thickness of the nails diminishes progressively from the thumb to the little finger.

A sporting friend of the editor of "Sporting and Dramatic News" keeps some green tree frogs in a glass globe, and the children feed them on flies and other insects. "In their bowl stands a miniature flight of steps, and when the frogs climb up and perch on these steps my friend leaves his mackintosh at home, being assured of fine weather. When the frogs huddle together at the bottom of the globe, then he says it is a safe sign of coming rain."

For soldiers' use, and for employment under circumstances where fresh milk, coffee and chocolate are not easily obtainable, a dried preparation is now being manufactured which serves excellently as a substitute. Skimmed milk is evaporated by the help of an air blast to the condition of a paste, and, after being dried, is reduced to powder by grinding. Then it is mixed with powdered chocolate, half and half, and is either put up as dust or compressed into cakes. When wanted, water is added, the resulting fluid is boiled, and all that is needed is a little sugar.

A system of teaching the French language by phonograph is to be tried in England. Several prominent French professors are devoting their energies to preparing phonograph cylinders carrying French lessons upon them. The phonographic records are accompanied by a book, which contains thirty lessons, each of which corresponds to a phonographic cylinder, and each lesson is ingeniously illustrated. All that the student has to do is to set the phonograph in motion, and the book will explain what the instrument is saying.

Unraveling a Mystery.

RICHARD WATSON GILDER is an enthusiastic lover of the delightful Berkshire region of Western Massachusetts, says the Philadelphia "Post," and has a summer home there. He loves to climb the hills, to drive about the charming roads, to fish in the waters.

With a close friend, a well-known New York artist, he set out one day for an all-day drive. Both were entranced by the scenery and delighted by the succession of fine homes, old and new, that they passed.

Suddenly the artist and Mr. Gilder uttered an involuntary cry of pleasure, for there right in front of them, as they rounded a bend, was a delightful old home. Its pillared doorway, its fan-shaped window, its gambrel roof, its picturesque gables, its quaint old-fashioned air, were very charming, and upon it was a sign, "For rent."

The two men left the buggy and stepped toward the house. It was empty, but through the narrow slitted windows at either side of the door the author and artist glanced. They saw a big grandfather's clock at the turn of the broad stairway; they saw an antique chair in the hall.

"What a delightful find!" cried the artist.

"What a charming mystery!" exclaimed Mr. Gilder.

A man sauntered up from the field. He was the caretaker.

"Would you like to look through the house?" he asked.

Nothing would please the two men better, and the door was forthwith unlocked.

Through room after room they walked. In one place stood an ample corner cupboard; in another an antique sideboard; here was a great carved clawfoot sofa; there was a table with claw-and-ball legs; upstairs was a huge canopied four-post bed with other old-fashioned furniture. In short, the entire house was furnished in colonial style.

"A dream of beauty," said the artist.

How strange it seemed. What mystery, what romance, perhaps even what tragedy, lay beyond it all! Here in this ancient house were all the ancient furnishings untouched, in spite of the keen search for such things by the myriad lovers of old-fashioned furniture and the dealers whose agents go everywhere. Undoubtedly there must be some strange and striking story to explain it all.

They sought out the caretaker.

"What old family has lived here for all these generations? How does it happen that everything has remained untouched? Why is the old house at last without a tenant, and why is it offered to strangers?"

The questions of the two men came eager and swift. The caretaker was puzzled for a few moments, and then said:

"Oh, I see what you mean. Why, this house was bought by Mr. Z., a second-hand furniture dealer of New York, and he has fixed it up here, just to rent it, with things he sent up from his shop."

The author and the artist slowly retreated to their vehicle and drove away without a word.

Expenses of English Coronations.

EDWARD VII.'S coronation expenses are likely to be extremely lavish, the precedent of George IV. being followed rather than that of Victoria. When George III. passed away the people had experienced no coronation solemnities for more than sixty years, and it was, perhaps excusably, felt that the occasion called for some larger display than when that long-lived monarch came to the throne. The sum, accordingly, which the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the day fixed in his own mind as a working maximum was £100,000. When the bill came to be presented it was discovered that the total expenditure ran to £238,000.

Now, when Victoria was crowned, it is to be remembered that there was a coronation only seven years before, and another barely ten years before that, so that most men of middle age had already tasted the sweets and borne the expense of two great festivals of pageantry. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that when the Duchess of Kent came to discuss matters with her daughter's ministers of state, it was felt that sheer lavish display would be out of place, and the consequence was that the whole cost was brought well within the estimate.

The cost of arranging the Abbey ran into £30,000. The Lord Chamberlain's Department absorbed £14,000, the Master of the Horse and the Mistress of the Robes got £13,000 between them, the Earl Marshal and the heralds put in a bill for £1,300, the cost of the commemorative medals was £3,000, and £3,500 was spent on fireworks, illuminations and free theaters. The lot came to £69,421.

Now, one reason why the coronation of George IV. cost so much more, and, indeed, surpassed the expenditure upon any event of the kind before or since, was because there was a banquet provided for about two thousand hungry and thirsty souls who had eaten nothing all day because of their duties in the Abbey. It was a royal feed. The turtle alone filled eighty tureens, the turbot lay upon the same number of dishes, and there were eighty dishes also of salmon and trout.

The butcher's and game bills came to a respectable total, as the following toothsome details will show: Beef, 7,442 pounds; veal, 7,693 pounds; mutton, 20,474 pounds; lamb, 20 quarters, 20 legs and 5 saddles; 55 quarters of grass lamb; sweetbreads, 160; cow heels, 400; calves' feet, 400; geese, 170; capons, 720; chickens, 1,610; bacon, 1,730 pounds; butter, 912 pounds; and 8,400 eggs. Nor was the flushing of the necks of the two thousand forgotten, as witness the wine bill: 100 dozen champagne, 200 dozen claret, 50 dozen each hock, Moselle and Madeira; 350 dozen sherry and port, 20 dozen Burgundy and 100 gallons iced punch.

Advantageous Terms.

"I hear that you have compromised your suit for damages against the P. D. and Q. Railroad Company." "Yes." "Advantageously?" "Very." "What were the terms?" "They paid my lawyer's bill."—"Town Topics."

A Mummy as Hostess.

M. GUIMET, the celebrated Orientalist, who has founded in Paris a museum which bears his name, gave the other day a five o'clock tea, "to meet the beautiful Thais," relates a correspondent in Paris. Thais, as one knows, was the famous courtesan who lived in the third century, and was so blonde and lovely that all the gentlemen of Alexandria lost their appetites and sleep on her account. The smartest people were invited, and, to begin with, an excellent luncheon was served. This was a wise precaution, for—who knows?—they might not have been able to enjoy the rare Oriental sweets of M. Guimet after they had paid their visit to Thais, in her—sarcophagus, for Thais was a mummy.

The once beautiful lady received her visitors lying down on her narrow couch of white marble. A gossamer veil of gold was on her face, which is somewhat damaged, while in her dainty slippers of scarlet cloth embroidered with real pearls very little feet were to be seen. But she still wore her superb hair, once like liquid copper, now somewhat faded and of a vague color, though abundant and silky. Round her neck was a necklace formed by two rows of unpolished pearls. Her woollen yellowish gown is of a texture so fine that nothing of the kind could be found nowadays, and she wears a bodice of orange striped silk, which is tied round her waist by a sash of the most delicate salmon-pink hue.

Beside her were many pretty things, such as a bread-basket in silver filigree, two mugs of chiselled gold, two bronze crosses—for Thais became a Christian while she was still young and lovely—and a sort of prayer-book in light laths of pale wood. A few other mummies keep her company, most of them being also surrounded by quaint and curious things very interesting to look at. One of the most clever lady writers was so struck by them that she is going to write a series of articles on the subject, beseeching the friends and relations of our modern dead to imitate the people of antiquity and fill their tombs with articles that were once beloved by them, so that some 2,000 years hence scholars and artists may form an idea of the Parisian civilization in the twentieth century.

Some Scotch Examination Papers.

London "Chronicle."

A correspondent proposes the following questions for the next matriculation examination at the Scotch universities: First—Geography—Draw a map of the United States, marking London, Glasgow and Birmingham. Second — Rule of Three—If a man does a piece of work in four days, how much quicker will an American do it at half the salary? Third—Political Economy — The Yankee millionaires over here state they "feel as if this were their own country." The German Emperor, when last visiting us, declared he felt "perfectly at home." Account for this. Fourth—History—Write a note on the invasions of Great Britain and the rebellion and subsequent subjugation of the Angles. Give dates of the accessions of Yerkes I., Sloan, Morgan the Contractor, and the other conquerors; also of the beatification of St. Carnegie. Say what you know of any of these. Fifth—Trade Problem—You are an English manufacturer. An extensive order is received for locomotives for a trans-African railway. Which would you do—demand an entire alteration of the railway to fit the six locomotives you have in stock, or recommend an American rival? Sixth—Travel—You are an American millionaire traveling for recreation. Which would you take back with you as souvenir—London or Paris? State your reasons for preferring one of these trinkets.

Le Gallienne as Satirist.

IN the "Rambler," Numb. 216, Richard Le Gallienne, Esquire, has what he himself would no doubt call a "little paper" on "The Desire of the Star for the Moth." We help ourselves to the following excerpts:

"Of course, there are very big successful Stars who affect that the Hero-worshipper Moth is a Nuisance, and build themselves about with Bastions of Privacy, through which no Ray of their Shining can reach the most persevering Moth—but then, you see, they are so sure of their Moths. I wonder if the Time should come when the Flocks of little Pilgrims up to their dizzy Radiance begin to slacken, and the Roar of Moth-Wings outside their guarded Country-seats to grow fainter—and it has happened so with some very great Stars indeed!—if they would not become a little insecure in their Feeling of Starriness, and perhaps even at last unshutter a Window, and let slip a Beam of their celestial Selves; lest the Moths should grow discouraged, and perhaps cease coming at all.

"I have heard that some Stars of this Magnitude charge the Moth Half a Guinea for their Autographs—strictly, of course, for the Benefit of the Hospitals. Such Stars are, you can imagine, very sure of themselves. But there is another Kind of big Star that makes quite as fine a Blaze as those of which I have been speaking, yet is by no means so unsocial; on the Contrary is smilingly, even eagerly, accessible to every Moth that is so kind and appreciative as to take the Trouble to call with its Homage. It often indeed asks the Moth to stay for Lunch, and makes it promise to be sure to come again."

It is somewhat unusual to find Mr. Le Gallienne playing literary satirist in this rather obvious manner. But at the moment he is living in New York, which possibly accounts for it. Possibly, too, suggests the "Outlook," the falling-off in the stream of moths which formerly drifted in a certain direction has filled his soul with revolt.

Mr. Dooley on the Weather Bureau.

"I'M goin' to make me apologies to Clancy's leg," said Mr. Dooley.

"Why's that?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

"Well," said Mr. Dooley, "I've done it an injustice. I've spoke ill iv it as a weather prophet. F'r years that rhoomatic prop has been indicatin' th' weather. If Clancy was seen walkin' briskly down th' sthreet ivrybody up an' down th' road made plans f'r a buggy ride. If Clancy come along leanin' on a shtick, they begun to keep their eye on their umbrellas. Iver since I was a young man, Clancy's leg has tipped off rainstorms befure they got as far as th' Rocky Mountains, an' manny a bark has it previnted fr'm goin' out on th' canal whin th' sky was clear overhead, but a twist in th' knee told Clancy a hurricane was brewin' down below Lemont. That leg dealt in anny kind iv weather, hot or cold, wet or dhry. Clancy used to make a verse about it. 'What,' says he, 'is th' use iv raypinin'?' he says. 'Dhrive care an' sorrow away. To-morrah,' he says, 'th' leg may be aisy, although it is,' he says, 'achin' to-day.' People bought their coal an' ice be Clancy's leg, arranged their parties an' mended their roofs. It predicted th' hard frost iv sivinty-nine an' th' hot spell iv eighty-eight. Th' night befure th' big wind come that blew down th' steeple iv th' church, ye cud hear Clancy howlin' like a wolf, an' befure th' heavy floods two years ago he had to be wheeled around in a chair f'r a week. I used to laugh at th' people that watched that ol' peg; but mind ye, if I was Mack, I'd have the weather bureau take observations on Clancy's leg an' issue bulletins: 'Clancy in gr-reat ag'ny. Look out f'r storms on th' lakes.' Or: 'Clancy wint to a dance last night. Continyued fair an' clear, with light southwesterly breeze.' I wud so.

"Las' Foorth iv March, Mack sint f'r th' la-ad that r-runs th' weather bureau an' says he, 'Pro-fessor,' says he, 'what kind iv weather ar-re ye goin' to give us to-morrah?' he says. 'Can I wear me plug hat?' says he. 'Ye cud go in tissue-pa-aper,' says th' pro-fessor. 'Since th' Lord sint you an' me to bless this gran' counthry,' he says, 'there niver was seen such a fine day as to-morrah will be,' he says. 'Th' sun will shine in th' boochus sky,' he says, 'an' th' bur-rds will carrol fr'm th' threes,' he says. ''Twill be a glory-ous day, an' ye'll be glad,' he says, 'that ye give me th' job,' he says. Well, sir, Clancy come in to see me that night, groanin' with pain. 'What ails ye?' says I. 'Me leg,' says he. 'Th' weather's got into it,' he says. ''Tis goin' to rain a dilluge,' he says. 'But,' says I, 'th' arya iv low barometer is stationry over Texas an' th' arya iv high barometer is tearin' around in th' neighborhood iv Goshen, Injianny,' I says. 'How can it rain?' says I. 'I don't care,' says he. ''Tis goin' to rain,' he says. Well, sir, d'ye raymimber, Mack had to put on a life-presarver befure he got half-way through tellin' what he'd done f'r us. 'Twas a gr-reat victhry f'r Clancy's leg. I don't know what th' pro-fessor said about it. Maybe he blamed it onto th' Popylists. But annyhow, he wint back to his wurruk an' I begun to believe in him again, f'r th' weather got good.

"I've been thinkin' it over, Hinnissy, an' I come to th' con-clusion that there's two kinds iv weather, human weather an' weather-bureau weather. No wan knows what causes human weather. Hogan says th' seasons is caused be th' sun movin' fr'm th' thropic iv Cancer to th' thropic iv Capricorn, an' whin 'tis in wan place we suffer fr'm th' cold, an' that's winter, an' whin 'tis in th' other place we suffer fr'm th' heat, an' that's summer. Hogan says it, but Hogan can't tell ye why, if that's so, th' days don't get hotter fr'm March sthraight through to October. Some people says th' summer's caused be fires in th' bow'ls iv th' earth, where hell used to be whin I was a boy; but if ye believe that, why ain't we cooked th' year around? Father Kelly thinks 'tis th' spots on th' sun does it, an' Schwartzmeister thinks 'tis th' brewer's agent. Ivrybody has a guess, an' wan man's guess is as good as another. That's our weather. Th' weather bureau ought to lave it alone an' shtick to its own, that rains whin they's a high pressure in Maine, an' snows whin they's a low pressure in Texas. Th' weather bureau weather is good parlor weather, but th' kind we have to dhrive sthreet cars in is out-iv-dure weather, subject to all th' rigors iv th' climate. Th' weather bureau's weather is on a map, an' our weather is in th' air. That's why th' pro-fessor fails an' Clancy's leg is a gr-reat success. 'Tis an out-iv-dure leg."

"I don't believe in anny kind iv weather prognostifications," said Mr. Hennessy.

"Well," said Mr. Dooley, "if I was goin' into th' business, I niver wud prophesy till th' day afther."

A Dog Story.

A dog story is told by the traveler, Mr. Herbert Vivian, in his book called "Abyssinia." The dog belonged to Colonel Sadler of Berbera. Among his accomplishments was drinking whiskey. "One very thirsty evening a guest was reclining in one of Colonel Sadler's long cane lounges on the verandah. He placed a tumbler of whiskey and soda by his side and proceeded to converse. Presently he stretched out his hand for his glass, and gave a great start on finding it was empty. He was convinced that he had put it down full a few minutes before, equally positive that he had not touched it; yet how could this liquid have disappeared without disturbing the glass? It was all explained when the dog emerged, wagging his tail, and reeking indecently of spirits."

Ate His Bonnet.

An English driver for a Market Street business house persuaded his employer to buy a straw hat for the horse during the recent hot spell, and on Tuesday the horse appeared without the new headgear.

"What has become of the horse's bonnet, Harry?" asked one of the firm. "Don't you think it is hot enough this morning?"

"'Ot enough. That it is, sir, but the bloomin' 'oss ate the 'at afore I could put it on 'im this morning," said 'Arry.—Newark "Sunday Call."

A lunacy commissioner was making his customary rounds. An inmate whose particular fancy it was to pose as a much-married man approached with the announcement that he had once again taken to himself a wife. "And who is the fortunate lady?" said the commissioner. "Ah," said the lunatic, smiling sweetly, "she's the daughter of the devil." "Indeed; and how do you get on together?" "Get on? Oh, well, I get on right enough with the wife, but the old people I can't get on with."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

—A few loads of hogs were brought to the market yesterday.

—The Ashburnham Council will meet on Monday night.

—Division Court was held yesterday before Judge Ketchum.

—Some of the streets are almost impassable.

—The regular meeting of the Town Council will be held on Monday night.

—The heavy rain yesterday will be appreciated by those who have been suffering from a water famine.

—It took five men nearly a day to cut the ice away on Water street, the distance of one block. Such is the penalty of placing the sidewalks so low.

—A great deal of feeling exists over the additional tax that is being put on certain ratepayers to cover the cost of constructing pavements. We understand the matter will be threshed out at the next council meeting.

—Whiten makes the best photos in town. His work took first prize in Toronto and Peterborough. Go where you get the best. Pictures framed to order. 163 Hunter street, west.

—Town Auditor Ferguson, of Lindsay, the last of the witnesses in the suit entered to disqualify the Council of that place, has been examined before Judge Dean. The papers will be forwarded to Toronto this week. The final argument in the case will be heard at Osgoode Hall next week.

—The Campion estate, of London, England, was divided by an administrator at Belleville lately. The estate is valued at $250,000. There are eighteen heirs among whom are Mrs. W. E. Young, Rockdale, Mrs. T. T. Pearce, Marmora, and Mrs. H. Fowlds, Hastings.

—Don't ask the editor to rebuke every evil in the town and community, but when convinced that such duties need attending to, write an article in the paper yourself, and sign your name to it for publication. The man who is too big a coward to thus express an opinion is the very one who will stand on a corner and talk loudly about the cowardice of an editor.

—The Postmaster here has received orders to keep a tally on all mail matter this month, and the clerks have the pleasure of weighing all the mail matter passing through the office, both coming in and going out, for one month. All Postmasters are doing the same thing.

—As an advertisement test, we offer to anyone who will clip this advertisement out, and bring it to the Times Bookstore on Saturday, and make a purchase of 25c. in any line of goods we carry, we will give one novel absolutely free of charge. 3 books to choose from. Don't forget the date, Saturday, 1st March. Mail orders will have prompt attention.

THE TORONTO SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY

ANNUAL MEETING

Held at the Head Office of the Company, No. 437 George Street, Peterborough, on Tuesday, the 25th Day of February, 1902.

THE SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Shareholders of the Toronto Savings and Loan Company, was held at the Head Office of the Company, No. 437 George Street, Peterborough, on Tuesday, the 25th day of February 1902, at 2 o'clock P. M.

The President, Hon. Geo. A. Cox, having taken the chair, the Manager, Mr. W. G. Morrow, was requested to act as Secretary to the meeting.

After reading the notice convening the meeting, the Secretary read the Seventeenth Annual Report and the accompanying Financial Statement.

The Directors submit herewith their Seventeenth Annual Report showing the result of the business for the past year, accompanied by the balance sheet to the 31st. of December 1901.

The gross earnings for the year are the largest in the history of the Company, amounting to $114,287.39, and after the payment of interest on deposits and debentures and all expenses of management, there remained a net profit of $58,665.97. To this amount has been added $2,591.30, the amount carried forward from last year, which makes a total sum of $61,254.27 for distribution. This amount has been disposed of in the following manner:—

(1) By payment of two half yearly Dividends of 3 per cent each, equal to 6 per cent for the year and amounting to...... $36,000.00
(2) By addition to the Reserve Fund...... 18,000.00
(3) By amount carried forward to Profit & Loss Account...... 7,254.27

The above addition to the Reserve Fund increases same to $153,000.00, a fraction over 25 per cent of the paid up Capital.

The payments maturing the year on the Company's Investments, have been satisfactorily met.

The books, accounts and securities of the Company, have been carefully examined by the Auditors, and their Report is appended to the Financial Statement.

Respectfully submitted
GEO. A. COX.
President.

AUDITORS' CERTIFICATE

We hereby certify that we have carefully audited the books and accounts of the Toronto Savings and Loan Company for the year ending 31st December, 1901. All disbursements have been properly vouched for, and the postings and balances of the Company's ledgers have been checked and found correct. The above statement of Assets and Liabilities shows the position of the Company on the 31st December, 1901, and the Profit and Loss Account is a correct showing of the operations of the Company for the year ending on that day. We have also examined the Securities and find everything in order.

JAMES A. HALL
F. W. BAILLIE
Auditors.

Peterborough, January 22nd, 1902.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Report, said:—

Gentlemen—

It affords me very great pleasure to submit for your approval, the Seventeenth Annual Report of the Company, which, I believe, will be read with satisfaction by every Shareholder and Director of this Institution. You will observe by the statement that the gross earnings for the year are the largest in the history of the Company, a very gratifying feature indeed, demonstrating the activity and satisfactory character of the Company's business during the year.

The net earnings, having deducted payments of interest on deposits and debentures and all expenses of management, amount to $58,665.97, representing an earning power of somewhat over 9 1-2 per cent upon its paid up Capital of $600,000.00, and after the payment of the usual 6 per cent. Dividend to the Shareholders, your Directors have felt warranted in making the substantial addition of $18,000.00 to the Reserve Fund, increasing the same to $153,000.00 (a fraction over 25 per cent. of the paid up Capital), thus further strengthening the already ample security offered to our depositors and debenture holders, who entrust their funds to the Company's care.

The securities of the Company have been scrutinized with the utmost care and are all in a healthy condition.

Since our last Annual Meeting, we have been called upon to mourn the death of our esteemed friend and colleague Mr. William Cluxton, who had been one of the incorporators of the Company, and who was, until the time of his decease, one of our most useful, influential and highly valued Directors.

The regular audit of the books has been made, and the correctness of the accounts etc., is duly vouched for by the Auditors.

The Officers of the Company are deserving of your thanks for their usual energetic and courteous attention to the business of the Company.

I will now move, seconded by Mr. Richard Hall, the Vice-President, the adoption of the Report and the statement herewith submitted, and that they be printed for distribution amongst the Shareholders, depositors and debenture holders of the Company.

Mr. Richard Hall in seconding the resolution for the adoption of the report said:—

I have a very agreeable duty to perform in seconding the resolution for the adoption of the Report.

The statement before you and what has already been said, in moving the resolution, renders further remarks from me, unnecessary— I would, however, like to add how very gratifying it is to me to see such clear indications of progress and prosperity as the statement of the earnings of the Company so emphatically proclaims.

The report of the operations of the Company, is all that could be desired, and I venture to hope that with the present appearances of a growing time in our midst, we have every cause to look forward to a year of even greater prosperity. The extensive and successful operations of the Town's existing manufacturies and the establishment here of two more very important concerns, now nearing completion, assures us of the increased growth and development of the Town. This is important in its relations to the Company, inasmuch as it means enhanced values and increased revenues from the Company's properties, also improved security for investments in this Town and neighborhood.

I have much pleasure in seconding the resolution for the adoption of the Report.

The Report was unanimously adopted.

Messrs. Jas. A. Hall and F. W. Baillie were appointed Auditors for the year 1902.

A By-law passed on the 6th. of December 1901, increasing the number of Directors from nine to ten, was approved.

The election of Directors was then proceeded with and the following gentlemen were declared elected for the ensuing year; Hon. Geo. A. Cox, Richard Hall, Peter Hamilton, A. L. Davis, H. J. LeFevre, H. C. Cox, D. W. Dumble, A. A. Cox, Jas. Stevenson and W. G. Morrow.

At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, Hon. Geo. A. Cox was re-elected President and Messrs. Richard Hall and A. A. Cox, Vice-Presidents.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mr. R. W. Grubbe is visiting friends in Toronto.

—Judge Ketchum, of Cobourg, was in town yesterday, holding Division Court.

—Mrs. S. J. Robertson, Reid street, is confined to her room through illness.

—Mr. Albert Talbot is very ill at St. Joseph's Hospital. He will undergo an operation in a few days.

—Miss Foote entertained a number of her friends last evening, at her residence, 246 McDonnell street.

—Rev. W. M. Kannawin, B.D, has been appointed to hold the communion services in Keene Presbyterian church on Sunday, March 9th.

—Major N. F. MacNachtan, of Port Hope, was in town yesterday on his way to Ottawa to attend a meeting of the Ontario Artillery Association.

—Mr. Herbert Dawson, of Port Arthur, is in town, renewing old acquaintances. Mr. Dawson is with the advance guard of a large deputation that visits Eastern Canada annually and interviews the Governments, respecting special legislation for the advancement of New Ontario.

—Mr. H. Newton, of town, representative of the Canadian Savings, Loan & Building Ass'n., of Toronto, has returned from attending the annual meeting of that company. A very large amount of business was written up last year and the company are well satisfied with the work.

He Wants to Know

A ratepayer has asked the Times to explain why it is that a second assessment has been made on account of granolithic walks built in 1899. It appears, so far as we are able to learn, the estimate was made correctly enough, but on account of the delay in having the sidewalks measured by the engineer, the debentures were not disposed of until money became dearer.

A True Nerve Tonic

acts not so much upon the nerves themselves, as upon the digestive functions, and the abundant formation of rich, red blood. The nerves cannot be fed on medicine. They can be fed and strengthened by digestive and assimilated food. Ferrozone's marvellous action arises from its power over the digestive and assimilative functions of the body. You take it, the blood grows richer, redder. You feel strength and vigor, digestion ceases to be noticed, for it has become good. Work is easier, for you have the strength to do it. In a short time you have health. Use Ferrozone.

Federation of Labor

The regular weekly meeting of Peterborough Federation of Labor, No. 9240 was held last night, when a number of minor details were dealt with.

The strike of the employes at the Cereal Works had been amicably settled, and nothing of moment came before the meeting for deliberation.

"I WAS ON THE BANK OF INSANITY"

"I am Now in Perfect Health Through No Other Agency Than Paine's Celery Compound

EARNEST AND CANDID STATEMENTS MADE BY A POSTMASTER IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

The absolute need of an honest and genuine invigorator and health-giver in the spring season is deeply impressed on the mind of every thinking and intelligent man and woman.

The happy and permanent cure of Mr. P. J. Kilbride, Postmaster, of Inverness, P.E.I., through the use of Paine's Celery Compound, created widespread astonishment among people in Canada, Newfoundland and the United States who were acquainted with Mr. Kilbride.

The best medical treatment failed to give Mr. Kilbride a few days of relief from his agonies and tortures of mind and body. At last Paine's Celery Compound saved him from a terrible end and planted his feet firmly on the rock of health.

Read Mr. Kilbride's letter of testimony, dear reader, and if you remain obdurate and unbelieving, after such an earnest, pathetic and convincing confession of cure, nothing but a direct act of Providence can snatch you from the dangers and perils of your position. Mr. Kilbride says:

"To-day I feel myself a new man. Six months ago I was on the brink of insanity; my nervous system was completely broken down; I could not sleep more than one or two hours a night, and often did not sleep for four nights in succession. Oh! I never can describe the agony I suffered. I was almost reduced to a skeleton; could only work an hour, when I was so fatigued I would be obliged to lie down and rest before I could resume work.

"The use of your Compound has given me rest and sweet sleep, and I can now work all day. To tell the honest, candid truth, I have not felt so well for fourteen years. When I commenced taking Paine's Celery Compound my weight was 144 pounds, now I weigh 168 lbs. I am gaining in flesh every day; my friends are all surprised at my wonderful cure and changed appearance. Oh! If I had only known of this life-saving remedy years ago, I would have escaped many days and nights of terrible pain and agony. Thank God the terrible times have passed, I hope never to return. How I wish I could reach the ear of every man in Canada—those who are suffering as I once suffered—how I would plead with them—yes, on my knees I would ask them to give Paine's Celery Compound a fair trial; and I feel confident they would bless me afterwards for my recommendation.

"Young men take my truthful and candid advice; if you are suffering from a broken down nervous system, use Paine's Celery Compound; it will thoroughly restore you physically and otherwise.

"I am now in perfect health through no other agency than Paine's Celery Compound. You may use this statement as you choose."

AFTER THE GRIP COMES CATARRH.

CATARRH
GRIP BACILLUS

LIKE A TERRIBLE CYCLONE grip bacillus has passed over our country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, leaving behind it a dark cloud of anguish and despair.

Catarrh follows grip as effect follows cause.

A multitude of catarrh victims will spring up in the trail of the awful epidemic of grip that has just passed over our fair country.

The hope to these people is Peruna.

Most people know this already.

Everyone who has had the least touch of grip, should not fail to take a course of treatment with Peruna.

Peruna eradicates every vestige of the disease and leaves the system in a normal condition.

Hon. Joseph B. Crowley, Congressman from Illinois, writes from the National Hotel, Washington, D. C., as follows:

"After giving Peruna a fair trial I can cheerfully recommend your remedy to anyone suffering with coughs, colds, la grippe and all catarrhal complaints."—J. B. Crowley.

Hon. George H. White, Congressman from North Carolina, writes:

"I am more than satisfied with Peruna, and find it to be an excellent remedy for the grip and catarrh. I have used it in my family, and they all join me in recommending it as an excellent remedy."—George H. White.

Hon. J. P. Megrew, Superintendent U. S. Capital Police Force, of Washington, D. C., says:

"Having suffered from the grip, I was advised by a friend to use your Peruna. I also used it for my catarrh, and I can now cheerfully recommend your remedy to anyone who is suffering from the grip and catarrh."—J. P. Megrew.

Miss Anna Russell, Past Worthy Counselor, Loyd Mystic Legion, 238 Endicott Building, St. Paul, Minn., writes:

"For years I have unfortunately found my system in a peculiarly receptive condition for catarrh when I was exposed in any way to inclement weather. At those times I would be severely afflicted with la grippe and its unpleasant consequences.

"Now for the past year and a half I have used Peruna in such cases and have found that it not only cures me quickly, but it also cleanses my blood and renders me less liable to catch cold. It is the finest preventative of colds that I know of and a very superior tonic."—Anna Russell.

Miss Emily Milburne, President of the Westside Young Woman's Club, No. 152 West Congress street, Chicago, Ill., writes of several members of the club of which she is president, who have had the Grip and have been quickly restored to health by Peruna.

Mr. Nicolas F. Rossiter, of 462 Norwood avenue, Cleveland, O., had a severe attack of the Grip, was very sick and under the physician's care. He, like many others, passed the acute stage but did not receive strength. Peruna not only quickly restored him to his former health, but to much better health than he has had for years. He gives Peruna all the praise.

Hon. Max J. Porges, Alderman of the Eighth District, residing at 26 Rivington street, New York, suffered with the Grip, two bottles of Peruna cured him. He also writes that he knows a large number of people who have been cured of the Grip by Peruna.

Hon. Charles W. Culkin, Alderman of the Seventh Assembly District of the Borough of Manhattan, residing at 45 Eighth avenue, New York, writes that he was laid up several days with the Grip. On the fifth day he was advised to try Peruna. He did so and found himself better within twenty-four hours. This remedy soon restored him to his usual vigorous health.

Mr. Martin Edwards, President of the County Clare Men's Benefit Society, 322 West Forty-Ninth street, New York, writes that he was cured of the Grip by a short course of treatment with Peruna.

Miss Blanche Dumont, President of the Athenia Club, 4110 Aldrich avenue North, Camden Place, Minneapolis, Minn., says she was cured of the Grip. Nothing helped her until she tried Peruna. Felt better next day after beginning its use. Was able to be out of bed the third day. She also tells of others who were cured by Peruna.

La Grippe is epidemic catarrh. Peruna cures catarrh, hence Peruna is a specific for la grippe.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada. "The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

SEVEN MAIN QUESTIONS

THAT ARE USUALLY ASKED BY MEN WHO ARE TEMPTED TO LOOK INTO A MINING PROPOSITION

1st. What is the characteristic ore showing of the property being presented?

2nd. Where is it located and is it in the vicinity of other mines that are being worked?

3rd. Is there a good title to the mines or are they merely held on bond and lease, or on an option?

4th. What sort of a corporation has been formed to take title to the property and under what state laws; also the charter life of the company?

5th. Is it safe to trust the men who are at the helm?

6th. Will money put in be used to open up the mines or will it be pocketed by the managers?

7th. Will one stand a good chance to get a fair slice of profits against what is put in?

In answer to the above questions, a prospectus, or statement will be sent upon postal card request addressed to

SAMPSON & WEMOTT, Fiscal Agents.

AT HOME AND SMOKER

Twenty-Third Anniversary of Court Peterborough C. O. F.

The 23rd anniversary of the institution of Court Peterborough, C.O.F. No. 29, was celebrated last night by an "At Home" and smoker in their Court rooms on Simcoe street.

A large number of the brethren had gathered, notwithstanding the nasty streets and weather, and each found that ample provision had been made by the committee to "fill high the flowing bowl" (of his pipe).

The members engaged in games of euchre, pedro and other amusements, and pleasant entertainment was derived from a splendid zonophone.

An adjournment was made to the large dining hall, where a supper had been spread in the usual ample style appertaining to functions of Court Peterborough, and where the problem of rapid transit of perishable produce was ably solved and exemplified.

Supper over, the following toasts were proposed and responded to:

"The King"—Responded to by Bro. J. Smith.

"Institution of Court Peterborough"—Brothers James Byrne and Cole Barrett.

"Town and Ashburnham"—Ald. Batten and Reeve Smith.

"Manufacturers"—Bro. A. McCallum.

"High Court Officers"—Brothers W. Hooper and J. Metheral.

Court Peterborough enters upon its 24th year with brighter prospects than at any time during its history. The membership continues to grow apace, and their home is one of the neatest and cosiest lodge rooms we have had the pleasure of entering.

YOUNG MEN'S SOCIAL

Bible Class of George Street Entertain Their Friends

Although many causes existed which might have detracted from the attendance at the Bible Class Social in George Street Methodist church last evening, a large number of young men of the congregation gathered in the basement to enjoy a social evening.

The members of the class had prepared a very acceptable programme of solos, quartettes, etc., and all the numbers elicited a hearty applause from the audience. A debate followed, in which many original, comic and pithy ideas were set forth by the participants, pro and con. The subject was, "Resolved, that a country girl makes a better wife than a city or town girl." The affirmative side was taken by Messrs. Vandusor and Gordon, while Messrs. Warren and Knapman upheld the negative. The speakers all very ably championed the cause of the lady whom they respectively supported; but the decision was awarded to the affirmative, by the judges, Messrs. Kidd, F. H. Dobbin and D. W. Dumble.

Refreshments had been provided by the ladies, and these were awarded no mean share of attention by the assemblage.

'Twas a merry, jovial band of boys, and the close of the evening's enjoyment saw the young men of the church better acquainted, and in a better position to uphold the aggressive stand which they are taking in the work of the congregation.

SCARITY OF HORSES CRIPPLE THE BRITISH AND HORSES MUST BE HAD

Great Opportunity Presents Itself to the British to End the War in South Africa

British are Throwing Away Many Animals

Says the Times Correspondent at Pretoria — War Nearing an End

British will Lose a Great Opportunity if they Fail to Take Advantage

Pretoria, March 2. Three thousand Boers, resident in the Pietersburg refugee camp, are now being removed in a body to Colenso. During the last three weeks transferences from the different camps in the Transvaal to the coast towns of Natal have been going on at the rate of 1,000 a week. There are now more than 60,000 men, women and children in the Transvaal camps and more than 45,000 in those of the Orange River Colony.

One hundred and fifty persons have escaped this month from the Pietersburg camp in consequence of Commandant Beyer's raid in that district. Those who have got away have been mostly young men.

The inmates of the camps are becomins more contented. They are increasingly amenable to orderliness, and are learning to carry out those hygienic rules which are essentsal to the well-being of the communities. The death rate is now practically normal. Large numbers of undesirable families have bken sent to Natal, where they can more easily be cared for, and where they can do less harm. In the Transvaol there are now 18 camps, each one virtually a village. They contain 25,000 children, the majority of whom are receiving education.

London, March 1.—A despatch from Pretoria to The Times says that the supply of horses is still lamentably short of the demand, and scarcely a single column can place its full mounted strength in the field. The wastage is caused because many horses are hurried on the trek before fully acclimatized and by unnecessarily hard treatment. Many men who are now mounted went to Africa lacking experience of horses. A culpable indifference to the welfare of the most important factor in the efficiency of the army seems to have permeated the whole army. The Times correspondent says the Boers are thoroughly demoralized by constant hustling. The scarcity of provisions convinces the burghers of the hopelessness of the struggle. The British will lose a great opportunity if they fail to take advantage of the situation, but they must have an unlimited supply of horses or the present rate of progress will be arrested.

London, March 1.—A special despatch to The Times from Pekin, written by Dr. Morrison, says there is reason to believe that Li Hung Chang has signed an agreement giving the Russians the exclusive mining privileges in the rich coal-gold province of Kirin, in Manchuria. The correspondent says it is not improbable that a similar agreement, believed to exist between the Russian resident at Mukden and the Chinese Governor-General, was ratified in the same way and that the recent Russo-Chinese bank negotiations were devised to hoodwink other powers, Russia having secured all she requires. Dr. Morrison says the reports that Japanese instructors are engaged in drilling the northern Chinese troops is incorrect. The agreement allows only Russian instructors, and Germany is opposing the engagement of Japanese, urging the claims of those of her own nationality.

DISPUTE AS TO DIVISION OF INDEMNITY.

London, March 1.—A despatch to The Times from Shanghai says that payment of the second monthly instalment of the Chinese indemnity was delayed, owing to the question of division of the money. Members of the International Bankers' Committee have reached a deadlock, and have telegraphed their Governments for instructions. The diplomatic body has declined to discuss the question further. The difficulty is due to the fact that the indemnity named in article six of the protocol amounts to four hundred and fifty million taels, while the actual claims submitted by the powers amount to four hundred and sixty-two million. The diplomatic body has proposed a pro rata reduction, but the British Government objected on the ground that its claim represented the irreductible minimum, British private claims having been greatly reduced by the special commission. No such action was taken against the claims of the other powers.

AS TO THE BELGIAN INDEMNITY.

London, March 1.—A despatch from Brussels to The Times says that the total amount of the Belgian claims upon China in connection with the Boxer disturbances is thirty-three million francs. The Government has been informed that the indemnity does not cover a sum proportional to the reductions necessary. The French shareholders of Han Kow, Pekin, Railway have made a demand of fifty million francs.

FOURTEEN MEN DEAD, OVER A SCORE MISSING

Rescuers Meet the Fate of Those They Tried to Save—The Death List May Reach Thirty

Telluride, Colo., March 3. — Fourteen dead, as many injured, and a score or more missing are the result, so far as known, of the series of snow slides which occurred in the vicinity of the Liberty Bell Mine, on Smuggler Mountain three and a half miles north of Telluride. The roads between here and the Liberty Bell are almost impassible, and details of the accident are hard to obtain. It seems that no less than four distinct slides occurred, each one claiming two or more victims. Several bodies have been recovered, but quite a number of the known dead are still buried under the tons of snow, rocks and timbers by which they were carried down.

The death list of the first slide, so far as known is as follows: Gus Swanson crusher feeder; H. S. Summerland, tram brakeman; Harry Golden, waiter in boarding house; Gus Kraul, miner; J. P. Clemmer, steward; Wade Crowe, miner; R. Bishop, miner. The victims of the second slide were: Harry A. Chase, assayer; L. D. Stanley, carpenter. Those who met death in the third slide: Gus Von Fintel, carpenter; John R. Powell, surveyor; Paul Dalghren, miner. In the fourth slide the following were killed: George Rowber and W. S. Gregory.

THE FIRST SLIDE.

The first slide carried away the building and bunk houses and the tram house of the mine. About 150 men are regularly employed in the mines and mills of the Liberty Bell mine, but a large number of men from the night shift were in Telluride and were prevented from returning to the mine by the terrible storm which was raging. The day shift had just gone to work, leaving but comparatively few underground workmen at the bunk house. The slide came without warning. The three large buildings were carried down the steep mountain side, a distance of about 2,000 feet, and literally ground to pieces, not a board being left intact. The snow and debris piled in the bottom of the canon 25 feet deep. Those who escaped the slide at once began the work of rescuing their less fortunate companions. A dozen or more were taken out alive, some of them badly injured, however. Word was sent to Telluride and a number of citizens left for the scene of the disaster to aid in the rescue of the victims.

THE SECOND SLIDE.

Shortly after noon, while the work of digging out bodies was going on, the second slide came down almost in the track of the first. The mountain side is very steep, and the descent of the snow mass was so swift that 24 of the rescuers were caught, two being killed. They were Harry A. Chase and L. D. Stanley, and their bodies have not been recovered. The others were more or less injured, but none were fatally hurt. Superintendent Chase of the Liberty Bell mine later ordered the work of rescue to be suspended, declaring that it was useless to endanger life further while slides were running. Several parties started at once for Telluride. Two of these parties were overtaken by slides. In one Gus von Fintel, John R. Powell and Paul Dalghren were killed, and in the other George Rowber and W. S. Gregory lost their lives. None of these bodies, have been recovered at last accounts.

A large number of men are missing, and it is thought possible that the death list will be swelled to twenty, and possibly thirty, when the bodies shall be taken from the snow mass. Among those killed Raymond Bishop, Wade Crowe and Harry A. Chase were last year's graduates from the State School of Mines at Golden, Col. They had taken positions with the Liberty Bell to acquaint themselves with practical mining. They belong to good families in Denver and Pueblo.

Several other slides are reported in this vicinity. One at the Camp Bird mine in the Sneffels district resulted in the death of one man and the probably fatal injury of three others. From the condition of the snow more slides are expected.

Items of Interest.

London, March 2.—In his latest report to the War Office, Lord Kitchener gives a general review of the military situation. He says,—"The enemy's forces in the field are now practically confined to four definite areas. In the Eastern Transvaal the personal influence of General Louis Botha continues to hold together a considerable but diminishing force between the borders of Swaziland and the Brugspruit-Watervaal blockhouse line. In the west Generals Delarey and Kemp cling to the difficult country between the Mafeking Railway line and Megaliesburg. In the north-eastern districts of Orange River Colony De Wet and ex-President Steyn still control a comparatively large and determined following, who have quite recently given proofs of their boldness and initiative in attack, and in Cape Colony the country to the north-west of the Cape Town-De Aar line is infested by several bands of rebels, kept together by adventurers from the late republics. Elsewhere smaller commandos are to be found, but their numbers are insignificant, and their want of enterprise reveals in all probability an abating interest in the useless struggle in which they have so long been employed."

BOTHA'S DAUGHTERS.

London, March, 2. — General Botha's two daughters, aged 7 and 13, arrived at Flushing by the steamer Kurfurst yesterday, and proceeded to Flushing, escorted by Mr. Fischer.

ESCAPING BOER SHOT.

St. Helena, March 1.—A Boer prisoner in attempting to escape from Deadwood Camp on Thursday evening, was shot by a sentry of the Wiltshire Regiment, the bullet lodging in the chest. The prisoner died on the following day.

PRETORIA STILL THE CAPITAL.

Pretoria, March 2.—At a meeting of the Pretoria Town Council, the chairman, Mr. Lovejoy, announced that a change of the seat of administration from Pretoria to Johannesburg was no longer contemplated. It was definitely settled, he stated, that the administrative departments now established in Pretoria would remain here, and that the Legislative Council would hold its sessions here. The courts, he added, would open in April.

The statement has caused the greatest satisfaction, removing the disquietude which had been caused by persistent rumors to the contrary, and which had had a serious effect upon business, bringing it almost to a standstill.

ATTEMPT TO RESCUE VILJOEN

Pretoria, March 2.—On the night that General Viljoen, now a prisoner of war, was expected to leave Machadodorp on his way to Pretoria, the Boers mined the railway between that place and Dalmanutha with the object, it is believed, of wrecking the train and rescuing the general. A bogie truck, however, of construction material had been placed in front of the armored train and sprang the mine. The bogie was blown to pieces, and the train escaped without injury.

RIGOR OF THE CENSORSHIP

London, March 2.—There are several indications that the censorship in South Africa has recently been tightened.

An Amsterdam correspondent writes: "I am told that the British are now maintaining a much more vigilant watch than heretofore, so that the fighting area is now nearly, if not wholly, inaccessible.

"Some time ago Mr. Isaac van Alphen, Mr. Kruger's Postmaster-General, was entrusted with a mission to Mr. Schalkburger and Mr. Steyn, but was arrested not far from the Portuguese frontier at Komatipoort, and made a prisoner of war."

RESULTS OF THE GREAT DRIVE

London, March 2.—The total results of the combined operations of the columns in the recent big drive against De Wet are as follows:—

Prisoners captured	286
Boers killed	16
Boers wounded	25
Rifles captured	156
Rounds of ammunition	2,800
Horses	904

And a quantity of sheep, cattle, and vehicles taken.

Among the captured was Commandant Bester, who has since died of his wounds at Heilbron Road.

WALKS 160 MILES ON WATER

Vienna, March. 2.—Capt. Crossman, who started on February 6th to walk down the Danube from Linz to Vienna, a distance of 160 miles, on his newly-invented water-walking shoes, towing his wife in a boat, arrived here yesterday. The long time spent on the journey is explained by the fact that Capt. Crossman stopped at several places to give exhibitions of his shoes. These are five yards long. The trip was made without mishap, notwithstanding there was an unusually strong current and much floating ice in the river. In addition, there were a number of storms, which made the walking perilous.

MOVE TO SAVE CHINA FROM EXTORTION

Effort To Compel Nations To Accept Sum Agreed To

Germany Increases Her Claim Against the Empire for the Boxer Outbreak—Others to be Asked to Make a Pro Rata Reduction

Washington, March 1—The United States Government has proposed to the powers concerned in the Chinese treaty that they consent to a pro rata reduction of claims so as to maintain the total within the sum of 450,000,000 taels, which the powers agreed to accept from China as full indemnity for the Boxer outrages.

Germany has discovered that she placed her claim too low, and has demanded an increase in allowance of 10,000,000 taels, and if this is to be met the other signatory powers must agree to submit to the pro rata reduction of that sum from their own original allotments.

The United States is firmly opposed to any attempt to extort from China more than the 450,000,000 taels, and it will attempt to avoid the creation of a precedent to be followed by the other powers in the allowance of this German claim.

The western nations may rue the day they waked up China. That country is absorbing western civilization and ideas with startling readiness. In the forefront of the civilization movement is Minister Wu Ting Fang, Chinese ambassador to the United States. Wu is decidedly up to-date. He talks English like an American, as a postprandial jollier he can give cards and spades to Chauncey Depew, his wife and family are social favorites in Washington and Wu himself is always good for a column or two of interesting reading every time a bright newspaper interviewer presses the button.

The average American, especially the average westerner, regards the Chinese in bulk as "coolies" and about three degrees below the negro in the anthropological category. Fancy the astonishment of ex-Mayor Phelan of San Francisco, who has come east to urge restrictive legislation on the Chinese question, when he met Mr. Wu in the rotunda of the Waldorf-Astoria on Saturday. A mutual friend attempted to introduce them but when Wu heard the name his yiad hand climbed and went up dangerously close to the nose of Mr. Phelan and he proceeded to tell the San Franciscan a lot of things about himself he never heard before—at least not from a Chinaman. A heated argument followed and Phelan told Wu the Chinese were a filthy lot and Americans proposed to keep them out of the United States.

"Then we'll keep the Americans out of China!" retorted Wu. "Yes, we'll keep you out of China!" He repeated it as if for emphasis. "We can get along without you. What have you got that we must have?"

"We have western civilization," said Phelan.

"We can get western civilization from Europe," was the rejoinder.

Phelan changed his ground and said the Chinese were different from other races because they did not assimilate or divest themselves of their eastern ways. "Have not I divested myself of my eastern ways?" queried Wu. The argument attracted such a crowd in the stately precincts of the hotel that the management had to have the corridors cleared, and as a parting shot the occidentalized representative of the Flowery Kingdom invited the Californian and all like him to "go way back off the earth and sit down."

The incident appeared to quite nonplus the Californian commissioner, who had evidently not before come in contact with the up-to-date style of Chinaman, and the verdict of the auditors of the argument, which lasted about a quarter of an hour, was that Minister Wu got decidedly the best of it and enlarged Mr. Phelan's views on the Chinese nation. Times have changed since the days of Truthful James, when a mere Chinaman can invite a Pacific Sloper to get off the earth and still remain on it himself.

MONROE DOCTRINE AND GREAT BRITAIN

A Nice Question Which Must Soon be Permanently Settled

IS CANADA A VASSAL OF U. S.

The Monroe Theory Will Probably Soon be Put to the Test in the Settlement of the French Shore Difficulty

Ottawa, March 3—A year ago James G. Whiteley, vice-president of the International Congress on Diplomatic History, contributed a very instructive paper in the Forum in which he succinctly described the Monroe doctrine as designed: (1) To prevent European powers—particularly a combination of European powers—from intervening in the affairs of the western hemisphere, so as to control the destinies of the American nations; and (2) to prevent the European powers from acquiring any new colonial possessions on this side of the Atlantic. Another authority has described the object of the doctrine as being to prevent the extension of monarchial forms of government on American soil, that is by the acquisition of additional territory. This latter definition of the doctrine would seem to apply to the acquisition by Canada of the French islands in the Gulf. It would be the extension of a monarchial form of government to territory which at present is under republican government.

As to whether the attitude of the United States to the countries of the western hemisphere amounts to the assumption of a suzerainty is a nice question, rendered more difficult by the vagueness of the term suzerain. Britain claimed suzerainty over the Transvaal when it was a republic, and with it the right to supervise its foreign relations with other powers. That is almost the precise position of the United States toward the countries of the western hemisphere. Its attitude was clearly defined in the recent difficulty between Venezuela and Germany. The States sent warships to stand by and see that Germany confined herself to collecting the debt and clearly intimated that any permanent occupancy of Venezuelan territory would not be allowed. Germany recognized the position of the United States by communicating with that country diplomatically and satisfactorily explaining her intentions before moving in the matter. In the British Venezuelan difficulty ten years ago, Britain was negotiating with Venezuela about a boundary dispute quite regardless of the United States when that country suddenly served notice that she assumed the right under the Monroe doctrine to see that the small republic got a fair deal from the big monarchy. Great Britain after the first shock of surprise at this extended interpretation of the doctrine, gracefully conceded the right of the United States, the dispute was referred to arbitration and Great Britain won even more than she had originally claimed. Since that time the scope of the United States' claims under the doctrine has been expanding, and it would be a nice point to settle whether the transfer of American territory from one European power to another would come under the ban of the doctrine.

POPE LEO'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED IN ROME

The Venezuela Pontiff Was Ninety-Two on Saturday

TWENTY FOUR YEARS A POPE

Will Celebrate His 24th Anniversary as Pope To-Day—Hundreds of Pilgrims Present at the Ceremonies

Rome, March 3—The sacred college yesterday, Sunday, presented to Pope Leo its congratulations upon the attainment of his ninety-second birthday. Cardinal Oreglia, the dean of the sacred college, read a long speech, to which the Pontiff formally replied. Monday, to-day, will mark the twenty-fourth anniversary of his coronation as Pope.

On the occasion of Leo XIII's Pontifical Jubilee, which is now being celebrated, Cardinal Respighi, the Pope's Vicar-General and President of the international committee for the jubilee festivities, presented His Holiness with a precious triregno or triple crown, made of gold, encrusted with diamonds and rubies, the value of which exceeds 1,000,000 lire ($200,000). The Pope will wear this triregno on Easter Sunday during the solemn ceremony of thanksgiving to be celebrated in St. Peter's.

In anticipation of the jubilee celebrations hundreds of pilgrims from all parts of the Catholic world have arrived in Rome. While Austria, Spain and the other Catholic countries of Europe have sent the largest numbers America is well represented by several hundred clergy and laymen of prominence. Numerous congratulatory messages reached the Vatican on Saturday, notably from foreign rulers.

The Pope looks remarkably well for a man of his extreme age, and the venerable pontiff's truly marvellous vitality and unimpaired memory occasions remark by all who see him.

In spite of persistent and apparently well-founded denials that there is any imminent danger of the Pope's decease the air is full of speculation and apprehension, indicating that his end is not considered far off.

The Pope's closest attendants include his faithful valet, Centra; one chaplain and one minor prelate, who constantly and tenderly guard his material comfort. His meals are served in his private apartment at a small table at which none other, even a crowned head, may sit down. No feminine hand may tend or soothe the august invalid.

It is worth notice that out of 263 occupants of the chair of St. Peter five have retained it longer than Leo XIII, including the apostle himself. Since the return of the Papacy from Avignon to Rome, only one Pontiff has lived to a greater age, Paul IV, who died at ninety-three. The record before Avignon is not always to be depended upon, but Gregory IX was almost one hundred when he died.

Used Strategy but were Defeated

London, March 2.—The attack made by the Boers, numbering 600, and driving cattle before them, to rush the outpost line near Bothasberg, Transvaal Colony, during the night of February 23, was most determined. They were led by two well-known fighters, Ross Hands and Manie Botha. When the Boers realized that their attempt to actually break through the wire fence was frustrated, they crouched beside the dead cattle with which the ground was thickly strewn, and from that defence, poured a heavy fire on the British troops. The fusilade was steadily returned, and, finally, the Boers were driven back, leaving 15 dead and 6 wounded on the field. They also left 170 dead or wounded horses and the entire herd of 6,000 head of cattle.

London, March 2.—Edgar Wallace, writing to The Mail from Standerton, says: When the Imperial Light Horse first heard of the disaster at Twrefontein they were encamped about 14 miles from the place where it had occurred. It was a little after 4 in the morning, but saddling immediately the corps galloped to the spot.

"The camp presented a ghastly sight. At the doors of the tents the dead lay huddled, some with half a dozen bullet wounds in them, some bayoneted. The tents were slashed and cut to pieces by the pom-pom fire, and in one tent an officer was found pinned to his bed with a bayonet thrust.

"It is reported that when Gen. Dewet arrived, he gave stringent orders to prevent excesses, and personally sjamboked a man for stealing a bottle of brandy from an ambulance wagon.

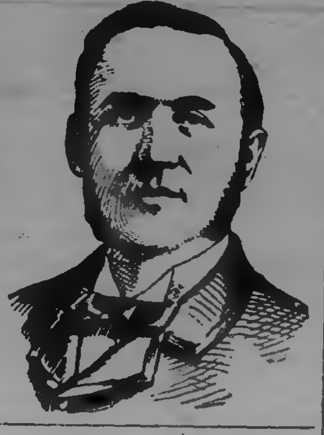
"Dewet spoke kindly to such of the wounded as were still alive when he arrived, and expressed his regret at their bad luck."

London, March 2.—A trooper of the 11th Yeomanry Battalion captured at Tweefontein says:

"The Boers, about 1600 strong, surprised our pickets about 2 am., and poured volley after volley into the tents while the men were yet asleep. The fight lasted until daybreak, 7 a.m., when the enemy were in possession of the camp. The dead and wounded were lying in heaps."

Another prisoner states that Gen. Dewet had a large number of Kaffirs with him as a covering party, and that these succeeded in reaching the outposts and clubbing the sentries with knobkerries.

BOERS WILL BE FREE SAYS IRISH LEADER



William K. Redmond Addresses a Big Meeting in Boston

Says Britain Will Never Be Able to Hold the Boers Down

An Enthusiastic Audience in Boston Cheers Redmond

Special to the Times.

Boston, March 3—William K. Redmond, M.P., brother of John E. Redmond, the Irish leader, who recently came to this country with Joseph Devlin, to increase, if possible, the membership in this country of the United Irish League and to stir interest in the Irish cause, spoke in Boston last night, Sunday, on the Emmet anniversary.

The immense hall was filled to completeness, and much enthusiasm prevailed. In opening Mr. Redmond extolled Emmet. He said: "The Irish forces were never so well organized and united as now. I have been quoted as saying we could put a great and irresistible force into the field, but that is not true. What I did say is that Ireland would be justified in resorting to force of arms. The twelve thousand members of the English constabulary in Ireland now make an uprising difficult, if not impossible.

"I do not expect to see the Irish representation in parliament cut down twenty, at least at present. It would be too difficult a job, and would be met by much English resistance from men of all parties. But if it were cut from eighty to sixty, the sixty would still make themselves heard from, with 25 per cent. more energy.

"The United Irish League is working for home government. Whether that means absolute independence I cannot say. It might mean such government as Canada possessed; it might mean more—that would depend. Lord Salisbury has said better than I could what England had to fear—not the Boers, but the Irish."

Referring to the South African situation Mr. Redmond said.

"The optimistic reports now being sent to England by Lord Kitchener do not portray conditions as they exist in South Africa. From the moment that the English Tommy lands in Cape Town, he finds himself in an unsafe country. Not only is the Transvaal the enemy's country, but the Dutch in Cape Colony make of that region a very volcano stamping ground. As long as Mr. Chamberlain shall be able to keep a British soldier at the side of every Dutch settler, just so long will Cape Colony be peaceful. This, however, cannot last. Sooner or later the tremendous army now in South Africa must be withdrawn; the finances of Great Britain will not be able to stand the present strain placed upon them for long. When the army is withdrawn or diminished in size the Dutch will rise. The upshot of the whole thing will be that the Boers will secure their independence and that Cape Colony itself will break away from the British domination."

Mayor Collins presided at the meeting. The delegates are meeting with much encouragement in this country, and will address many large meetings. On St. Patrick's day, March 17, they will end their tour of the principal cities at a big meeting in Chicago, where it is expected they will address 25,000 patriots and sympathisers.

BIG FLOOD AT MILLBROOK

The High Water in the Creek Causing Considerable Damage

Mr. Isaac Richardson, of Millbrook, was in town on Saturday, and told the Times of the damage done in that village by the floods. The rain on Friday caused the creek to overflow, with the result that people living in the low ground were flooded out, and had to be taken from their houses in boats. The damage was mostly done to goods in cellars. The waters at once subsided, and all danger is now past.

One on Port Hope

Port Hope Times: It has been said that an Irishman once took a job at a certain figure and sublet it to a colored gentleman at a price 25 cents higher than he had taken it for himself, and on being asked his reasons, said it was worth a quarter to be boss. So we may conclude it is worth something to a new councillor to be chairman of a committee, but whether the chairman of town property thinks so now is questionable. A few days ago a letter was received by the town fathers from the hospital authorities in Peterborough saying a man of the name of Porter had died in that institution, who had given Port Hope as his residence, and asking for instructions for the burial. The letter was handed to the chairman of town property and after spending three or four hours running all over town in an endeavor to find out something about the dead man, but without success, he went to the mayor and asked what he should do. The mayor asked him if he considered a corpse town property. It then dawned upon the chairman that a joke had been put up on him.

The Pain of Sore Feet

Just about the most tantalizing of all pains comes from sore feet. To get relief bathe the feet in warm water and then rub them with Polson's Nerviline. It penetrates through the pores of the skin, takes out the soreness, reduces swellings, invigorates tired muscles, tones up the circulation, and prevents the feet from becoming sore again. Nerviline is a protection and safeguard against the pains and aches of the entire family and cures rheumatism, neuralgia, toothache, etc. 25 cents.

A Scientific Voice Improver

Because of its strengthening influence upon the vocal chords, Catarrhozone cannot be too highly recommended as a wonderful voice improver. It almost instantly removes huskiness or hoarseness, thus insuring clearness and brilliancy of tone. Catarrhozone keeps the mucous surfaces in perfect condition, and its regular use absolutely prevents colds and throat irritation, thereby removing the singer's greatest source of anxiety, unfitness of voice. The most eminent speakers and prima donnas would not be without Catarrhozone and credit in so many degrees their uniform strength and brilliancy of tone to its influence. The hard rubber inhaler fits conveniently into a purse or vest pocket, and may be used in the church, theatre, any place or any time. Complete outfit $1.00; Small size 25c. INJURED BY ROLLING LOG

Mr. Samuel Whitaker had His Arm Broken and is Now in the Hospital

Mr. Samuel Whittaker, who has been working in one of the Dickson Company's Lumber Camps, in Cavendish Township, about 16 miles from Gooderham, had the misfortune a few days ago to have his left arm broken in three places by a blow from a log falling from a sleigh. The injured man was taken to Gooderham, and from there to Kinmount, on a handcar. He remained in Kinmount over night and was brought to the Nicholls Hospital next day where his injuries are being attended to. Mr. Hunter of Gooderham accompanied him to town.

ODDFELLOW'S RALLY

To be Held Here on Thursday Evening March Thirteenth

The District Rally of Oddfellows will be held in the Oddfellow's hall on Thursday evening March 13th at 7.30. A large number of brethren from outside points have signified their intention of being present. There will be initiation degrees, the three degrees and the Oriental degree exemplified. Grand Secretary King and Grand Master Lyman are expected to be present. A very pleasant time is anticipated.

After the degree work is over refreshments will be served after which songs, speeches, etc., will be indulged in.

All members of Oddfellows and Oriental lodges are requested to attend the meetings of their respective lodges between now and March 13th to practice the degree work.

THE LATE MRS. MANNING

Died at Her Residence M'Donnel Street on Saturday, Age 85 Years

On Saturday morning Mrs. Samuel Manning, one of Peterborough's oldest and most highly respected residents, passed away at the advanced age of 85 years. The death occurred at the residence of her son Mr. W. H. Manning, No. [illegible] McDonnel street. Paralysis was the immediate cause of her death.

The deceased, whose maiden name was Nancy Cowing, was born in the county of Cumberland, England, 85 years ago, and came to Peterborough with her parents in 18[illegible]. Sixty-three years ago she was married to Mr. Samuel Manning, who predeceased her about [illegible] years ago. For some years deceased lived in the township of Smith. A family of seven are left to mourn the death of a kind and loving mother. They are: Messrs. W. H. of town, W. C. and J. C., of Smith, [illegible] of [illegible], and two daughters, Mrs. [illegible] of Smith, and Mrs. John Martin, of [illegible]. The funeral will take place on [illegible] at 10.30 and proceed to the Little Lake Cemetery. The funeral is private.

RICE LAKE

Fair Lake! Set charmingly among the hills,
Fed by the Otonabee in graceful wind,
Thy Islands, sentinel like, stand up,
Making a picture of rarest kind.
Memory goes back to the happy days,
Spent at the "Landing" and opposite shore,
In fishing, and hunting for relics
Dropped by the Indians long days before.

At the Landing there were many sights
Of interest to be seen each day
Campers arriving with spirits high
And others regretful going away.
The old Blacksmith with no work on hand,
But loving to take a hand at the oar,
And the dusky forms from Hiawatha,
Wending their way to the village store.

At the branches of the beautiful River
Where the water lily grows to perfection,
And the birds in great numbers are gathered
To get food from the rice and protection.
To luring of fish from the depths below
Such as the gamey black bass and swift maskinonge,
And listening to the scream of the king fisher
As he circles around and then takes a plunge.
To trips to the east of the river

Near to the red man's home,
To a deserted house with its orchard
Where only the cattle now roam.
And to the grave of the stranger in the forest
Where a very fine stone has been erected
By loving friends in a far off land
In memory of the dear departed.

CURIOS FROM AFRICA

Received by Lieut. Col. Rogers from Capt. Cockburn of Sierra Leone

Two very strange looking musical instruments were received yesterday by Col. H. C. Rogers, for the Victoria Museum from Capt. Cockburn now in Sierra Leone. The instruments are very crude and convey to some degree, the rude ideas of music of the natives there. One of the instruments is a drum, a half-globe like shape, covered with some kind of skin. This instrument, when touched by the drum sticks makes a very dull sound. The other instrument has no name—that anyone here known. It is made of a species of very hard wood, has gut strings and a number of cells for producing sounds. In all some seventeen different sounds can be produced with this instrument. The keys are made of wood and varying in length to make the required sound. This instrument is played by striking it lightly with two small sticks.

This Great Family Journal a Literary Offer He Wants to Know

A coy young creature sends the Times a short story entitled "Roy's Jelousy," with the following touching request:

"This is my first attempt at story riting, and is all emaginary. I wish you would use my story, but if it is not acceptable please return it.

And don't use the name of the anthor, if it is acepted, or tell the name.

The Times is sorry this promising young writer has imposed these limitations, as otherwise we might be tempted to publish a few samples from the story, the literary style of which is certainly unique. But without the name of its gifted author the tale would fall flat, for the fiction of to-day is judged, not so much by its quality as by the name, social standing, antecedents, personal peculiarities, and mental idiosyncrasies of the writer. Anonymous authorship is out of date. If the writer of "Roy's Jelousy will send stamps for the return of the manuscript, accompanied by her photograph and a sketch along the lines suggested above, this g.f.j. will have no trouble whatever in disposing of the story.

A SPLENDID REPORT

Annual Meeting of the Shareholders of the Toronto Loan and Savings Co.

We congratulate the shareholders of the Toronto Savings and Loan Company on the report which was presented at the annual general meeting of the Company, held at the Head Office, Peterborough, on Tuesday last.

The report speaks for itself. It is one that reflects the greatest credit on Mr. W. G. Morrow, the popular and and efficient manager, as well as on the Board of Directors.

On the Right Way.

ALMOST every man who has been successful has written an article for some magazine on how he did it, or been interviewed by some newspaper, but all this information has been scattered carelessly abroad, so that just when we want to know what to do, or the right step to take, we cannot lay our hands on the particular species of advice which we remember to have read. The result is that we stumble along as best we can, and probably make the very mistake of our lives, all for want of knowing what Caleb Coupon did at this point.

The writer hopes herewith to supply this deficiency, as he has kept a record of the principal necessities laid down from time to time by great men who have given the results of their experience, and lays them before the reader, to follow closely and not shirk.

To begin with, you should select for a birthplace a dingy-looking little farmhouse, on the outskirts of a clearing. Log cabins have gone out of date. At one time they were quite fashionable, but something a trifle better is now demanded. As time goes on, who knows? Maybe some of our great men will be born in the "Ladies' Home Journal" three-thousand-dollar country houses. This, however, is a remote contingency.

Be good to your mother. While the other boys of the neighborhood are playing hookey, marbles and baseball, you will be doing chores around the house. This, however, does not imply a goodness in any other way. You will, of course, avoid going to Sunday-school, and when you are not sawing wood and laying the foundation of the wonderful constitution which is afterwards to carry you through life, you will be reading a few well-chosen books, such as the dictionary, the Bible, and one or two good comic papers. You will find the jokes useful later when you are called upon to make after-dinner speeches.

You can then take your choice of "struggling" through college or leaving the farm with a dollar in your pocket. Better leave college alone, however, as it teaches you a lot of superfluous things you may regret. Many a man who might have accumulated a large fortune has spoiled it all by going through college and learning to love other things more than money. The best plan is to come to New York with a dollar in your pocket. Go at once to the leading savings bank and deposit seventy-five cents. Live on the balance until you get work. As soon as you get work, save at least seventy-five per cent. of your wages, if you can; or, better still, ninety per cent. You will thus acquire habits of frugality, which will be a source of happiness to you throughout your whole life.

At the end of a few years you will have saved up a few thousands, and your success is now assured. Do not gamble. Robbing is not only safer and surer, but it is legal. Protected by the laws of your country, you can feel entirely safe. Reorganize a railroad, start a small trust, or get acquainted in Washington. When you get to be seventy you ought to be worth at least a hundred millions. You can then make a bluff at giving it all away, and be quoted as saying that it is wicked for a rich man to leave anything behind him.—Tom Masson.

Mr. Balfour on Illustration.

"There are books," said Mr. Arthur Balfour, at the dinner given to Sir John Tenniel in London the other evening "in which the text is a mere otiose and almost unnecessary appendage to the illustrations. There are other books, still larger in number, in which the illustration is an impertinent intrusion upon the attention of the reader, distracting his mind from the literary masterpiece with which he is concerned, and intruding alien and unsympathetic ideas to disturb the current of his thoughts. Those books are numerous. But there is a third class of book in which the illustration and the text are so intimately connected, in which the marriage between the two is so happy and so complete, that you cannot conceive the text adequately without the illustrations any more than you could conceive the illustrations unelucidated by the text. Our guest of this evening is one of the happy creators of this kind of illustration. There are books known to all of us in which it would be as impossible to forget the illustrator as it is impossible—and I hope it will be long impossible—to forget the author." Of course, the book was "Alice in Wonderland."

Stage Asides.

Fanny Kemble once gave a most amusing instance of the extent to which "stage whispering" may be carried on unknown to the audience. It was in a well-known theater, and "Romeo and Juliet" was the play.

Romeo was at the words (stage version, not Shakespeare's), "Quick let me snatch thee to thy Romeo's arms," when he pounced upon her, and lifting her up bodily staggered down the stage.

"Let me go," she whispered, "you've got me up horribly; let me down," but all in vain. The climax came at the passage, "Tear not my heart-strings thus; they break, they crack, Juliet" (still the stage version), when——

Juliet (to corpse)—Am I smothering you?

Corpse—Not at all; but could you, do you think, be so kind as to put my wig on again for me?—it is falling off.

Juliet (to corpse)—I am afraid I cannot; but I'll throw my muslin veil over it. You have broken the vial, have you?

Corpse—No, indeed.

Juliet—Where's the dagger?

Corpse—'Pon my soul, I don't know.

All these "asides" went on unknown to the audience in the very crisis of the tragedy.

Just Think of It!

In the last "Berichte," Nencki and Marchlewski describe the very interesting discovery of the close chemical relationship existing between the red coloring matter of the blood and the green chlorophyl of plants. Haematoporphyrin, a derivative of haemoglobin, and phyllocyanin obtained from chlorophyl, both yield on reduction haemopyrrol, which is probably an isobutyl or methyl propyl pyrrol."

Curious Bits of News.

It is said that there is now little hope of discovering an unknown First Folio Shakespeare, as all the libraries of England have been ransacked. Nevertheless whenever a First Folio comes to the surface and is sold at auction the search begins anew. No wonder! The copy sold in London the other day brought $8,600.

A pension worth while is that to be enjoyed by J. A. Fillmore, who has resigned the position of manager of the Pacific system of the Southern Pacific Railway after almost a lifetime of meritorious service. He will be paid one thousand dollars a month till the end of the year and a pension of five hundred dollars a month thereafter as long as he lives.

Otani Kozui, a young Buddhist priest who is kinsman to the Mikado, is about to leave England, where he has been for some time past, and will come to America to still further study Christianity and Christian institutions. His family tree has traceable roots as far back as two thousand six hundred and fifty years ago, he represents the richest and most advanced sect in Japan and he will one day rule over thousands of temples in that country.

The captain of an ocean steamer is often warned of the proximity of icebergs by the men in the engine-room. When a ship enters water considerably colder than that through which it has been going its propeller runs faster, and as such water surrounds the vicinity of icebergs for many miles the engineers know that when the propeller's action is greatly accelerated without any increase of the steam power icebergs may be expected. Of course, the thermometer is the most useful indicator of icebergs.

A curious custom exists in the Prussian royal family of selecting every July a half dozen deserving young couples too poor to marry, and to have them wedded in the garrison church at Potsdam on the anniversary of the death of Queen Louise of Prussia. After the ceremony each bride received a gift of a sum equivalent to about $115 and a handsome family Bible. The function took place, as usual, a short time ago, in the presence of Princess Margarethe, the eldest unmarried daughter of the Prussian royal family.

Some time ago the old trysting oak in Harthill Walk, so frequently mentioned in "Ivanhoe," was felled to the ground in order to preserve the trunk. The tree was one of the oldest in England, and is described by Scott as being venerable when siege was laid to the castle of Torquilstone. The tree stood on the estate of the Duke of Leeds, whose agent, Mr. Mosey, is devoted to Scott. By his instructions the tree was taken down, and the trunk will be preserved on the lawn in front of Mr. Mosey's house. A young oak tree is to be planted by the Duchess of Leeds on the site of the trysting tree.

The meaning of the word "humph" was recently the subject of judicial decision in the Irish Court of Appeal. Mr. Justice Madden and Mr. Justice Boyd held that "humph," as used by Sir Walter Scott and Miss Austen in their novels, was an expression of dissent, while the Lord Chief Justice and Mr Justice Burton inclined to the conclusion that "humph" only meant a "dissatisfied condition of the mind." The Court of Appeal has now decided that the word is "an expression of doubt or dissatisfaction," or, as Lord Justice Walker put it, in the words of the "Century Dictionary," "a grunt of dissatisfaction."

The Sultan's decree that Turkish children shall not be educated in "the foreign way" any longer and that Turkish women shall not be allowed to have Christian companions has been received with different feelings, it is said. Several high officials are deeply displeased by the order, but one highly educated woman of rank, wife of a dignitary, is quoted as saying that her own experience had convinced her that it was much better to have no education than to learn what life might be, yet have to spend it in a harem. She had refused, therefore, to allow her own daughters to be educated as she had been, and regards the Sultan's decree as a wise one.

A curious phenomenon was observed at the village of Le Ghazil, in the French Alps, recently. One day, towards evening, the inhabitants were disturbed by a loud rumbling in the vicinity of Mont Farand which increased in intensity. Looking toward the scene of the disturbance, the villagers were further startled by seeing bright flashes of fire. At first the unusual spectacle was attributed to volcanic agencies, and a party of civil engineers set out to examine the cause of the phenomenon. They discovered that the intense dry heat had caused the chalk rocks on the summit of the mountain to crack and to break away in all directions. These rocks had descended the mountain like an avalanche, and being thickly veined with silex, in descending they had struck one another with terrific force, scattering brilliant showers of sparks in all directions, with such a rapidity that they resembled one single sheet of flame.

Cheap Meals.

"About the cheapest restaurant I ever visited or read about," said a man lately returned from England, "was a dining saloon in the Whitechapel district of London, where a relishing and fairly substantial meal may be had for a halfpenny, or one cent in our money. This cheap repast is not served up in the shape of a cut from a joint and two vegetables. It is a big brown pie, very juicy and very hot. The absence of beefsteak is evident when you cut the pie, but you find inside a liberal sprinkling of sheep's liver, onions and turnips, and a plentiful supply of gravy. For a halfpenny extra two slices of bread and a cup of tea are supplied. Between the hours of twelve and two the poor and hungry from all parts of the East End of the city flock to the dining-room. Most of the patrons are shoeblacks, penny toy men, costermongers, and now and then young clerks whose salaries will not permit them to indulge in a more costly dinner."

It turns out that the late fire in the Sultan's palace was the result of a plot among the ladies of the harem. Too many wives can generally be depended on to make things warm for a man.—San Francisco "Bulletin."

At North Berwick, near Edinburgh, the other day, a golfer whose ardor is greatly in advance of his skill got into difficulties at the second hole. Repeated "foozles" left his ball badly "cupped" on the brink of a bunker. He turned to his caddie in despair. Said he: "I've tried my brassie, and my cleek, and my mashie, and none of them will lift out that ball. What should you say I should take now?" "Sir," was the perfectly respectful and sympathetic response, "I wad mysel' be taking, were it just me mysel', the four-twenty train back to Edinburgh." And he did.

Perfect Health

Is within the reach of almost every woman. The weakness, nervousness and irritability from which so many women suffer is in general due to disease of the delicate womanly organism. When the disease is cured the general health is re-established.

Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well. It promotes regularity, dries disagreeable and enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. When these diseases are cured, headache, backache, nervousness and weakness are cured also.

"I was very weak and nervous when I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' about a year ago," writes Mrs. M. E. Everetts, of 89 Oxford Street, Woodstock, Ont. "I had been suffering for seven long months, and had taken medicine from a physician all the time, but it seemed to make me feel much worse. My stomach was so bad (so my doctor told me), and my nerves were in such a state that I would start at the least noise. I felt irritable at all times; was not able to do any of my own housework; had to keep help all the time. How I suffered God and myself alone know. I was greatly discouraged when I commenced taking your medicines, but the first bottle seemed to help me. I took five bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' two of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' also two vials of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. I can highly recommend these medicines to all who suffer as I did. I never had better health than I now enjoy, and it is all owing to Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Anecdotal.

According to "Harper's Magazine," a certain teacher of English in a school of high rank in her native State, Mississippi, who, in spite of her vivacity in conversation, is perhaps, if anything, too fastidious in her choice of words, was spending the summer at the New York Chautauqua. Her flow of spirits made her the delight of the dining-table at which she was first seated, but at the end of a fortnight she was moved by her landlady to another place. A lady from Boston who had been sitting opposite the Southerner expressed her regret at the change. "I am so sorry you are going to leave us," she said, with warmth; "we have all enjoyed your dialect so much."

Mr. Baring Gould tells a story about the Vicar of Helland, Cornwall, and his neighbor, the Vicar of Blisland. The former was going to London, and hoped that the Archdeacon of Cornwall could be induced to take his service on the Sunday following so that he might stay away a few extra days. He left it to his neighbor at Blisland to negotiate the little arrangement, and asked to be informed how things went by telegram. All went well; and the Vicar of Blisland gave in a telegram at the nearest office: "The Archdeacon of Cornwall is going to Helland. You need not return." But when delivered in London the words were thus divided: "The Archdeacon of Cornwall is going to Hell; and you need not return."

An error of a new clerk in the mailing department of an English publishing house was responsible the other day for the mailing of a prospectus to a world-famous statesman, who had been dead for some years. The letter was returned a few days later, with the following endorsement: "In Heaven, ——, 1901. Gentlemen: As your publications are not permitted to circulate here, I believe it would be useless for me to subscribe for them. Yours respectfully," and here followed the name of the famous statesman.

When asked what he thought of a certain captain who frequented the Essex links, a Scotch caddie said: "Weel, sir, he's a verra nice gentleman an' a good gaufer, but he's awfu' nerra—awfu' nerra." "Narrow! What do you mean, Donald?" "Weel, sir, it wis this way. Efter the game was ower, and I had carried his clubs up tae the house, he says: 'Donald, will ye hae a draw?' and I said: 'I do be verra pleased,' so he gets the bottle, an' he pourin' awa' intae a glass, an' I wantin' tae be genteel, says: 'Stop! stop'—an' he stopped."

What to do with Jefferson Davis should he be captured, was a problem that puzzled Lincoln's Cabinet not a little. In speaking of it to General Grant one day, the President remarked: "There was once an Irishman who had signed the Father Mathew temperance pledge. Going into a saloon to get a glass of lemonade to quench his thirst, he leaned over and whispered to the barkeeper: 'And couldn't you put a little brandy in it unbeknownst to meself?' So," continued Mr. Lincoln, "let Davis escape all unbeknown to yourself if you can."

L. R. Stockwell, the popular actor, says that some years ago in San Francisco, when Peter Jackson, the colored pugilist, was a feature in a revival of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Bill" Nye was to have lectured at the Baldwin Theater, but was greeted by so small an audience that he excused himself and went over to hear Jackson talking of the pearly gates to Little Eva. After the performance Stockwell met Nye in the lobby of the theater, and he exclaimed: "Hello, Nye! What did you think of Peter?" "Well," responded the humorist, dryly, "anatomically he was great, but Uncle Tomically he is the worst I ever saw."

At the Lotus Club dinner to Ambassador Choate, Senator Chauncey M. Depew told a story on Mr. Choate which caused the assemblage to roar with laughter. The occasion he referred to was a dinner given in New York some years ago to the Earl of Aberdeen, Governor-General of Canada, and head of the Clan Gordon. The earl attended in full regalia, "the wearing of which," said the senator, "consists in leaving off some articles of dress we deem quite essential." He continued: "At the dinner I sat on the earl's right. Choate was next me. Just after the earl seated himself, Choate whispered to me: 'Chauncey, are Aberdeen's legs really bare?' I raised the table-cloth cautiously, and gave that scratch that all Scotchmen appreciate, and said: 'Yes, Joe, they are.' When Choate got up to speak, he said: 'Gentlemen, my invitation did not convey to me the information that the Earl of Aberdeen was to be here to-night in full regalia. If I had known it I would have left my trousers at home.' Well, you never saw a madder crowd of Scotchmen. They thought it a reflection on the national costume of the earl, who had done the diners honor to appear in it. Well, four years have passed since then, and now the earl regards that as a joke, and tells it at least once a day, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year."

A story of a "joke" played in Vienna on Mascagni, the composer, who is soon to visit the United States, is going the round of the newspapers in Italy, where it has created an extremely bad impression. The distinguished Italian was the guest of honor at a soiree given by the theatrical artists of the Austrian capital, and expressed regret that he was unable either to speak or understand German, whereupon an actor of comic parts arose and addressed him very solemnly, saying: "Most illustrious maestro, you have given to the world 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' which is a musical freak." At this point Mascagni also rose, and warmly shook the orator's hand. "You have no other talent than that of self-advertisement." Another effusion on the part of the composer. "In a word, you are merely a genial usage." Prolonged applause, at which Mascagni could scarcely master his emotion.

Adelina Patti is, as all the world knows, one of the most charitable women in the world, and nothing pleases her more than to do a good turn "on the quiet," as she herself laughingly puts it. Last winter she was staying for a few days in an isolated village at the extreme end of Yorkshire. To kill the monotony of the place, the great singer went one night to a concert got up in aid of a certain village institution. Not half the performers turned up. Seeing the difficulty in which the chairman and committee were placed, Madame Patti (incognito, of course) offered to oblige them with a song or two if they cared about it. After she had rendered, in her own glorious way, three of her sweetest ballads, the chairman approached her, and, in solemn tones, thanked her: "Well, Miss, you've done oncommon well; and, although 'Arry 'Ock, the juggler, who thinks nowt of takin' 'old of 'ot pokers and a-swallowin' needles, couldn't turn up, yet you've pleased us very considerable, Miss!"

Colonel Osio was the present King of Italy's "governor" for very many years, when, as Prince of Naples, his charge was a delicate lad. Colonel Osio's strict regime has been very severely criticised, but that the King remembers him with respect, if not with affection, is proved by his having conferred the hereditary title of count upon him on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Yolanda. One day a request came from a well-known personage for the young prince's autograph, to be added to a collection containing that of his grandfather and his father. The prince was about to comply, when the colonel said, sharply: "Certainly not; what value has the signature of an insignificant boy who does not even know how to write properly?" For some act of disobedience a little later the prince was brought before his "governor," who exclaimed: "If I were the King I would cut off your head." "And I will cut off yours when I am king," defiantly replied the lad. His punishment is unrecorded, but, instead of cutting off his tyrant's head when that day came, he has ennobled him.

During the famous Douglas and Lincoln debate and subsequent campaigns the point was frequently brought out by the supporters of "the Little Giant" that Mr. Lincoln had served only a single term in Congress, but that Senator Douglas had enjoyed for years a national reputation. This point, says a writer in "Lippincott's," was urged in a heated discussion between an ardent supporter of Douglas and a German voter who favored Lincoln. Finally the former, thinking to overwhelm his opponent, said: "Who is this Lincoln, anyhow? Nobody ever heard of him until Senator Douglas brought him into notice by holding a joint debate with him. Senator Douglas, on the other hand, is a great statesman. Why, he has had his eye on the Presidential chair for the last ten years!" "Vot is dot you say?" was the reply. "You say Meester Doogias have hat his eye on der President chair for ten years?" "Yes, that is just what I said." "Vell, you shoost tell Meester Doogias if he vill keep his eye on dot chair shoost a leedle vile longer he vill see old Abe Lincoln sitting down in it." This closed the debate, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

His Impression.

"Do you believe that college-bred women make good wives?"

"I don't think going to college makes the slightest difference," answered Mr. Meekton. "You couldn't keep a woman from assuming a position of superior knowledge by merely not sending her to school."—Washington "Star."

The Definition.

Teacher—Johnny, can you tell me what is meant by "steward?" Johnny—A steward is a man who doesn't mind his own business. Teacher—Where did you get that idea? Johnny—Well, I looked it up in the dictionary, and it said, "A man who attends to the affairs of others."—Cape "Register."

A Pathetic Appeal.

THE following plea for judicial mercy, sent to "Law Notes" by a correspondent, will be found brimful of pathos: Ex parte Samuel Rice.

To the Hon. H. A. Sharpe, Judge of the City Court of Birmingham, in Equity: Your petitioner, Samuel Rice, of Mobile, Ala., would deferentially represent that on January 16, in the year of grace 1891, your honor dissolved the connubial ties theretofore existing between petitioner and his consort, Annie Rice, granting her a divorce a vinculo et matrimonii, with the beatific privilege thereunto annexed of marrying again, a privilege, it goes without saying, she availed herself of with an alacrity of spirit and a fastidious levity disdaining pursuit; but on this vital point your honor extended to petitioner only the charity of your silence.

Petitioner has found in his own experience a truthful exemplification of Holy Scripture, "that it is not well for man to be alone," and seeing an inviting opportunity to superbly ameliorate his forlorn condition, by a second nuptial venture, he finds himself circumvallated by an Ossa Pelion obstacle, which your honor alone has power to remove.

His days rapidly verging on the sere and yellow leaf, the fruits and flowers of love all going; the worm, the canker, and the grief in sight, with no one to love and none to caress him, petitioner feels an indescribable yearning, longing and heaving to plunge his adventurous prow once more into the vexed waters of the sea of Connubiality: Wherefore, other refuge having none, and wholly trusting to the tender benignity and sovereign discretion of your honor, petitioner humbly prays that in view of the accompanying fiats of a great cloud of reputable citizens, giving him a phenomenally good name and fair fame, you will have compassion on him, and relieve him of the hymeneal disability under which his existence has become a burden, by awarding him the like privilege of marrying again; thus granting him a happy issue out of the Red Sea of troubles into which a pitiless fate has whelmed him. For, comforting as the velvety touch of an angel's palm to the fever-racked brow, and soothing as the strains of an Aeolian harp when swept by the fingers of the nightwind, and dear as those ruddy drops that visit these sad hearts of ours, and sweet as sacramental wine to dying lips, it is when life's fitful fever is ebbing to its close to pillow one's aching head on some fond wifely bosom and breathe his life out gently there.

And in duty bound to attain the possibility of compassing such a measureless benediction, petitioner will pray without ceasing, in accents as loud and earnest as ever issued from celibatarian lips.

SAMUEL RICE, Petitioner.

A Familiar Odor.

Senator William E. Mason of Illinois is a good campaigner and a great stump speaker, relates the New York "Times." His wit and eloquence are not of the most refined order, but they are just the thing to catch a crowd. Mason is never at a loss for a retort, and enjoys being interrupted in a speech. During one of his campaigns he was getting his usual share of interruptions in a speech he was delivering. Mason was enjoying himself, and was making a great hit with the majority of the crowd. There was one man, however, who tangled Mason up somewhat. This man had imbibed more alcohol than was good for him. He was on the outskirts of the crowd, and he was asking Mason questions in a thick voice. The Senator could not catch the questions, and as he did not at first know what was the matter with the fellow, he stopped and attempted to catch the question each time. He always failed, and this led to several awkward pauses. At last Mason became irritated. The next time an interruption came from the intoxicated one, Mason asked:

"Who are you?"

"Don't you know me, Billy?" came the answer, in maudlin and swaying tones.

Mason paused. "My friend," said he, in a measured and metallic voice, "I don't recognize your face, but your breath is familiar."

An All-Around Hit.

A certain government officer was noted for being a hard taskmaster to those who were under him, the servants in his own establishment being no exception. His valet was expected to be on duty three hundred and sixty-five full days in the year.

Being detailed to accompany a scientific expedition on an extended cruise, the officer unbent a little in communicating the news to his personal attendant.

"Well, James," he said, "how would you like to go with me around the world?"

"Do we go from east to west, sir?" asked the valet.

"Yes."

"We lose a day in going that way, don't we?"

"We do."

"Well, sir, I'd like it first-rate. It would give me one day off."

Returned For the Pan.

Only the experienced and methodical housekeeper knows the agony of the woman whose maid forgets her tray while performing the ceremonious obligations of the house. That the importance of the tray is recognized in Milwaukee is evidenced by the relation, by the "Sentinel," of the horror which seized upon a fashionable mistress while listening to conversation in the hall.

The maid had just arrived, and had been solemnly instructed as to the necessity of carrying the silver card-tray when answering the door-bell. It was an "At Home" day, and the domestic, in immaculate cap and apron, rushed to the door at the first tinkle. The caller proved to be the most imposing representative of the very upper set.

"Sure, an' she's in," said Mary, affably, in answer to the usual enquiry, and started upstairs. Halfway up she turned and rushed madly back, snatched the card-tray from the table, and holding it out to the astonished visitor, exclaimed:

"And wasn't I after forgettin' me pan!"

One of the oddest of recent inventions is a refrigerating egg, as it might be called. It is an ovoid capsule of nickel-plated copper, about the size and shape of a hen's egg, hollow and nearly filled with ice. If you have a glass of milk that is not cold enough, you do not like to put ice into it, because dilution with water spoils the beverage. But, if you have one of these eggs handy, you may drop it into the glass, and in a few moments the liquid is reduced to the desired temperature. In the same way you may cool your cup of coffee, if it is too hot, and the idea is equally applicable to any other fluids.

Caressing in Public.

"THE woman who bestows her caresses in public," says Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in dealing with a letter from a husband who considers his wife too demonstrative, "is like the woman who wears diamonds at breakfast, or goes shopping in an evening gown. A demonstrative nature, coupled with loyalty, is a jewel of rarest price for a man to possess in a wife, but he wants it set in the gold of good sense, and clasped with good taste. I do not believe in a love which hides itself from all observers, nor do I approve of a love which displays itself to crowds in public places.

"I think when the heart is full of genuine emotion it must express itself at times in a look, a word, an act, irrespective of place or surroundings, which indicates the source from which it came. The man or woman who is always cold or indifferent to another before people cannot be an ardent or genuine lover in private. Something is lacking in the nature that never reveals itself in the least degree in the presence of a third party. But men are exceedingly sensitive to public opinion, in these matters particularly, and the wife who continually offends good taste and her husband in such a case must lack tact and refinement. It is a peculiar difference in the masculine and feminine mentality that a man resents having the public share in the least his domestic happiness, while a woman glories in it. The moment outsiders say, 'How in love with you she is!' a man's affection for a woman lessens; while a woman's increases when the world says, 'How he adores you!'"

Some Unique Advice.

In these nervous modern days, when "depression," "prostration," "melancholia," "rest-cure," and "Weir Mitchell" are household words in so many families, this concise bit of advice concerning depression and low spirits will interest many. It is from the letters of Sydney Smith, clergyman, social philosopher and wit:

"Foston, February 16, 1820.

"Dear Lady Georgiana—Nobody has suffered from low spirits more than I have done—so I feel for you.

"1st—Live as well as you dare.

"2nd—Go into the shower-bath with a small quantity of water at a temperature low enough to give you a slight sensation of cold, 75 degrees or 80 degrees.

"3rd—Amusing books.

"4th—Short views of human life—not further than dinner or tea.

"5th—Be as busy as you can.

"6th—See as much as you can of those friends who respect and like you.

"7th—And of those acquaintances who amuse you.

"8th—Make no secret of low spirits to your friends, but talk of them freely—they are always worse for dignified concealment.

"9th—Attend to the effects tea and coffee produce upon you.

"10th—Compare your lot with that of other people.

"11th—Don't expect too much from human life—a sorry business at the best.

"12th—Avoid poetry, dramatic representations (except comedy), music, serious novels, melancholy, sentimental people, and everything likely to excite feeling or emotion not ending in active benevolence.

"13th—Do good, and endeavor to please everybody of every degree.

"14th—Be as much as you can in the open air without fatigue.

"15th—Make the room where you commonly sit gay and pleasant.

"16th—Struggle by little and little against idleness.

"17th—Don't be too severe upon yourself, or underrate yourself, but do yourself justice.

"18th—Keep good blazing fires.

"19th—Be firm and constant in the exercise of rational religion.

"20th—Believe me, dear Lady Georgiana,

"Very truly yours,
"SYDNEY SMITH."

This mixture of gastric, psychic, social, hygienic, philosophic and religious advice is most striking.

Slips of Authors.

Even experienced writers sometimes make their characters do astounding things. When Anthony Trollope pictured Andy Scott as "coming whistling up the street with a cigar in his mouth" he proved that he had never made personal experiment of the double feat of smoking a cigar and whistling a tune. Robinson Crusoe also performed a most wonderful feat. When he decided to abandon the wreck and try to swim ashore he took the precaution to remove all his clothes, and yet by some strange magic, of which the secret has been lost, the author makes him, when in this condition of Nature, fill his pockets with biscuits.

The great Shakespeare had a trick of introducing the most glaring anachronisms. For instance, he makes a clock strike in ancient Rome at a time, more than a thousand years before clocks were invented, when such an event would certainly have been the eighth wonder of the world.

Quite regardless of the evidence of geography, he transports Bohemia to the seaside; and he introduces a printing-press long before the days of Gutenberg. He calmly introduces a billiard table into Cleopatra's palace, and makes cannon familiar to King John and his Barons.

Thackeray was no mean rival to Shakespeare in vagaries of this kind; but in his case they appear to have been the result of pure carelessness and forgetfulness. The most flagrant case, perhaps, is where, after burying Lady Kew and effectively dismissing her from the story, he brings her to life again to help him out with his plot; and in other cases his capacity for mixing up the names of his characters is confusing, considering the number he introduces.

Emile Zola, in spite of his carefulness, makes the astonishing statement in one of his novels ("Lourdes") that the deaf and dumb recovered their hearing and sight, an event which savors very much of the miraculous.

Teacher—If you can get a bun for a halfpenny, what can you get for a penny? Johnny (eagerly)—A tea-cake?—"Pick-Me-Up."

The following advertisement is from the Tokio "Nippon" (newspaper): "I am a beautiful woman. My abundant undulating hair envelops me as a cloud. Supple as a willow is my waist. Soft and brilliant is my visage as the satin of the flowers. I am endowed with wealth sufficient to saunter through life hand in hand with my beloved. Were I to meet a gracious lord, kindly, intelligent, well educated, and of good taste, I would unite myself with him for life, and later share with him the pleasure of being laid to rest eternal in a tomb of pink marble."

The Historic Black Hole of Calcutta.

THE historic site of the Calcutta Black Hole is being worthily dealt with by Lord Curzon. The ugly brick and plaster gate leading from Dalhousie Square into the Post-office precincts is, it is understood, being demolished, immediately in front of the historical spot. A gate of light and elegant ironwork is being erected in its place. Immediately behind this gate, through which even when shut anyone can see, His Excellency has had the square site of the Black Hole paved with polished black marble, specially ordered from Italy. This space is surrounded by a low iron railing on a slight stone plinth. On the red brick wall of the Post-office building above there is an inscription, in gilt letters on black marble, visible from the street, describing the site and its restoration. Lord Curzon has had the entire outlines of the old Fort William—the bastions, the curtain, the gate, and the ravelin—marked out by brass lines let into a hard stone. At intervals white marble tablets affixed into the walls above inform the public what is commemorated, also to the building containing the still surviving brick arches of the famous old fort. Next winter, moreover, a new monument of white marble will be erected on the site of the old obelisk raised by Holwell, the survivor and historian of the Black Hole tragedy. Lord Curzon will rewrite the inscriptions upon it, inserting the many names of the victims that have recently been recovered, and omitting the somewhat truculent reference to the Nawab Surajud Dowlah, the author of the atrocity. Excavations have been made to see if there were any remains of the sufferers, but nothing has been discovered. By all this, by his magnificent scheme of the Victoria Memorial Hall at the base of the Ochterlony, and by his purchase of the Metcalfe Hall and its fine library, to which an imperial library is being added under an expert from the British Museum, the present Viceroy is doing a work too long neglected, and worthy of our Indian Empire. A special journal of the Victoria Memorial is to be brought out during the three or four years while it is being built, to bring in suggestions and help.

Domestic Ethics.

FULLY realising how difficult it is for the ordinary man to manage even an ordinary wife, Max O'Rell comes forward with some carefully-considered advice. "If your wife loses her temper, keep cool as a cucumber and enjoy the scene. If you are jealous, do not let her see it, for it will make her proud. If she is late don't scold. Tell her it is much better to have her late than not at all. Next time go without her. The cure is infallible." On the virtue of industry M. Blouet is equally emphatic. His advice practically is to assume this virtue if you have it not. "If you have nothing to do," he writes, "tell her you have to be very busy all the morning, and 'will she be kind enough to see you are not disturbed?' Then lock the door, light a cigar, and take a paper or a book, and be fearfully busy all the time." Next in this charming code of ethics comes the advice to never remind your wife of a favor done, for gratitude, like love, is not to be had for the asking. Never ask your wife for the return of a loan. She would think it shabby of you. If she should return it (there are some extraordinary women), give it back to her in the shape of a jewel. This will cost you nothing, as you had made up your mind to the loss of that loan." A hint to notice a woman's new clothes, and to treat her with the same respect and politeness everywhere as accorded to any other lady acquaintance, is followed by a few emphatic remarks on the "ethics of deshabille." "Shame her by the irreproachableness of your own appearance" is the prescription for dealing with the woman who appears in curlers. "If she is intelligent she will take the hint at once. Let your neglige at home be as carefully put on as your best dress coat. Love feeds on even such trifles as these in the case of people of a refined and artistic temperament."

Oriental Compliments.

An amusing trait in human nature is the mutual contempt with which nations regard each other. It is a trait which can be traced back as far as history extends. The Greeks called the outside world barbarians; the Romans scoffed at the Greeks, and the Egyptians regarded other people as no better than slaves.

In our days the contempt we exhibit for Oriental nations is mild compared with their contempt for us. The Turks are but little behind the Chinese in this respect, their ordinary designation of a Christian being a "dog."

When the first Dutch ambassador was sent to the Porte, he visited the Sultan.

"What does the dog want?" asked the Sultan.

This was translated in a speech full of ornate Oriental compliments, and the ambassador replied in the same strain.

"Let the dog feed," answered the Sultan; "and when the dog is fed, kick the dog out."

The ambassador was delighted with the Sultan's compliments. The Sultan felt that he had held his own, and the treaty was signed next day.

Words Coined in Boston.

When Boston was three years old, the word "coasting," in the sense of sliding down an inclined plane, was used for the first time by the Court of Assistance. The term "lumber" appeared first in the town records in 1663, being employed to designate the embarrassment caused by the "lumbering" up of the streets at a time when the settlers were doing a great business in forest products. Schooner, sleigh, harness, phaeton, carry-all, barge, currency, tender, sinking-fund, depreciation, appreciation, caucus (1740), labor trust (1741), unconstitutionality, gerrymander, warden, unconstitutional, immigrant, and chromo, are all Yankee words that have been imitated.

Nimrod—Come and go fishing.

Dunce—How dare you ask me to go fishing on Sunday; besides, I have to play golf.—Ohio State "Journal."

Schoolboy Humor.

Not the Less Sidesplitting From the Fact That it is Unconscious.

TO the majority of people, perhaps, a schoolmaster's life appears monotonous and uneventful, remarks "Chambers' Journal," but to one who is apt to look upon the humorous side of things this is far from being the fact. Most boys are careless, irresponsible creatures, certainly; but there is a fund of genuine, unadulterated humor in the average boy. A schoolmaster of fifteen years' standing writes: "I have corrected, I might say, a few thousand examination papers in my time. Some of the answers to questions set are wonderfully funny and original—unconsciously funny." The following are specimens:

A boy, aged ten, thus answers a question as to the cause of the Transvaal disturbances: "Krugger and Kannerbulism is one. He is a man of blud. Mr. Chamberling has wrote to him sayin' come out and fite or else give up the blud of the English you have took. he is a boardutchman and wickid heethin. lord Kitchener has sent for his goary blud and to bring back his scanderious hed ded or alive."

An essay on Gladstone by a boy of eleven states: "Mr. Gladstone lovd everybody. he lovd publicans and cinners and irishmen. he wanted the irish to come to England and have home rool, but Mr. Chamberlin says, no, no. so alars he got his blud up and kilid Mr. Parnel. Mr. Gladstone died with great rispect and is buried in Westminster with pieceful ashes."

Rather ambiguous is this description of Queen Elizabeth by another boy: "Queen Elizabeth was a vurgin queen and she was never marrid. she was so fond of dresses that she was never seen without one on. she was beautefull and clever with a red hed and freckles."

The boy writer of the following is decidedly backward in his Tennyson. Concerning the late poet laureate he writes: "Tenyson wrote butelfull poims with long hair and studid so much that he sed mother will you call me airly dear? his most graitist poim is called the idle king. he was made a lord but he was a good man and wrote many hoads. he luvd our dear Queen so much that he made a poim to her called the fairy Queen."

Another boy wishes to become an editor. In an essay on "The Choice of a Profession," he gives his reasons in these words: "A editur is always a happy man because he can read luvly tales and artikels all day and pages of sweet luv poems. A good editur has branes, but it must be very sad for him having to read melankolle stories of luv so as to make him allmost weep with tears from his eyes. a editur is a rich man because he never pays for artikels and so has all this interiect for nothing."

One could hardly put the following ideas of a certain youth on "Honesty" to a practical use: "It is a nobel thing to be a honist man. If you are a honist man you can look the world in its face and never be ashamed of the devill. it is good to be honist when sum one is looking becaws you may get a reeward. I know a churchwarding who is a honist man who collects money on Sunday in his black clothes. if you are honist when you are young you may grow to be rich and the lord mare and then of caws it dusn't matter."

This is from an essay on "My Hero:" "My hero is my father because he is a Christyun clergyman. my father says o my son gro up like your father and rispect yourself because nobody else will rispect you. I am goin' to be a clergyman because my father says I am a ass in school and have no branes to get a livin' in biznies."

Shakespeare is hardly appreciated by the young hopeful who writes:—"Shakespeare was a famus poit and poachur. he wrote luvly plase called the tame shrew, hamblet and a scotch piece called Macdoogul. In Shakespeares time some of the plase were very rude but now everything is so polite that a innercent father can take his baby and it wont disgust it. Shakespeare was so ill when he died that he cried out oh my cursid bones."

One youth, who is a poet in embryo, is a great admirer of Longfellow. "Longfellow," he says, "wrote a grate poem called 'The brik.' he butefully poemises in this way—I stood on a brik at midnight and gazed at the clock for an hour."

A boy, mourning the loss of an uncle, writes the following letter to his master: "Dear Reverend Sir, I am injoying my holidays and have only been ill twice. my unkel died with being old in three days larst week, and we have had a plesant fewneral. I want to work in my arithmetic sir as you sed but it would be wicked if I did it with a ded unkel, my father says if I dont get a prise next term sumthing will happen—I am Your rispectabul pupil

"JOHN."

New Stories Are Scarce.

Tim Murphy, the actor, and Henry Watterson, the editor, met in the corridor of a Washington hotel the other day.

"What is your latest story?" the actor asked.

"No such thing as a new story now," growled Watterson. "It is impossible to keep a story good for two days. What's the use of thinking up new stories when they get spread all over the country between daylight and dawn? Why, sir, do you know that it is impossible to keep a good story as your own property. It's these blank telegraph operators who like good stories better than anybody. Suppose Chauncey Depew has a good story in New York. He tells it. Some telegraph operator hears it, and that night when things are quiet on the wire he asks the fellow at San Francisco or Denver or Timbuctoo if he has heard the latest, and then he ticks it off. Every man along the line hears it and ticks it off to the fellow he is working with, and by daylight the new story is the property of the wide, wide world. New story? Faugh!"

"William," said the lady of the house, "will you mail these invitations for me the first thing this morning?" "Going to give a party?" "I have engaged a new kitchen girl for the first of next week, and I thought I would show her that we start with no ill-feeling by giving a pink tea for her Monday afternoon."—Indianapolis "News."

When Miss Delavelle Barrington was playing Miami in The Green Bushes at the old Mary Street Theater, Cork, a ludicrous incident occurred. Miami has to jump into the Mississippi, but when Miss Barrington reached the rocky eminence from which she had to leap she saw there was no mattress below to receive her; also the ledge of rock in front of the supposed river was too low to conceal the actress after her leap. Miss Barrington, however, nothing daunted, took her leap, and came down with a thud on the bare stage. The situation struck a member of the "gods," for a stentorian voice called out: "Oh, be jabers, she's drowned!"

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Our New Book on Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents, scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed). T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

SORE FEET

LOST—Between Simcoe and Townsend streets by way of Stewart st., a green leather purse containing a considerable sum of money. Finder will be rewarded by leaving same at the Times office.

Lecture at All Saints'

Rev. Canon McNab, M.A. of Toronto, will deliver a lecture illustrated with lime light views in All Saint's Church, this evening. The subject will be, "Bible scenes in our Lord's Ministry" which will be very interesting. Rev. Canon McNab is well known throughout the Province as a good speaker and a large number should hear his lecture to-night.

Stricken With Paralysis

The many Peterborough friends of Mr. F. G. Harris, formerly of the Times staff, and latterly city editor of the Rochester Herald, will regret to learn that he has been stricken with paralysis, and is not expected to recover. Mr. Harris left Peterborough some years ago to take the management of the Port Hope Times. When that paper was disposed of to its present owner, he removed to Rochester, N.Y., where he found employment on the Herald, and where his great ability secured him the responsible and lucrative position of city editor.

After Ten Months

On May 5th last, Mr. J. M. Brooks, of the Palace, lost a valuable dog. He at once advertised his loss in the Times and after ten months the dog has been recovered. It does not usually take so long for this great family journal to get its work in, but in this case the dog found its way to Lindsay, where it was identified by Mr. Brooks, who went there for the purpose, and who brought it home with him. One of our Lindsay subscribers, who had read the advertisement in the Times, notified Mr. Brooks that the dog was in Lindsay. So you see, it always pays to use the advertising columns of this paper. The hound no doubt preferred a backwoods place to Peterborough, on account of its hunting advantages.

W. C. T. U.

The cash prizes donated by the W.C. T.U. for the pupils who obtained the highest number of marks in the study of scientific temperance in the public schools during 1901, will be presented at a public meeting to be held at the Y.M.C.A. hall on Tuesday evening, March 4th, beginning at eight o'clock. The clergymen of the town and other leading citizens have been invited to take part. Short addresses will be given and good music may be expected. An urgent invitation is extended to parents and teachers. A collection will be taken up at close of meeting.

GET MAD

When Friends Tell the Truth

Many people become coffee topers before they realise it, and would be angry if thus described even by a close friend.

It will pay anyone to examine carefully into whether or not coffee has gained the mastery over them. A coffee toper may suspect that his or her ails come from coffee drinking, but they will invariably charge the disease to some other cause, for right down in the heart they realise that it would be practically impossible to give up coffee, so they hope against hope that it does not hurt them, but it goes right on with its work just the same and the result, is complete collapse and nervous prostration, lasting sometimes for years, unless the poison that causes the disease is discontinued.

There are hundreds of thousands of illustrations of the truth of this statement.

Any person addicted to coffee can make the change from common coffee to Postum Food Coffee without trouble provided the Postum is properly prepared so as to bring out the color, flavor and food value. It has a rich black brown color and changes to the golden brown when good cream is added.

The change will work wonders in any one whose nervous system or stomach has been unbalanced or disturbed by coffee.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Sermons Delivered by Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Knox College

In St. Paul's church yesterday morning, the pulpit was occupied by the Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Knox College, Montreal. Mr. Wilson is a very distinct speaker, with a calm and ready delivery. His sermon was preached from Matthew 8 26—"And He saith unto him, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm."

In the evening, Mr. Wilson again preached, taking as his text, Acts 5—29 'We ought to obey God rather than man,' Oh, that God would back home the truth of these words to each one of us. During the past two months we have been studying in the Sunday School lessons of the progress of the early Christian church. We take it from that great day of Penticost, where the Holy Spirit descended with such mighty power on Peter. We find him preaching with such a power that three thousand souls were led to accept his Christ. Then there followed such a religious fervor that people even sold their possessions and cast the money at the apostles' feet. We follow, Peter, John and other of the apostles as they perform their mighty miracles and work of healing as their Master had done before, bringing joy and gladness to hearts that were hitherto sad.

But whilst all this was going on and many were believing on Christ, the High Priests sent officers, who took the apostles and cast them in prison, forbidding them to speak in the name of Christ. The Council was called to sit in judgement on them; but what were stone walls and iron bars to them? It was a joy to them to suffer for their Master. What were prison walls and iron bars to the Lord whom they served? God sent to them an angel, who bade them go and preach the same glad tidings, and led them forth from the prison. In the morning, therefore, when the officers came to bring them before the Council, they found the prison shut in all safety, the guards on their watch as was their custom, but the prisoners had disappeared. When the High Priests were informed, they wondered what to do, fearing that the news of their miraculous deliverance should spread, and that the last error should be worse than the first. But a messenger arrived announcing that the apostles were again in the temple preaching the same message. Again the officers were sent and the offenders brought before the Council. Peter, as spokesman, addressed the High Priests, saying, We know that you told us not to preach; we know that you told us not to heal: but we ought to obey God rather than man.

Can this be the same Peter whom a few weeks before we see in the court of the High Priest's palace, cowering before the look of the maid who kept the door, cursing and swearing and denying any knowledge of Jesus, who stood a short distance off, needing his sympathy. Yes, this is the same Peter, yet a different Peter. His risen Saviour had spoken words of peace to him, and now he was ready to go to prison for this Master—ready to go to death rather than deny Him before men. He had learned to love God with an intense love, and was ready to lay down his life for the Master whom he served and loved.

Oh, that we might always obey God rather than men. What a benefit, temporal and spiritual would we have. Let us go back to the court of Henry VIII and see Cardinal Woolsely, as he utters those well known words, "If I had served my God as I have served my king, he would not have brought down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave."

A little later we find Cranmer, who denied his religion, recanting his action, and when he was called upon to suffer for his belief, see him hold this aged hand in the flames, and say, "The hand that sinneth, it shall die."

Charles IX of France is said to have been peculiarly sensitive as a youth, and shrank from anything that was coarse or wrong. When his wicked mother tried to persuade him to sign the decree which would mean the slaughter of the Hugenots he shuddered at the thought, and refused to have any part in it. But by subtle persuasion, she at length induced him to sign the document which caused the cruel and heartless massacre of Bartholomew on that memorable 24th of August.

In his last illness he is said to have suffered untold anguish, seeing the gaping wounds of the murdered Christians ever before his eyes, and his remorse ended only with his earthly life, if it so ended.

Pontius Pilate sat in judgment on Christ, and saw in Him an innocent man; but the mob was howling "Away with Him, crucify Him, crucify Him; and he listened to their cry; he obeyed men.

A few years ago there came to us a book from the Old Land entitled "Letters from Hell." In this book, Pilate is represented as kneeling in Hades beside an imaginary stream, forever washing his hands in the imaginary water, and as he gazed on them he sees them still covered with blood. Then he utters these words which echo through the portals of Hell—"Oh, will they ever be clean? will they ever be clean?"

But we have brighter pictures than these. We have in God's Word and in the pages of history pictures of men and women who obeyed their God rather than men—Men and women who counted it a privilege to uphold the name of Jesus. The three Hebrews obeyed God rather than men, and God was with them. Moses was destined to become a great man in Egypt, being learned in all the knowledge of the egyptians and marked as a probable future ruler—IF—he would obey the voice of man. But Moses listened to his God, and God made him great beyond all his dreams of greatness. Ridley and Latimer obeyed God rather than man, and as they were both chained to the same stake, praised Him for the privilege of testifying to His Name.

But there is one instance which I would wish to remember here, and it comes to us from Scottish history. It was in the days of religious persecution, when christians were forbidden by man to worship as they chose. Two brave women were arrested for their religion and taken to the seaside. Two stakes were driven in the sand while the tide was out, to which these noble martyrs, Margaret Wilson and Margaret McLaughlin, were to be tied, to drown by inches as the tide flowed in. To the outermost stake they tied the elder woman, judging that when the young woman saw her drown she would yield. But Margaret McLaughlin died, and Margaret Wilson was willing to die. As the water reached her knees she sang the words of the 54th Psalm. The water rose to her waist, and still she sang those words which we hope sang to-night. The water rose to her throat, and she no longer sang, but as she raised her eyes to Heaven the whole sky was overspread with a glorious light, as Scotland's maiden martyr was covered in the rolling waters.

Oh, how fatally easy it is for us to forget that God's will should come first.

There is an old adage, and one too often quoted in our everyday life, which says, When in Rome, do as the Romans do.

We find so many young boys and girls—and older ones too—led astray by the advice of men. Young man, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not. It is so easy to do that which is wrong; so hard sometimes to do that which is right. But there is this matter which must be attended to by every person within hearing of my voice to-night; that is the salvation of your soul. What are we to do about it? Man says, have a good time while you are young; enjoy yourself, and attend to these things later on; God says, Give your heart—now in your youth. Man says, sow your wild oats, you have plenty of time; God says, Whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap.

I might go on giving instances without number from this Book and from the pages of history, of men who preferred to obey God rather than man, but it is unnecessary. If I had time I might give you endless instances related by those in attendance at the conference in Toronto last week, where men, taking the Bible in their hand, went forth to foreign fields, or to the far districts of our own land, to preach the Word, not because they found it specially inviting, but because they felt the command of God pressing them to go, and they were willing to fulfil their duty to Him whom they have learned to love.

During the service, Miss Bellingham sang most acceptably, "Beyond the Gates of Paradise," and a male quartette, "Turning Backward through the Shadows," was sung during the offertory, which was a special missionary offering.

A Brick Famine

Lindsay Post: "It will be late this spring when building gets under way in Lindsay and in fact all over this district, because brick cannot be had for love or money. Messrs. Fox & Curtin's yards, south of the town, were cleaned out last fall, while the two yards at Cannington and one at Beaverton have not 1,000 on hand, counting culls. There is a small plant at Port Perry and another at Whitby, but the proprietors are seldom able to supply the home demand, and the Lindsay makers ship largely to those points almost every season. Even the Toronto yards have small stocks on hand, and are demanding $12 per 1,000 from outside buyers. The Cereal Co. buildings at Peterboro are taking enormous quantities, which are being shipped in from a distance. Messrs. Fox and Curtin hope to begin manufacturing by May 1, and will run their plants to their full capacity all summer.

THE LATE JOHN PORTER

At One Time a Resident of Peterborough Dies in Toronto

Mr. John Porter, one of the best known farmers in this county, died in Toronto on Friday from the results of an operation performed on him. Deceased was 67 years of age, and for many years he conducted a farm in Douro Township. About two years ago he retired from farming and moved to Auburn.

Deceased was married to Miss Annie Forsythe, daughter of Mr. Andrew Forsythe, of Keene, who together with six children are left to mourn his death. They are Misses Mary, Amy, Alice and Lillian, and Messrs. William and John, all of town. The funeral will take place to-day at 2.30 to the Little Lake Cemetery

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4 00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

DELAREY CAPTURES AN EMPTY BRITISH CONVOY

Outnumbered the British Two to One But Were Twice Driven Off

THE ITALIAN LABOR TROUBLE MAY BE SETTLED

Pro-Boers are Accused of Swindling—Many Russian Students on Trial—Britain and the Sugar Bounties

London, March 4.—In a despatch from Pretoria dated to-day, Lord Kitchener sends details of the disaster to the escort of the convoy of empty wagons at Vondonop, south-west of Klerksdorp, Transvaal Colony. The British casualties in killed, wounded, and men made prisoners reach the total of 632. In addition the Boers captured two guns.

Lieut.-Col. Anderson, who commanded the British force, and who has returned to Kraaipan, Cape Colony, with nine officers and 245 men, reports that when his advance guard was within ten miles of Klerksdorp during the morning of February 25, the Boers opened a heavy rifle fire on the troops from the scrub. The burghers were driven off, and the convoy resumed its march, when a more determined attack was made on the convoy's left flank, the Boers getting within a hundred yards and stampeding the mules harnessed to a number of wagons. The attackers were again driven off.

At about 6.30 in the morning the rear guard was attacked by a strong force of Boers and simultaneously another body of Boers boldly charged the center of the convoy and stampeded the mules in all directions, throwing the escort into confusion, during which the Boers charged and recharged, riding down the separated British units.

The fighting lasted for two hours, during which the two British guns and a pom-pom almost exhausted their ammunition. A detachment of 200 mounted infantry from Klerksdorp attempted to reinforce the British, but were held in check by the Boers.

Lieut.-Col. Anderson adds that the strength of the Boers was estimated at from 1,200 to 1,700. Commandants Delarey, Kemps, Celliers, Lemmer, Wolmarans, and Potgieter were all present. Commandant Lemmer is said to have been killed.

London, March 4.—A despatch to The Times from Madrid says: Alejandro Pidal y Mon, Spanish Ambassador to the Holy See, is about to retire, and to be succeeded by Senor Aguera. Pidal's departure is caused by Premier Sagasta's proposed reform of the Concordat, in which he seeks the suppression of ten bishoprics, ten seminaries, and nearly one hundred canonries. Pidal is a fervent Catholic, and declined to be the medium of the proposals. He preferred to resign rather than press them. Negotiations between the Vatican, and Spain will be resumed, though the correspondent says a satisfactory conclusion is not likely to be reached if Spain adheres to her demand

BRITAIN AND THE SUGAR BOUNTIES.

London, March 4.—A despatch from Brussels to The Times says the British delegates to the sugar conference have agreed, in consideration of the abolition of the bounties, to a clause whereby Britain undertakes not to adopt a preferential tariff in favor of any British sugar producing colony.

ITALIAN LABOR TROUBLE MAY BE SETTLED.

London, March 4.—A despatch to The Times from Rome says that the Italian Government has summoned the representatives of the railway workers to the capital to discuss their demands. A settlement of the trouble is likely, as the Government seems prepared to contribute to the cost of increasing the men's wages.

PRO-BOERS ACCUSED OF SWINDLING.

London, March 4.—A despatch from Vienna to The Times says that a pro-Boer propagandist, known as Dr. Ferres, claiming to be a Russian Councillor, has been imprisoned for swindling. He acquired a reputation in Germany and Austria as a Boer champion, and collected money which never reached the Boers. His victims are legion.

MANY RUSSIAN STUDENTS ON TRIAL.

London, March 4.—A despatch to The Times from St. Petersburg says the Disciplinary Court University of St. Petersburg is trying four hundred students implicated in the recent agitations.

GREAT BRITAIN'S WAR POWER IS INCREASED.

A French Writer Would Like to See France Join England—Extent of British Hostility to Germany

London, March 4.—Colonel Picquart has been writing in the Grande Revue a series of remarkable notes on the military situation. In his latest article, as summarized in the London Times, he discusses first the question of a rapprochement between France and Germany, and immediately finds the question of Alsace-Lorraine blocking the way. Germany will never give up these provinces, nor will France abandon the hope of recovering them, although she has no intention of provoking a war to that end. But they are not alone to be considered. How about England? Colonel Picquart has read the articles in the National Review on an English entente with Russia and France, and what has chiefly struck him is the apparent sincerity and extent of British hostility to Germany. He analyses these articles, and, being chiefly concerned with the military aspect of these questions, decides that a rapprochement for France with England and Italy, even it only on the basis of mere neutrality in the event of a conflict between France and Germany, would afford France , French-African colonies could be stripped of all but just the men required by the local administrations, and the French fleet might, with the Russian fleet, become mistress of the Baltic and the North Sea without endangering themselves much. Of course if the rapprochement became closer still with England the advantages would be incalculable. The command of the sea would be so complete that Germany could hardly obtain food supplies. Col Picquart analyses the other advantages, which would be numerous. The objection to an alliance with England that France has been painfully impressed, by the S. A. war, still Fashoda is not sufficient in itself to compromise a scheme of alliance with England. Moreover, he believes that the war in South Africa will have helped to create a genuine army for England, so that after the war her alliance will be more desirable than it would have been before.

THE NEW FLOUR MILL

Of the Central Milling Company will Start Operations This Week

The new flour mill built by the Central Milling Company near the C.P.R. station on George street is completed, and will start to run on Wednesday. The machinery which was installed by the Stratford Mill Building Company, is of the latest and most up-to-date style now used in the manufacture of flour The mill will have a capacity of 300 barrels per day.

The mill will be under the management of Mr. H. A. Mulhern which is a good guarantee that everything will be satisfactory. The mill will be run by electric power, furnished by the Auburn Power Company. The mill is lighted with electric light from top to bottom and was installed by Miller and Alexander. The enterprise is only another of the oft manifested facts that Peterborough's industrial life is of a healthy and vigorous character.

The Majority of Homes Families Have Heard the Joyful News That Paine's Celery Compound Makes Sick People Well and Strong

A House-to-House Canvass would Show That Thousands are Being Cured

The people who have not heard in some way of Paine's Celery Compound and its wonderful triumphs over the diseases and ailments of life cannot be counted as newspaper or magazine readers, nor are they amongst those who are in touch with the medical progressiveness of the times.

A house-to-house canvass (if that were possible) of families where Paine's Celery Compound is being used during these early spring days, would disclose an overwhelming amount of evidence regarding the implicit confidence that is placed in this greatest of all spring medicines. It would show the enormous number of people who are being cured of some form of nervousness, sleeplessness, dyspepsia, indigestion, neuralgia, rheumatism, headaches, kidney and liver disease.

Now is the time that Paine's Celery Compound can show astonishing and happy results to the sick. Now that spring is with us, giving a promise of fine weather and new beauties, it should lend encouragement to the work of getting well and strong.

To use Paine's Celery Compound for a few weeks will truly astonish every debilitated, weak and sickly man and woman. The change from a muddy and sallow complexion to a fresh, healthy color, with bright, sparkling eyes, unclouded brain, the enjoyment of refreshing sleep, clear, fresh blood coursing through the body, will be the sure reward of every user of Paine's Celery Compound. Accept no substitute or imitation. See that the name PAINE'S is on wrapper and bottle.

TORONTO GENERAL TRUSTS

Remarkable Shewing of the Company's Business for the Finance Al Year

We heartily congratulate Mr. J. W. Langmuir, the Managing Director, and the Board of Directors of the Toronto General Trusts Corporation on the result of the year's operations. The report is a splendid one, and shows that this great financial concern has a secure foothold in the confidence and regard of the people. Dr. Hoskin, the President, in moving the adoption of the report, took occasion to remark that the origin of the Trusts Corporation was due to Mr. Langmuir, the Managing Director, who twenty years ago held an important public position in the Government of Ontario, and experiencing in the discharge of his official business, the great necessity for having a corporation to act as executor, administrator, and trustee, instead of individuals, forthwith resigned his position and formed this, the pioneer Trust Company of Canada. The phenomenal growth and development of the corporation since its organization in 1882 fully corroborated Mr. Langmuir's conclusion. The report just presented shows that during the 20 years of its existence, no less than $32,000,000 worth of estates and positions of trust have come under the management of the corporation, and after distributing and closing out over $10,000,000 there is still left in its control at the 31st of December, 1901, over $21,000,000. The varied character and extent of the work of the corporation causes wonder how the community, and more particularly the legal profession, got along without Trust Companies, but evidently the education of the public by the Trusts Corporation during the past twenty years has had great effect, as there are now seven or eight in the Province of Ontario. There can be no reasonable doubt that the administration and management of estates by a corporation, where its affairs are closely looked after by experts, and under a careful system of checks and audits, is altogether better than by individuals. It is reasonable to suppose therefore, that the corporation will continue to prosper as it has in the past.

The financial statement of the corporation should be satisfactory to the shareholders, for out of the profits they have paid dividends amounting to nearly $75,000, have written off their building and fixtures over $16,000, and have placed $20,000 to the rest.

At the close of the meeting a very interesting ceremony took place in the presentation by Messrs. Hendrie and Jaffray, on behalf of the shareholders, of portraits in oil, to be placed in the Board Room, of Dr. Hoskin, the President, and Mr. J. W. Langmuir, the Managing Director of the corporation. The portraits were painted by Mr. J. W. L. Forster, and are in his best style. The labors of Mr. A. D. Langmuir, who is assistant to his father in the management, are also very much appreciated, not only by the directors, but by all who have dealings with the corporation.

A Sick Stomach

is always relieved and its unpleasant consequences averted by taking 30 drops of Polson's Nerviline in a little sweetened water. THE CHURCHES OF ROME

Illustrated Lecture by Rev. Dr. O'Brien at the T. A. S. Hall

The new assembly hall of the St Peter's Total Abstinence Society was closely packed last night for the illustrated lecture by Rev. Dr. O'Brien descriptive of the churches of Rome. The lantern was well handled by Mr. R. M. Roy. Mr. Fred Deruche, the popular chairman, announced the opening of the programme with a few well chosen words.

The programme previous to the lecture consisted of a well rendered vocal duet by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hall, a vocal solo by Miss Annie Simons and a charming recitation encored by little Carrie White.

At 8.30 the lecture was commenced, and after a number of pictures of the present pontiff, Leo XIII, Bishop O'Connor of Peterborough, the local cathedral, etc., a lengthy and decidedly interesting description of the most famous of the churches and chapels of the Italian capital was given. There were included many beautiful views of St. Peter's Cathedral, both interior and exterior, and towards the latter part of the lecture several photos of the ancient colloseum, and colored plates of scenes in that place taken from paintings.

During an intermission of a few minutes a comic song was given by Mr. Joseph Bayette and an encore responded to.

At the close of the lecture Rev. Father McColl, rector of the cathedral, spoke for a few minutes in a complimentary manner of the entertainment and of the general progress of the society in the work which it had undertaken. In conclusion the chairman announced the performance in a fortnight's time, of the play "Kathleen Mavourneen," to be given in Bradburn's Opera House under the auspices of the society. The audience dispersed with the singing of God Save the King.

A Favorite and Popular Work in Canadian Homes

The introduction of the popular Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns has done much for the adorning and beautifying of the homes of Canada. Our women and girls find time to make up pretty door mats and elegant floor rugs that compare favorably with imported goods at fancy prices.

The Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns are easily and quickly made up. The full and complete pattern on heavy Scotch Hessian is richly colored and ready for hooking. If you are a stranger to this work and have not yet seen this season's new designs, send your full address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Ltd., 200 Mountain st., Montreal, P.Q., and they will mail you free of cost sheets of designs with various sizes and prices.

A GROWING ORGANIZATION

A Large Meeting of the Labor Union Last Night.—Two Officials Present

Mr. J. A. Flett, of Hamilton, an organiser of the American Federation of Labor, and Mr. R. Glocking, Secretary of the Labor Bureau Branch of the Provincial Public Works Department were in town yesterday, and addressed a very large meeting of the Labor Union in the Foresters Hall, Simcoe street, last night. A number of matters of importance to the Union were discussed, and some attention given to the recent strikes at the Cereal works.

Mr. Flett will endeavor to organize the labor men of Lakefield during his stay here.

FRESH PEACE RUMORS NOW AFLOAT IN LONDON

Britain Said to be Willing to Grant General Amnesty to the Fighting Burghers

A RUMOR THAT LORD KITCHENER WILL RETURN.

There is Probably Some Reason for Believing That the War is About Over—It is Said That the Concessions are Generous

London, March 4.—The Post says: Those who wish well to the Boers have hoped that terms might be offered them less unacceptable than the demand for unconditional surrender. There is some reason to believe that the hope may be gratified, if we can trust the report that Lord Kitchener has been recalled and will leave Cape Town early in April. It is scarcely credible that so capable a commander would be withdrawn against his will from a scene of active operation, and he cannot want to leave South Africa unless he has ground for thinking that the war is practically at an end. Such a conclusion can only be based on the knowledge that conciliatory overtures have been made, and that they are likely to be accepted.

The rumor of Lord Kitchener's speedy return, coupled with the natural desire of King Edward VII, to see his coronation preceded by the attainment of peace, lends color to another report, also current in London, that, after the rejection of the Dutch offer of mediation, Lord Kitchener was instructed to enter into communication with Gen. Botha, with a view to the arrangement of a peace on the lines suggested by Lord Rosebery. That is to say, while the Boer demand for independence, is of course, rejected, and England insists that the South African Republic and the Orange Free State shall be transformed into a single crown colony, concessions which under the circumstances may be described as liberal, are proposed to the Boer commanders in the field. It is said to be promised, for instance, that in the appointive council of the new crown colony, Boers shall figure as well as Englishmen, and, although the latter will at first preponderate, the former will, ultimately, have an equal number of seats. It is further stipulated, we are told, that, when the country shall have become definitely pacified, it shall pass from the status of a crown colony to that of a self-governing Commonwealth, like Natal.

Touching other points, also the concessions are alleged to be generous. Thus from the amnesty to be granted to all Boer combatants are to be excluded only a few men who are accused of murdering prisoners and natives. We assume that the citizens of Cape Colony are no longer to be excepted from the beneficiaries of amnesty, for if they are, the negotiations will come to naught. Of the Boers already exiled, we are assured that all will be brought back to South Africa, an assurance that seems to cover the return, not only of Gen. Cronje from St. Helena, but also of President Kruger and of the Boer delegates who have been representing their countrymen in Europe. If no conspicuous politician or General has been barred out, the British negotiations will have avoided the mistake made during our Revolutionary War, when such men as Hancock and Samuel Adams were blacklisted. In one particular the offer said to have been made to Gen. Botha goes further than any other overture of the like in history, by promising a grant of money for the rebuilding of Boer farms. Under all the circumstances, antecedent and existent, the best terms which the British Government is likely to offer are those which we have just outlined, and, perhaps, these would not have been suggested but for King Edward's exemplary wish that the war may be ended before he is crowned.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY ASKS FOR $600

Otonabee Power Co's. By-Law Referred Back to Committee—$25 Granted to All Volunteers for South Africa

The Town Council met in regular session last night, when there were present Mayor T. H. G. Denne, and Aldermen Edgcumbe, Shortly, Roger, Rush, McGregor, Morrison, Clinkscale, Hatten, Corkery and Best.

GRANT FOR PARKS.

Messrs. D. W. Dumble and Adam Hall addressed the Council in behalf of the Horticultural Society. Mr. Hall, President of the Association, explained that the grant of $500 last year had not been sufficient to meet all liabilities; the society had come out $90 in debt. This was due in a measure to the requirements of the Central Park, which the Society had undertaken to beautify. This year they intend extending the water mains throughout the whole of this park, and in order to do justice to both the Central and Victoria Parks, the annual grant will have to be increased to $600. Mr. Hall also drew attention to the fact that while last year considerable damage was done in the Victoria Park by heedless or malicious persons, under the act the society's officers were powerless to take action in the matter. He suggested that two park commissioners be appointed by council; these men would have the power to prosecute any one destroying park property.

Mr. D. W. Dumble endorsed the previous speaker's remarks, and said that as the Central Park was materially a gravel bed, a plentiful supply of water is absolutely necessary to insure the growth of the trees already planted there at considerable expense. He did not think the ratepayers would object to a liberal provision for beautifying the town, and hoped the council would increase the grant this year to $600.

The Mayor replied that the council would consider it a pleasure to give as substantial a grant as possible, and when the estimates are being struck, this matter will not be overlooked.

At this juncture Mr. D. W. Dumble remarked that if the town had followed the example set by many places in providing public squares as play grounds for the little folk, a good deal of the destruction in the parks complained of would be avoided. Peterborough has never expended a dollar in this way, and consequently children have no place which they are at liberty to use as a public play ground. He urged that some steps be taken in this direction before the growth of the town precludes the possibility of securing central locations for such purposes.

Ald. Shortly moved, seconded by Ald. McGregor,—That the question of appointing Park Commissioners be referred to the Town Solicitor to report at the next meeting of the council.—Carried.

OTONABEE POWER CO.

A by-law confirming the agreement with the Otonabee Power Co. for the transmission of power through the town, was introduced by Ald. Best, and in its second reading was, on motion of Ald. Roger, seconded by Ald. Morrison, referred back to the Property Committee for further consideration.

Ald. Morrison questioned whether carrying the power cable across the top of Hunter street bridge in brackets was altogether a safe proceeding. He thought there would be a possibility, under certain conditions, of an induction of electricity from the cable to the iron of the bridge. He did not know that the town was properly secured by this by-law from liability in case of possible accidents in this respect.

Ald. Edgcumbe replied that Mr. Meldrum claimed that there would be no more danger from this system than from the light and power wires which crossed the centre of the bridge. Should a wire break, the engineer at the power house would immediately know it, and would at once shut off the power.

The Mayor—"And in the meantime a dozen deaths might occur."

Ald. Roger thought the cable should be either strung at the side of the bridge, or beneath it, so that should a wire break, its live ends would drop into the river.

This matter had been pretty thoroughly discussed in committee, at which most of the Aldermen were present, and the proposed method of stringing the cable across the bridge acquiesced in. However council did not seem sure of its position last night, and the by-law went back to committee.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Auditors Hall and Clark reported that an examination of the books and accounts of the town for 1901 showed the work of the several departments to have been carefully and correctly done.—Finance Committee.

Relief Officer Miller applied for an increase of salary.—Referred to Finance Committee.

Geo. Emmerson, Wm. Corbett and Mrs. Wm. Norris applied for remission of dog tax.—Referred to Court of Revision.

The Salvation Army's application for a grant of $100 towards the purchase of new band instruments.—Referred to the Finance Committee.

W. L. Taylor complained of being wrongfully assessed for stock in store 342 Water street, he having retired from business at the time assessment was made.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From Jas. McWilliams, stating that his place on Edinborough street is flooded with water as a result of the drain at the railroad not being large enough, and ask the council to do something to have this remedied.—Referred to Board of Works.

From Chief Rossel, stating that Mr Noble had been called in to fix the water closet in the police station, and found the old closet worn out, and recommended a new closet to be put in.—Referred to Property Committee, with power to act.

From E. H. D. Hall, Town Solicitor, stating that he had been served with a writ of foreclosure of a mortgage, by Messrs. Dennistoun, Peck & Stevenson, on behalf of a client named Lynch. There being a roadway marked on the plan which the town has never used, the mortgagee asks that the roadway be closed, and that the land revert to him.—Referred to Legal Committee.

From E. H. D. Hall, stating that the Town's Bill had passed the Legislature in the form enclosed.—Referred to Legal Committee.

From the Otonabee Power Co., applying for permission to put their poles on the east side of Stewart st., from King to Dalhousie, there to use the Auburn Power Co's. poles on the east side of Stewart to Townsend st., there to erect poles on the east side of Stewart st., from Townsend street, to Perry street, and there to put their poles on the north side of Perry st. from Stewart to Aylmer, thence to the Cordage Co. The above line to be used in lieu of the line from King st. to the Cordage Co. on Aylmer street, which we have now the right to use under the agreement with the town. They asked that the agreement may be altered accordingly, and to further place one pole line on the north side of Perry st., from the Cordage Co. to McDonald's Mills, this being preferable to the use of Rink street.—Received.

From Davis, Thompson & Co., enclosing sample copy of the policy issued by the Ontario Accident Insurance Co., which covers injuries sustained by employees and the public generally. The cost to the town for a policy would be about $700.00.—Referred to Finance Committee.

From Joseph Pope, Under-Secretary of State, acknowledging receipt of petition from the Mayor of Peterborough to his Excellency, the Governor-General, with regard to the rates of the Bell Telephone Co., of Canada, and stating that the same should receive consideration.—Received.

From A. Stevenson, Secretary of the Trent Water Conservation Association, stating that an interview had been arranged to take place on March 5th with Hon. A. G. Blair, and asking council to appoint a deputation.—Referred to Manufacturers' Committee.

From R. H. Fortye, stating that he had been assessed here for statute labor tax when he was a resident of Collingwood.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From A. E. Runnels, enclosing affidavit to the effect that during the year 1901 he did not own a dog, and asking remittance of dog tax.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From the Peterborough Federal Union, No. 9240, giving rates that will be asked for by the labor union for laborers and teamsters in the town after April 1st.—Referred to Board of Works.

From Angus MacMurchy, Solicitor for the C. P. R., enclosing deed in duplicate from Town to Company for right of way across Island No. 1, in the Otonabee River, and asking the Mayor and clerk to sign and seal the document.—Referred to Legal Committee.

From the London Guarantee and Accident Co., recommending the council to discontinue the practice of private security from municipal officers and offering to give a guarantee bond at the usual rate.—Referred to Finance Committee

From Hon. J. R. Stratton, acknowledging receipt of memorial from the town, relating to the Toronto Bill now before the House, authorizing that city to purchase and dispose of electric energy, and if passed will be made to apply to all municipalities.—Received.

From S. R. Armstrong, secretary of the Water Commissioners, stating that the Commissioners would like to meet the council to arrange the rates to be paid by the town for water for the present year. The council were asked to name a date as early as possible.—Referred to the Fire, Water & Light Committee.

From John Montgomery and Walter Parnell, asking that they be paid at the rate of $1.50 per day for each day they are on duty at the fire hall.—Referred to Fire, Water & Light Committee.

From S. R. Armstrong, secretary of the Water Commissioners, stating that the commissioners recommend that the council purchase a map prepared by Mr. Innes, for the use of the town and Commissioners.—Referred to the Finance Committee.

From Pete Simons and Edward J. Ferguson, enclosing affidavits to the effect that they did not own dogs in 1901, and asking remission of dog tax.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From D. W. Dumble, stating that he is not allowed by the Criminal Code to send persons to jail as vagrants who have been residents of the municipality for 2 years, and asking the town to make some provision for a House of Refuge for such persons.—Referred to joint Committee.

From the Canadian Manufacturers Association, stating that a two-thirds vote on by-laws for exemptions was too much to ask, and asking the town to assist in having the law changed.—Received.

From the T. E. Bradburn estate stating that at the time of the China Hall fire they lost six months revenue as a result of the fire, and asking the council to refund to the executors

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 4, 1902

NOTE AND COMMENT.

Brockville has been just one year the owner of its lighting plant. After paying all running expenses, interest and sinking fund for the current year it is just $5,000 ahead and has to enlarge the plant to meet the growing demand for light. Municipal ownership of other necessities besides water pays.

• • • • • •

An ordinance of the Council of Louisville, Ky., has been prepared providing that ministers of all denominations shall pay a quarterly license of $50 and that the attorney of the sinking fund shall garnishee their salaries in the event of non-payment. The ordinance provides that the ministers and bishops of the Protestant churches, and the priests and bishops of the Catholic Church and the rabbis of the Jewish synagogues be required to pay a license for the reason that of late they have been trying to butt into politics and attempting by advancing unwise theories to take a hand in the conduct of municipal affairs.

• • • • • •

A memorial is to be presented by seventy municipalities, including most of the principal cities of Canada, asking parliament to pass no further legislation infringing the control of streets vested in municipalities and asking that retroactive legislation be introduced. The Bell Telephone Company, though its franchise will expire next year, still claims the right to use the streets of the cities and towns indefinitely.

The suggestion has been made that amendments should be made to the Medical Health Act, to secure, among other things, a better inspection of country hotels. In this one particular alone there is work for a good official in every county. Numbers of travellers suffer in health, and not infrequently lose their lives, by reason of the unsanitary condition of the places at which they must stop. It is not sufficient to leave to the License Department the inspection of public houses. Men are licensed to conduct hotels for the entertainment of man and beast, and are supposed to provide adequate accommodation. At the present time adequate accommodation does consist of a room and a bed and a fairly good meal. In our homes we demand the observance of sanitary laws. The municipality demands of the individual householder that his drains shall be properly constructed and kept in condition. If the sanitary laws are enforced with the householder of the city, is it too much to expect that there should be an equally rigid enforcement of similar laws in the public hotels.

Those "national scouts" who captured 154 Boers the other day are largely composed of Boers who have enlisted in the British service. It will have been noticed that several of the most important captures made this year have been credited to these "national scouts" and their own casualties are usually nil or a few wounded. Send a Boer to catch a Boer.

One of Napoleon's Boasts.

We who know the last as well as the first of Napoleon, who have read about Moscow, Leipzig, Elba, Waterloo and St. Helena as studiously as about the campaigns in Italy, and Marengo, Jena and Austerlitz, cannot fully comprehend with what reverence some of his apophthegms were received by the French when he was still unbeaten and apparently unbeatable. One of his boasts was that he was not governed by circumstances; that he made circumstances and was superior to them. When someone hinted that destiny might compass his defeat he replied that destiny would not dare. Even Victor Hugo, half a century after Waterloo, was blinded by the light of Napoleon's genius, and treated him as a Titan, fit to contend, though vainly, with high heaven. It was not Wellington, not Blucher who defeated Napoleon, says Hugo in his beautiful rhapsody on Waterloo; it was God. Napoleon, he declares, with blasphemous brilliancy, embarrassed God. "Waterloo was a change of front on the part of the universe"—the quotation is from memory—"in the new series of facts there was no room for Napoleon. Therefore a second-class commander won a first-class battle."

A good many believe with Napoleon that genius rises above circumstances. Napoleon's boastful epigram has been declared a rule of faith by successful men, who scout the idea of village Hampdens and mute, inglorious Miltons. But the epigram is nothing but a boast. It is not true. We are held fast in the vise of circumstances and are not completely masters of our fate. Luck enters into every game, even the game of life. No man can arrange the cards in the game with destiny, for destiny always deals. It may rain some day when the best laid plans call for sunshine, and the plans may be pulverized. At Austerlitz, which was fought at dawn, Napoleon said: "We have a rendezvous with the sun and both parties are on time." The Sun of Austerlitz became a superstition in the Grand Army.

But at Waterloo there was another rendezvous with the sun and the sun was tardy. Waterloo is the convincing answer to Napoleon's boast and to the precept that great men are superior to circumstances. Hugo points out that accidents defeated Napoleon. His plan, as experts admit, was a masterpiece. But he reckoned without luck. The battle was to have commenced at dawn, but rain fell the previous night, and the ground became too muddy for the manoeuvres of artillery. Napoleon therefore delayed the assault nearly six hours, until the ground became firmer. That delay gave Blucher time to come up when he was needed and to turn the tide of the fray. The rainfall defeated Napoleon and drove him to St. Helena. A peasant guide led Blucher aright and he chanced to debouch on the field from the point and at the moment where and when he was supremely effective. Another peasant guide led Grouchy astray and he did not arrive. Had it not rained before the battle, had Blucher had a bad guide and Grouchy a good one, history might have been different. Napoleon was conquered by circumstances.—San Francisco "Bulletin."

A Damaging Defence.

Mark Twain, says "Life," has got support from an unexpected quarter in his efforts to demonstrate the impropriety of some things done by missionaries in China. In the "Forum" a missionary named Gilbert Reid has defended looting by missionaries with so much candor and jauntiness, and has so gloried in such looting as he did himself, as not to leave the critics of the looting missionaries much to do to prove their case. Anyone who was sorry for the American missionaries in China, because our Brother Mark found fault with some things that some of them did, will be doubly sorry for them when he reads their defence by the Rev. Gilbert Reid. They may have justly incurred Mark's strictures, but they never deserved the Rev. Reid's defence.

Annexing New Languages.

In the new editions of the dictionaries many thousands of new words are announced. The English-speaking nations are the growing nations, commerce an exchange, and the English language is the expanding language; it is annexing everything useful from every other language of the world. The difference between the comparatively modest volume which Noah Webster got out and the ponderous unabridged work of to-day, representing the toil and the knowledge and the research of hundreds of the ablest scholars of the world, shows the marvelous development. One interesting feature of this expansion is the gradual elimination of italicizing. Not many years ago it was the custom to put any word that had a foreign look about it in italics; now we use this as our own as coolly as we vote a naturalized immigrant in a close primary. The effect is rather curious. It has discouraged the use of foreign phrases, and the ambitious one who wants to display his smattering of French in an English article finds his importations supplanted by home products. The editor makes the change, unless there are special reasons why it should not be done. The gain to the average reader, who dislikes to stumble against such affectation without knowing what the strange words mean, is great. So marked, indeed, has been this change that the typesetting machines, by which the newspapers of the world are now set up, have no italic letters, except where they are especially required.

A cheap-Jack butcher brought his cart to a standstill in Petticoat Lane. A miserable old woman eyed closely the heap of bones and gristle which was referred to by the butcher as joints and steaks. She was evidently very poor indeed, as she hesitated to pay threepence for a scaleful of "selected bits." "'Ere, 'ave 'em for tuppence," growled the butcher. "Too much," said the woman. "'Ave 'em at a penny." Still the woman hesitated. There was a look of pity, mixed with disgust, on his face as he yelled: "Still too much? 'Ere, 'ang it! I'll turn me back while you sneak 'em!"—London "Spare Moments."

SUCH A CHANGE.

Not only in feelings but in looks. The skin is clear, the eyes are bright, the cheeks are plump. No more pain and misery, no more sick headache, no more jaundice. What worked the change? Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which cured the disease of the stomach that prevented proper nutrition, and also cleansed the clogged and sluggish liver.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures diseases of lungs, heart, liver, and other organs which seem remote from the stomach because many of these diseases have their cause in a diseased condition of the stomach involving the allied organs of digestion and nutrition.

"I sent you a letter about a year ago," writes Mrs. J. Ellis Hamilton, of Farmington, Marion Co., West Va. "I stated my case as plainly as I could, and received a letter from you in a few days, telling me to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Favorite Prescription'—a bottle of each. I used three of each, and feel like a new woman. Don't suffer any pain or misery any more. Before using your medicines I suffered all the time—had jaundice, caused from food not digesting properly. I would have sick headache three and four times in a week. Could not do the work myself. I commenced using your medicines as recommended for liver complaint, and think I am cured now. I asked our doctor if he couldn't cure me, and he said he could give me medicine to help me but the trouble might return any time. I doctored three years without any relief. Haven't had sick headache since I took the first bottle of your medicine."

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

Anecdotal.

In an after-dinner speech at the London Savage Club recently on the purity of the English tongue, Winston Churchill remarked: "I have written five books, the same number as Moses—but I will not press the comparison."

Charles II. once granted an audience to the courtly Quaker, William Penn, who, as was his custom, entered the royal presence with his hat on. The humorous sovereign quietly laid aside his own, which occasioned Penn's enquiry: "Friend Charles, why dost thou remove thy hat?" "It is the custom," he replied, "in this place for one person only to remain covered."

Eben Jones, the crabbed millionaire lumberman of Minnesota, hired all his mill-hands himself. One day a Swede applied to the irritable old man, and secured a place on the saws. As he was leaving he said: "Mester Yones, in dees yob you geef me doaller and hallef a day. Besides dat, do you eat me or do I eat myself?" "Oh, eat yourself!" replied the old man. "I have dyspepsia."

Phil May, the noted English cartoonist, went into an oyster saloon in the East End of London one day and ordered a dozen natives, when another man entered and gave a similar order, enquiring anxiously of the proprietor if the oysters were fresh. "Fresh!" echoed the bivalve merchant. "Fresh! Why"—indicating Mr. May with a wave of his hand—"the first oyster that gentleman took up bit his lip!"

An Irishman who was charged with stealing a watch from a fellow-citizen, stoutly denied the impeachment in court, and brought a counter accusation against his accuser for assault and battery committed with a frying-pan. "Why did you allow the prosecutor, who is a smaller man than yourself, to assault you without resistance?" asked the judge; "had you nothing in your hand to defend yourself with?" "Bedad, your honor," said Pat, "I had his watch, but what was that against a frying-pan?"

The "Scotsman" tells of a Dublin man who insisted that a Scotch friend should stay at his house instead of a hotel, and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to all places of amusement, paying all the cab fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning to Dunedin, the Irishman saw him down to the steamer, and they went together to have a last cigar. "Now, look here," said the man from Dunedin, "I'll hae nae mair o' this. Here ye've been keepin' me at your house for a month, an' payin' for a' the amusements and cabs and so on—I tell you I'll stan' nae mair o' it! We'll just hae a toss for this one!"

One of the eccentricities of that most penurious of pedagogues, Dr. Barrett, was that he hardly ever appeared outside the walls of Trinity College, conducting his modest menage there with the help of a decrepit old housekeeper, who attended to all his wants, even to daily fetching from a nearby dairy the half-pennyworth of milk needed in the establishment. When one frosty morning, Mary, going on this errand, slipped and broke her leg, the worthy doctor for the first time in years left the college to pay her a visit in the hospital. On reaching her cot, it is related that his sympathetic greeting was: "Hello, Mary; so you broke your leg; I suppose you broke the jug, too, but where is the half-penny?"

Mr. Justice Mathew of England is a man of such mild and kindly exterior, with such gentle voice and manner, that almost invariably he gives the impression of being a simple country gentleman rather than a profound lawyer. This was evidently the idea of a professional seller of painted birds, who some years ago met him in the neighborhood of the law courts, and, exhibiting one of his birds, asked him if he could tell to what species it belonged. The judge stopped, examined the bird with great care, pretended to admire the gaudy plumage, examined it again, and then remarked: "I do not think I have ever seen a bird exactly like this, but, judging from the old proverb that 'Birds of a feather flock together,' I should say it was a jailbird."

Far Reaching Influence.

"OLD-FASHIONED Indian stories, the dime novels of years back which were within the reach of all the boys, were an important factor in building up the great West," said a typical Westerner. "These novels used to circulate in a neighborhood till they had been read by every boy and had fallen to pieces through handling. They fired the ambition of the youngsters, set them to practising shooting and riding, and sent many of them to the West in search of adventures. Some soon returned to their homes, others became bad men and were killed in time, but the great mass of them, too proud to return home, created the vigorous, wideawake population of our Western States. I have talked to hundreds of our Western pioneers about the causes which brought them west, and a majority of them admit that dime novels had more to do with it than anything else."

A Heretic.

"The man is a driveling idiot," said the trust magnate.

"A plumb fool," agreed the coal baron.

"An unmitigated lunatic," assented the steel king.

"Crazy as a March hare," asseverated the great financier.

"A hopeless imbecile," asserted the power in Wall street.

"Absolutely and utterly devoid of sense," chimed in the senator.

"As brainless as a barrel," added the corporation lawyer.

"But what has he done?" asked the ordinary citizen.

The crowd was convulsed with laughter.

"Why, he says," they replied, choking and gurgling, "he actually says that money isn't everything!"—Smart Set.

The Shortcomings of Breadth.

WHEN I was a schoolgirl, with many definite opinions, I remember having a talk with a man of thirty, who happened to advance a theory—I forget about what—which aroused in me ardent dissent. I eagerly presented my view, which was the exact reverse of his, and paused for him to defend himself. He gave me a friendly look; then leaned back and gazed out of the window, with the remark, "Well, there's something in that, too."

I felt as if the bottom had dropped out of the room. For, I thought, if one really hold an opinion, how can he say there is "something in" the contrary view? But since then I have not only had many such experiences; I have myself become an offender. And I wonder if it is altogether a gain. It may be sheer contrariness, but I do get a little tired, sometimes, of broad-mindedness and tolerance, and long for good, bigoted narrowness that can be counted on. I should really like to be told: "No, you're totally wrong; what you have just said is false absolutely. The facts of the case are these, and if you don't believe it, so much the worse for you." How I should enjoy that! But I have not had the experience since my brothers grew up. Occasionally, in desperation, I have assumed the part myself, and taken my stand on positive assertion of a single half truth; but it does no good. I simply live over that early experience; again I am told, "There's something in that, too," and it gives me the feeling, to quote a figure used by a friend in another connection, of having come up against a soft curtain where I expected a wall.

"A plain categorical proposition," says Mr. Morley, "is becoming less and less credible to average minds. Or at least the slovenly willingness to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time is becoming more and more common." I do not think it is quite this. Men surely used to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time with the utmost ease. The point is that they did not know they were contradictory, whereas we do; and still we hold them—or rather, entertain them, as one would interesting guests. Our attitude toward every opinion we meet might be expressed thus: "Well, there's something in that, too. Come right in!" And the new opinion comes in, and draws a chair up to the hospitable fire, and finds a friendly circle of other opinions there; they shake hands all round, and each tells the others what good fellows they are.

This is amiable, but, in honesty, I don't like it. It is like the congress of religions, which I have never been able to understand, save on the assumption that each secretly hopes to convert the others by taking them off their guard, or that no one is in earnest about his religion except as regards its common moral basis. The old attitude used to be, "You think differently from me; therefore you're wrong, therefore you're bad, therefore I'll kill you." One by one these clauses have been dropped, beginning with the last one; thus reversing the system of "the House that Jack Built." First we stopped killing the other man, then we stopped thinking he was bad, and now we have nearly stopped thinking he is wrong. May this not be carried too far?—From the "Contributors' Club."

Defeated the Bicyclist.

"GO and hitch up the ostrich," is not at all an absurd command on an ostrich farm. There these great birds are often harnessed to a carriage, and make fairly good substitutes for horses. Although they cannot draw a heavy load, their speed is a recommendation.

At Jacksonville, Florida, there is a bird named Oliver W. that can run a mile in two minutes and twenty-two seconds. His owners claim that he is more satisfactory than a horse because he eats less, never shies at anything, never runs away, and goes steadily at a good pace without laziness or fatigue.

This particular ostrich appears to like his work. When the little carriage is brought out he comes running toward it at full speed, with both wings spread out, ready to have the harness put on.

On one occasion a cyclist tried to pass Oliver W. on a long, smooth stretch of road. He came up behind the carriage, thinking to get ahead and escape the dust. Oliver W. thought differently. He threw his head high in the air, gave a flap with his wings, and went forward with a speed that astonished the cyclist. Putting forth more effort, the latter made another attempt to pass the ostrich, but the faster the pedals of the bicycle moved the faster sped the long legs of the bird.

It so happened that the cyclist had a record as a fast rider, and to be distanced by an ostrich was not to his liking. For two miles he tried to pass his feathered rival, but was then obliged to give up the race, defeated.

Some fast horses have tried conclusions with Oliver W., who seems to like nothing better than testing their speed, starting slowly to make them think it easy to distance him, and then gradually increasing his pace.

Modest Fees.

LAWYERS do not usually get the small end of a bargain with their clients, but the "Green Bag" recalls two incidents where the clients had rather the best of it.

Sir Walter Scott's first client was a burglar. He got the fellow off, but the man declared that he hadn't a penny to give him for his services. Two bits of useful information he offered, however, and with these the young lawyer had to be content. The first was that a yelping terrier inside the house was a better protection against thieves than a big dog outside; and the second, that no sort of lock bothered his craft so much as an old rusty one.

Small compensation as this was, the first brief of the noted French lawyer, Monsieur Rouher, yielded still less. The peasant for whom Monsieur Rouher won the case asked how much he owed him.

"Oh, say two francs," said the modest young advocate.

"Two francs!" exclaimed the peasant. "That is very high. Won't you let me off with a franc and a half?"

"No," said the counsel; "two francs or nothing."

"Well, then," said his client, "I'd rather pay nothing."

And with a bow he left.

PROBABLY no human invention has aided the course of justice to a greater extent, says London "Tit-Bits," than the snapshot camera. It has been instrumental in condemning criminals, and has also been the means before now of saving innocent lives.

A case in point is that of Alfred Grayson, an Englishman who was living a few years ago at Rio de Janeiro. He was accused of the murder of a Brazilian named Linares, a clerk in the same office with himself. The two were known to have quarreled some days previous to the Sunday on which Linares met his death. Apparently, however, they had made up their difference, for they went out sailing that day on a small yacht which Grayson had hired.

In the evening Grayson brought the dead body of Linares home. His story was that the latter had fallen from the mast and fractured his skull. But medical evidence was of opinion the wound on the head had been made with a stick or oar. An oar was missing from the yacht's dingey. The mast-climbing story, too, sounded improbable, for the rigging was all worked from deck. Taking the recent quarrel into consideration, and Grayson's well-known violent temper, the case was black, indeed, against the Englishman. The coroner's jury had already found him guilty of murder, when a passenger on a Marseilles steamer, which had arrived in Rio on the Sunday afternoon, came forward with a new piece of evidence.

This was a snap-shot photograph taken as the vessel entered the harbor. Far away, under the cliffs, a tiny vessel was sailing, and against the white sail was a dark mark, which a powerful magnifier proved to be a falling man. By an almost miraculous coincidence the camera had been snapped just as Linares fell. The photograph turned the scale in Grayson's favor.

Almost equally curious is the way in which a photograph aided justice in the Cooper murder case. Cooper was assistant to a young blacksmith named McKenna in a Lanarkshire village. Both men were known to be fond of the same girl. One day Cooper was found dead on the floor of the smithy. He had been poisoned with carbolic acid. McKenna was suspected, but there was no proof whatever of his having ever bought or owned any carbolic acid, while Cooper was known to have purchased, as a toothache remedy, the phial found beside his dead body. "Death from misadventure" was the verdict.

Shortly afterwards McKenna was arrested. It appeared that an English tourist provided with a kodak had passed through the village on the very morning of the murder. Attracted by the quaintness of the old forge, he had taken several snap-shots of it. The photographer went on to stay in an out-of-the-way part of the Highlands, and did not hear of Cooper's death for some days. Then he hastened to develop his plates. Plain in one of the pictures were three bottles on a shelf. Two were beer bottles, the third was unmistakably one of those fluted blue glass bottles in which poisons are sold. It had also a label on it, and though the wording on this could not be read, yet on the strength of this evidence the police made a thorough search of McKenna's premises. They found the remains of the bottle in question in an old well, and proved that it had contained carbolic acid. Then McKenna confessed his guilt.

The more recent developments of scientific photography must make the criminal feel less secure than he used to. One of those thieves who make a living by van-robbing got an unpleasant shock one day in March last. He had safely got off with a tub of butter which he had stolen from the tail of a wagon as it was crossing a bridge in Rochester, N.Y. The deadly witness against him was a photograph taken by telephotography from the top of a neighboring high building.

A biograph picture of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge over the Niagara Gorge was recently taken, and, when developed, thrown upon the canvas at a music hall at Toronto. It was then noticed for the first time by the audience that a human body was tossing and spinning in the whirling waters. Search was at once made, and the body of a missing and much-advertised suicide was discovered, still caught in the furious suction of the whirlpool.

Hindu criminals succeed by long practice in forming a little bag in their throats into which they can guide jewels when they steal them. Last September a native was arrested for stealing a diamond worth 10,000 rupees from a jeweler's window in Calcutta. But as the evidence was only circumstantial, and possession unproved, he would have been liberated had it not occurred to the police to have an X-ray photograph taken of his throat. That showed the gem safely hidden in the little sac. The thief was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, but he still refuses to give up the diamond.

The Roentgen-ray photography has also been instrumental in adding several thousand pounds to the customs revenue of Buenos Ayres within the last year. Valuable jewelry on which no duty was being paid was known to be coming into the country in letters. It is, however, illegal to open letters or stamped packages, so the law-breakers were unchecked. At last, in June, 1900, several registered letters and packages were examined under X-rays in the presence of the Argentine Postmaster-General. Sixty-six suspected packages contained £4,000 worth of jewelry, and were, of course, all confiscated.

What She Said.

It wasn't a smoking compartment, but they were using it for that purpose all the same, and she was too modest to object. By and by the two men got into a discussion over the woman question, and at last one of them, an unregenerate bachelor, appealed to the lady thus:

"Do you think there will be men in heaven, miss?"

She blushed.

"No!" she said. "They will want to go somewhere where they can smoke."

The discussion stopped; so did the smoking.

A Day's Fishing.

THE fishing season having now positively begun, I think I will go down to the deep waters and try my luck. The great mistake made by so many fishermen is that they are lacking in the necessary patience for success in their hobby. Very often, after a man has sat for two or three days waiting in vain for a bite, he begins to feel the monotony a little tiring, and wants to throw up the whole enterprise. The enthusiastic angler, however, never allows himself to grow weary. He will wait three weeks for a bite, and when the exciting moment comes, he wrenches his prize out of the water and feels that he has not lived in vain. When you have once cast your bread (or whatever you are using for bait) upon the waters, you should be prepared to stand by and see the thing through if it takes all summer.

No angler expects to be landing fish all the time. As a matter of fact, the biggest fish are never completely landed at all. If you have ordinary luck you will land a few average-sized wrigglers, but you can't very well make them any bigger than they are, and your friends can size up their dimensions at a glance; whereas the fish that you hooked out of the water, but couldn't manage to finally land, grows every time you talk about it. This fish is well known to expert anglers. Its dimensions are only limited by the powers of imagination possessed by the operator. Most anglers will let it go with a weight of about twenty to thirty pounds avoirdupois; and the man who insists upon anything bigger than that must choose his audience very carefully in these knowing times. I have no sympathy with the man who hooks a fish that tries to wrestle him on to his back as it flies out of the water, or that aims crushing blows at his head with its off-side fin. And when that kind of man tells you that he fought three rounds with his prize in the endeavor to down it so that he could bring it away with him, you should not trust yourself to a comment on the narrative. That kind of man is wasting his talents on a modest job like angling. He ought to have been a political journalist.

When you have cast your line, you should sit by quietly and wait for the results. That delightful old prig, Isaak Walton, laid it down as a rule that anglers should avoid swearing, lest they be heard and catch no fish. It is not very clear to me why a man who has settled down by the water's edge for a day's fishing should want to swear. I don't see, in any of the hand-books on the craft, any hints that swearing has ever been considered half as useful as a wriggling worm for fishing purposes. As far as I can see, a man might stand by a stream and profane steadily for several hours without getting any more bites in consequence. If a fish will not bite at a tempting hook, I should doubt very much whether it will do so because somebody on the bank is referring to its ancestry in disrespectful terms, and is casting rather red aspersions on its moral character. The injunction as to swearing appears quite unnecessary, but dear old Isaak couldn't help preaching a little in between the bites.

After waiting a little while and looking at your float, you will probably see it begin to bob up and down. This either means that something is biting at the hook, or else that an empty sardine tin has got mixed up with your line. You must let the bobbing go on till the float is dragged under water, and then you pull in with both hands, and land the upper portion of a dilapidated boot which someone has left in the stream by an oversight. Fishing is called "the contemplative man's recreation," chiefly, I believe, on account of the very weird things that the average angler is called upon to contemplate in the course of a day's skirmish with the wonders of the deep.

Many anglers, however, do not recommend the practice of sitting down and fixing the eye on the bobbing float. After you have thrown out your line, you open the lunch basket and take out the first bottle. Then you light a pipe and take a glance or so at your float to make sure that it isn't bobbing. By that time you will be ready for the second bottle. When the second bottle has been properly and truly dealt with, the float will bob a good deal oftener than might be expected; but you don't need to take notice of low conduct like that. If a gentleman can't sit down by the water's edge and take a little light refreshment without being guyed by a mere decorative quill, it's hard luck, that's all.

By the time you have got on to the fourth bottle, you will begin to realise what a thoroughly enjoyable sport this angling business is. You will begin to wonder at first what bounder has been and thrown his line alongside yours, as there are two floats to be distinctly seen. You need not, however, bother about that. After all, you didn't come down to the water for what you could catch; but for the jolly sport of thing. Well, there's the fifth bottle ready anyway, and it's thirsty work looking on and waiting for a bite.

Of course, there are anglers who can be carried away by the sport so much as to follow a float with their eyes for a whole day, with scarcely a drop in between. These men will wade through two feet of water, and carry the spare worms in their mouths on the chance of hooking a wriggler that has been hovering about playfully for an hour or two. But this is not the weather for enthusiasm of any kind; and the only thing that you will find to admire in these rabid anglers is that their perspiring activity makes you feel so thirsty that the rest of the bottles can be opened in their right order without waiting. Some anglers reel up their line at the close of the day's sport and take it back home. But after a dozen bottles or so of the best, you won't want to be bothered with any dim nonsense of that kind. Just kick the whole kit into the water, and call for help to enable you to get home again without any trouble. Angling is a grand sport if you know how to take it.—"Pick-Me-Up."

The Real Difficulty.

Appy Tite—If we only had some lines now, we might do a little fishin'.

Shady Bowers—Fishin', eh? Who's goin' ter dig de bait, bait de hooks, 'row in de lines, haul out de fish, and take 'em offen de hooks?

Appy Tite—Dat's so; we'd have to hire somebody to do dat part of it.—"Leslie's Weekly."

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best!"

"If a ship," began the comedian with the rose tinted beard, "is 100 feet long and 40 feet wide, and its masts are 100 feet high, and the [illegible] [illegible]

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Our New Book on Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

SORE FEET

If your feet are sore, tired and aching, Foot Elm can give you wonderful ease and comfort. Price, 25c, a box at all druggists, or sent by mail, postage free. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The Ashburnham School Board will meet to-night.

—Wheels have again taken the place of sleighs in town.

—A meeting of the Nicholls Hospital Trust was held yesterday afternoon.

—The regular meeting of the Board of Education will be held this evening.

—The regular meeting of the non-commissioned officers of the 57th regiment will be held in the drill shed to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock. All members are requested to be present.

—Considerable local matter is unavoidably held over until to-morrow for want of space.

—The price of eggs continues high in spite of the fact that the great Hennery of Germany is likely to visit Canada.

—No. 6 Company, of the 57th regiment, commenced their drill season by a parade last night. There was a very good attendance for the first night.

—The annual meeting of the Womens' Mission Circle of the Murray Street Baptist church, will be held this evening at eight o'clock.

—A large deputation from the Trent Water Conservation Association leave on the midnight express to-night to interview the Dominion Government. The town council sent a deputation.

—Mr. W. H. Andrews, who was nursing the small-pox patient at Jackson Park, has received a certificate from the Medical Health Officer that there is no danger of infection of smallpox from him.

—At the George Street Methodist Sunday School on Sunday last, Mr. Saffries in a neatly worded address moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. G. W. Mulligan and Prof. Gliddon for the excellent music provided for the anniversary services on the previous Sunday. Mr. Dixon seconded the motion, which was carried with much enthusiasm.

A Narrow Escape

One of our most esteemed citizens had a very narrow escape from instant death yesterday afternoon. Mr. Wm. Snowden, of the Snowden House, was down at the new flour mill, and while passing along the east side of the building, a plank fell from the upper storey and just missed Mr. Snowden by a hair-breadth. We are glad to say that under these trying circumstances Mr. Snowden behaved admirably—never so much as moving an eye winker. We congratulate our esteemed friend on his escape and are pleased to inform his many friends that he rested comfortably last night.

MACCABEES CONCERT

A Very Successful Entertainment Last Evening

The concert given last night by the members of the Peterborough Tent No. 60, Knights of Maccabees was most successful in every sense of the word.

The attendance was all that could be wished, the hall being filled to its utmost.

The chair was taken, at 8 o'clock, by Dr. Mallory, of Port Colborne, Supreme Physician of Ontario. Dr. Mallory's address in opening the programme, was an able and interesting exposition of the progress of the Order in the Province. He reviewed the various phases in its career, and showed on what a solid financial basis the insurance department of the work is conducted. There is constantly in the Toronto banks to the credit of the Order from $35,000 to $45,000, which renders the members perfectly secure. The following programme was rendered and drew forth unstinted encomiums from the audience:

Song...... ....Misses Dunlop
Recitation...... ....Miss Long
Song...(In the House of too Much Trouble) Jas. Browne.
Highland Fling... ....Miss Long.
Song ....Misses Dunlop.
Recitation...... ... .Miss M Titterson
Address...... ...Miss L. A Irwin, Lady Organizer for Ontario

Here followed the presentation of a prize to Miss M. Titterson, for the sale of concert tickets, she having disposed of 34 tickets. The presentation was very appropriately made by Dr. Mallory. Then followed a reading by Miss B. Long, song, Miss Dunlop; solo, (The Holy City) Jas. Brown

The entertainment concluded with a very pleasant dance which appealed especially to the younger portion of those present.

Peterborough Tent has at present a membership of 84. The organizer has been here for the past three weeks, and the addition of 18 new members has resulted.

Another entertainment of this kind will be given in the near future, notice of which will appear in the columns of The Times.

ANY ONE CAN

Prove the Value of Scientific Food

A good straightforward test of food is worth much to humanity. The following is interesting:

Mr. D. K. Darboraw of Greenfield, O., says, "After 3 months' sickness with grip I found I had lost 42 pounds, with little appetite and almost no digestion. Wife finally put me on Grape-Nuts and I actually lived on this food, taking it three times a day, and a cup of Postum Coffee at each meal for about four weeks.

When I began, I was so nervous and weak that my strength was exhausted even by dressing, and, of course, I was unable to do the work loaded upon my desk, but I hammered away without tonics or medicines, only my diet of Grape-Nuts and Postum three times a day. I found at the end of 23 days my nervousness gone, strength greatly increased and that I had gained 16 pounds.

Finally, after getting back to good health again I, of course, took on different kinds of food, and, as a change, began using——for breakfast. After a while some peculiar spells began to appear in the morning with deathly sickness and nervous lassitude. I took treatment for biliousness but that did not avail.

About a month ago I gave up the —— for breakfast and took on Grape-Nuts again. These morning attacks left me entirely in a day or two and I feel that I have had sufficient evidence of the scientific value of Grape-Nuts as a vitalizing, perfect food, that does not require the heavy work of the stomach occasioned by the use of starchy foods we use so much nowadays."

BOARD OF WORKS.

Ald. Best submitted the following:

Gentlemen:—

Your Board of Works beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

1. That the Auburn Power Co. be permitted to place poles for power purposes on the north side of Dalhousie street from Bethune street to Aylmer street on filing a plan showing the location of the poles and the locations to be approved of by the Town Engineer.

2. That the request of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, and the Bell Telephone Company, to be permitted to move a pole on Hunter street, near Queen street, and to put up a pole at the new crossing be granted, subject to the approval of the town engineer.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The report was adopted as read.

DOG TAGS

Ald. McGregor moved, seconded by Ald. Morrison,—That the acting chairman of the License Committee be authorized to purchase the dog tags for 1902.—Carried.

MARKET TOLLS.

Ald. McGregor moved, seconded by Ald. Morrison,—That the Market Committee be authorized to dispose of the Market Tolls by auction, and take the necessary steps in this respect.—Carried.

FIRE HOSE.

Ald. Clinkscale moved, seconded by Ald. Batten,—That the Mayor and clerk sign and attach the corporate seal to a contract in duplicate for the purchase of 400 feet of Paragon fire hose from the Gutta Percha and Rubber Mfg. Co. at 90 cents per foot.—Carried.

GRANTS FOR VOLUNTEERS.

Ald. Roger moved, seconded by Ald. Bush,—That the sum of $25 each be paid to volunteers for service in S. Africa who have not already received such a grant.—Carried.

BEET SUGAR APPROPRIATION.

Messrs. Edgcumbe and Shortly were delegates to interview the Hon. J. R. Stratton and urge him to use his influence toward securing for the Ontario Beet Sugar Association the appropriation promised by the local legislature.

TOWN VS. LABOR.

Ald. Best inquired if the Peterborough Union, American Federation of Labor, intended asking $1.50 a day for all laborers from April 1st.

Ald. McGregor replied that $1.50 a day will be the minimum scale, but a man will not be prohibited from getting more if he can.

Ald. Best thought this an unjust measure; some men might only be worth $1 a day, and yet the union demands that all men be rated the same. This is a serious matter for the town, involving hundreds of dollars, and should be discussed in committee of the whole council before the estimates are struck.

Ald. Best moved, seconded by Ald. McGregor,—That the communication from Peterborough Union, referring to this new scale of wages be referred to a committee of the Whole Council.

THE TORONTO GENERAL TRUSTS CORPORATION

PROCEEDINGS OF ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING WEDNESDAY, 26th FEBRUARY, 1902.

The Third Annual Meeting of the Shareholders of the Toronto General Trusts Corporation, being the twentieth of the Toronto General Trusts Company, was held in the Board Room of the Corporation, on the corner of Yonge and Colborne Streets, on Wednesday, the 26th of February. There were present: Hon. Mr. Justice Maclennan, John Hoskin, K.C., President, Hon. S. C. Wood, W. H. Beatty, W. D. Matthews, T. Sutherland Stayner, Aemilius Irving, K.C., Thos. Long, John L. Blaikie, J. G. Scott, K.C., J. J. Foy, K.C., M.P.P., Robert Jaffray, Alexander Nairn, James Hedley, Alfred Hoskin, K.C., B. E. Bull, Edward Galley, E. T. Malone, K.C., A. B. Lee, J. W. Langmuir, William Gordon, J. J. Kenny, D. R. Wilkie, Samuel Nordheimer, H. S. Osler, Walter Barwick, K.C., H. J. Wright, Geo. M. Clark, K.C., Richard Foster, William Hendrie, Alexander Smith, R. S. Schell, George Porter, Henry Gooderham, A. D. Langmuir, John Paton, A. L. Crossin, E. E. Argles and others.

Dr. Hoskin, K.C., LL.D., took the chair, and Mr. A. D. Langmuir, the Assistant Manager, was appointed to act as Secretary.

The various financial statements, showing the operations of the Corporation for the year ended 31st December, 1901, were submitted by the Managing Director, Mr. J. W. Langmuir, and were respectively commented upon by him.

The Report of the Directors for the year was then read, as follows:

To the Shareholders: Your Directors have pleasure in submitting the Third Annual Report of the Toronto General Trusts Corporation, (being the Twentieth of the Toronto General Trusts Company) together with the usual financial statements, showing the operations of the Corporation, and the results of the same, for the year ended 31st December, 1901.

During the past year new business aggregating $3,091,870.18 came under the management and care of the Corporation, as compared with $2,243,108.08 in the preceding year, being an increase of $848,762.10. The following comparative summary shows the positions assumed and the varied character of the new business acquired during the past two years:

	1900.	1901.
Executionerships......	$721,588 03	$1,564,522 97
Administrations......	107,116 28	218,116 40
Administrations, with Will Annexed	125,000 00	54,790 24
Trusteeships......	340,047 6	406,913 18
Investment Agencies......	306,347 82	313,560 06
Estate Agencies......	326,796 70	126,366 67
Liquidatorships......		375,500 00
Guaranteed Mortgage Investment Agencies......	23,000 00	160,407 00
Committeeships......	40,050 00	12,343 81
Guardianships......	2,700 00	36,752 30
Receiverships......	295,567 22
Lunatic Estate Agencies......	29,394 00	30,140 46
	$2,243,108 08	$3,091,870 18

In the foregoing summary all transactions, in which the Corporation merely acted as trustee for the issue and certification of debentures, or as Registrar of stocks and bonds, Transfer Agent, and positions of a kindred character, are excluded, although such transactions during the year aggregated close on five million dollars.

As the Corporation has now completed the twentieth year of its existence, your directors think this a fitting occasion to submit to the shareholders and the public a tabulated statement, showing the executorships, trusts, administrations and all positions of a fiduciary character which have come under the control and management of the Corporation since its organization in February, 1882. A perusal of this statement will not only show the great growth and progress of this, the pioneer Trusts Corporation of Canada but will also prove interesting and instructive, as showing the varied nature and character of the business entrusted to the Corporation. It will be observed that, during the twenty years of its existence, the Corporation has assumed trust and estate business amounting to no less than $37,147,974.76, of which there has been distributed and closed out during that time $16,712,633.33, leaving $20,435,341.43 under its charge on the 31st December, 1901.

Your Board decided in the latter part of the year to open an agency in Manitoba, and, in furtherance of that decision, negotiations were opened with The Winnipeg General Trust Company for the acquirement of their business and assets. An agreement was arrived at, and the Legislature of Manitoba passed an act sanctioning the agreement, and conferring on the Corporation all the rights and powers which The Winnipeg General Trust Company had for the transaction of a trust business in Manitoba. A temporary office has been secured in the new building lately constructed for the Bank of Hamilton, and the Branch is now in full operation.

The stock of the Corporation is all paid up (last installment on the 19th March), and now stands at $1,000,000, with the Reserve Fund $270,000. The Profit and Loss Statement herewith submitted shows the earnings of the Corporation for the year, and the sources from which they were derived, the cost of management and other outlays connected with the business. It will be observed that the net profits for the year, including the balance carried forward from 1900, amount to $116,350.94, out of which your directors declared and paid two semi-annual dividends at the rate of 7 1-2 per cent. per annum, amounting to $73,961.06. There has also been written off from the Corporation's building the sum of $14,260.96, and from furniture and vault fixtures $2,089.30, and $20,000 has been passed to the credit of the Reserve Fund, bringing forward to the credit of Profit and Loss the sum of $6,039.62.

The Directors again desire to impress on the shareholders and the public that, differing from most of the Trust Companies in the United States and Canada, The Toronto General Trusts Corporation strictly confines itself to the management of estates, trusts and agencies. It excludes from its transactions such work as the promotion or flotation of companies, underwriting bond and stock issues, guarantees (other than of securities coming within the Trustee Investment Act), and all business of a more or less speculative character. Briefly, the Corporation confines its operations to the performance of the duties of a Trustee, Executor, Administrator, Guardian, Committee, Liquidator, Receiver and other official or fiduciary functions, fully believing that the great interests of that character committed to its care will thereby be better and more carefully preserved.

Your Directors have to record with deep regret the death of an esteemed colleague, Mr. H. S. Howland, who filled a seat at the Board from the 7th November, 1887, and was during the most of the time a valued member of the Inspection Committee.

Your Directors have further to report that they have appointed to take the place on the Board of the late Mr. Samuel Alcorn and Mr. H. S. Howland, the Hon. Senator Fulford of Brockville, and Mr. D. R. Wilkie, Vice-President of the Imperial Bank of Canada, Toronto.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. W. LANGMUIR, Managing Director.
JOHN HOSKIN, President.

Dr. Hoskin, in moving the adoption of the report, said: The Toronto General Trusts Company was incorporated in 1882. This, therefore, is our 20th Annual Meeting, and it will be interesting and in order to refer not only to the operations of the past year, but to take a brief retrospect of the business performed by the Company during the two decades of its existence, and this I propose to do in the course of my remarks.

The material progress and prosperity which Canada has enjoyed have, in a measure, been experienced by us during the year—interest has been well paid, real estate has risen in value, and is more readily sold than for some years past, which favorable conditions we are pleased to say apply in a special manner to Toronto, and our new business for the year amounts to over $3,000,000.

From the report which has been read, you will observe that out of our profits, we have placed the rest $20,000, which now amounts to $270,000, and, while we could have added more to the Reserve, your Directors thought it a wiser policy to reduce the amounts at which this building, vaults and furniture stand in our books, by writing off these assets over $16,000.

With the sanction of the Shareholders, given at a special meeting called for that purpose, we have extended our operations to the province of Manitoba. The rapid development of that province led us to the conclusion that it would be well to enlarge our borders and extend our operations, and to that end we opened up negotiations for the acquiring of the Manitoba Trusts Company, which were carried to a successful issue, supplemented by the necessary legislation which the Legislature of that Province has just conferred upon us. We have secured the valuable aid of four gentlemen who act as our Advisory Board at Winnipeg, viz., Lieutenant-Governor McMillan and Messrs. A. M. Nanton, H. H Smith and D. W. Bole—all men of the highest standing in Manitoba—and the Manager of that Branch is Mr. James Davey, who was lately our secretary, and who has been on the staff for twenty years.

With this short reference to the affairs of the year, I now take the opportunity of casting a bird's-eye view over the great operations of this company during the 20 years of its existence.

Our Managing Director, Mr. Langmuir, at one time occupied an important and responsible position under the government of this province, and in the discharge of his duties it frequently came to his notice that the management of estates, especially of deceased persons, needed some radical and important change, and in connection therewith the desirability of organizing a company, such as this, presented itself to his mind, whereupon he resigned his office, and, inviting the co-operation of several well-known and able business and professional men as directors, some of whom are still on the board, he and they sought and obtained the incorporation of the Toronto General Trusts Company, which in 1899 amalgamated with the Trusts Corporation of Ontario under the new name of The Toronto General Trusts Corporation.

On former occasions, I and others who have addressed the shareholders at our annual meetings have referred to the great advantages we offer to that portion of the community seeking the safe and careful management of their estates and of the trusts which they desire to create for the benefit of wives and children, to take effect during their life or after their death, and it will not be amiss again to refer to two or three important points bearing upon this matter. For instance, the creator of the trust can be satisfied of continuity, a most important matter, whereas in the case of a private trustee's death, incapacity, unwillingness to continue such, and numerous other circumstances incident to the uncertainty of life and the changeableness of human affairs, cause trouble, inconvenience, costs and uncertainty, and the appointment of new trustees who were unknown to the maker of the trust and who, probably, would never have been nominated by him, whereas all these are obviated by appointing us in the first instance. Again, there is always safety so far as the forthcoming of the assets is concerned. A glance at the records of our courts will show you what an important matter this is, for there records of the administration of justice reveal a sad tale, showing the havoc made and the misery caused by negligent and defaulting trustees. Again, it frequently happens that trustees and executors who are related to the beneficiaries are often pressed to vary and encroach upon the trusts to the detriment and often the destruction of the estate, and are unable to resist importunity, by reason of family pressure and considerations, whereas these influences being removed from the sphere of the Trusts Corporation, the management is able to resist these influences. Anyone familiar with the administration of justice will tell you that these three points cannot be too strongly impressed upon those who seek to appoint executors and trustees. They are factors which enter largely into the preservation of estates.

From the financial statements that have been presented to you by the Managing Director, showing that during the past 20 years that the Corporation has been in existence over $37,000,000 of estates and trusts have come under the charge of the Corporation, and after distributing and closing out $16,000,000, over $20,000,000 still remain with the Corporation, it will be quite evident that the Toronto General Trusts Corporation has taken hold of the public mind, which fact would be emphasized if I could tell you of the number of wills now lying in our vaults and elsewhere of which we are named the executors, and, great as have been our business operations in the past, I venture to assert that we are yet in our infancy; that we have surmounted the difficulties which surrounded the launching of this undertaking, and shall more fully reap the benefit of the care, anxiety and labor which have fallen to the lot of the management.

In connection with the past work adverted to, I may, with pardonable pride, refer to the splendid winding up presented by us in connection with the Farmers' Loan and Savings Company, of which we are the liquidators appointed by the High Court. When we were appointed it was suggested and hoped, but with some hesitation and misgivings, that the debenture holders might hope to realize 60c. on the dollar. They have so far been paid 80c. on the dollar, and while they may not get 100 cents, we hope the final dividend will not fall far short of that point.

We are confidently seeking the business and confidence of the public who are looking for safe, careful and trustworthy trustees and executors, and for the information and benefit of such we say that, in our management of trust funds, we confine ourselves strictly to the class of investments authorized by law and the trust instruments under which we act, even with our capital and reserve, which we hold intact for the additional protection and security of those for whom we act, our aim being to hold ourselves out to the public as being engaged simply in the management of estates entrusted to our care.

Acting on these conservative principles, we cannot fail to attract the attention and confidence of the public and to witness the continuous growth of our business, in connection with which permit me to say that such increase can be greatly facilitated and our success further assured by the hearty co-operation of all connected with us, both as shareholders and directors, and it is the duty of all such to do their best to promote our interests.

One word as to our staff. From the Managing Director down, I bear cheerful testimony to the zeal, diligence and loyalty of all, and these qualities add much to our efficiency and success. I have much pleasure, gentlemen, in moving the adoption of the Report.

Hon. S. C. Wood, in seconding the adoption of the Report, said:

"I shall not take up the time of the meeting in referring to the financial position of the Corporation. The statements give the fullest details, which together with the able address of the President, make that quite unnecessary. Perhaps, however, you will bear with me for a few minutes while I refer to certain circumstances, which, I think, have had largely to do with the prosperity of the Corporation.

"Reading the Act of Incorporation and the Supplementary Letters Patent, we must come to one conclusion, that this is pre-eminently a Trust Company, authorized to do a trust business. The promoters might reasonably have asked for the power to receive money on deposit, the right to issue debentures and many additional powers, but, after very careful consideration, they decided that the true policy of the company would be to devote its entire attention and energy to looking after trusts and estates and the transaction of a general trust business. To this end the company had to train a staff in all that pertains to the successful management of such a business, believing that sooner or later such a course would commend itself to the wants of the general public.

"A very short time after the Corporation began active operations, the Superior Court Judges of this Province, having under their control moneys known as the Court Fund, in which a very large number of widows, orphans and other parties are interested, decided, after thoroughly satisfying themselves of the standing, ability and scope of the Corporation, to constitute the Corporation its agent for the investment of the Court funds, and during the past twenty years the Corporation in that capacity has invested sums of money close on $6,500,000, of which over $2,600,000 is still under the care of the Corporation. In the management of that large amount of money, during a period in which we have seen values reaching their highest point, as well as a drop to the lowest, not one dollar has been lost to that fund. The same conditions and reasons that operated upon the Superior Court Judges in the investment of the Court funds have also influenced the legal fraternity. We find that here and there all over the province, solicitors are advising their clients to select this Corporation or some other Trust Company for the future management of their assets. We find also that the action and methods of this Corporation in its dealings with its clients have been a large factor in the occasion for its prosperity.

"The system of checks and supervision over the affairs of this Corporation is as nearly perfect as it possibly can be; first, there is the Board, exercising general control; then, there is the Executive Committee, which has to pass upon every detail of the business; then, there are the Auditors, to see that the accounts are correctly and properly kept; and lastly, there is the Inspection Committee, composed of two gentlemen of eminent legal ability and one layman of the oldest standing in the community, whose duty it is to see that every instruction of the Board and Executive has been carried out by the Managing Director and his staff; they have to see every mortgage, debenture and security that has been acquired, and, further, that they are registered in the books of the Company to the estates or accounts to which they belong.

"I have much pleasure in seconding the adoption of the Report."

His Honor Judge Clark, in moving a vote of thanks to the President, said that the boon of having a trustee of the standing of this Corporation is a most valuable one in any community. It is based upon proper principles and has a proper object in view. I have had the pleasure of knowing the President of the Company for a great number of years. He is not only a man of great integrity and ability, but his connection with the institution in all respects cannot but be satisfactory to all concerned. The motion was seconded by Mr. Richard Foster.

Hon. Mr. Justice Maclennan, in moving a vote of thanks to the Directors of the Corporation, said:

"Mr. Chairman,—You and your Directors have invited the shareholders to meet you to-day in order that we may have an account of your stewardship, and I am sure that every shareholder who is here present must be very much pleased and gratified to hear the Report which has been read, and to hear the statements which have also been commented on by the Managing Director, and the observations made by yourself and by the Vice-President. I am sure there is nothing to find fault with, but, on the other hand, there is a great deal to be gratified with in all they have heard. For myself, I may express the great pleasure I feel in looking back upon the history of this Corporation (in which I had something to do at one time myself), and to observe the progress which has been made year by year since the day of small things. That progress is due to the men whom you elected twenty years ago, and whom you have been electing year by year since to manage your business. I am sure that the City of Toronto could not provide a lot of men more capable of conducting the business of this Company, steadily and safely and prudently, than the men whom you have elected. I ask you, therefore, gentlemen, to pass a resolution of thanks to the Board of Directors whom you have at present managing your affairs."

Mr. Northeimer seconded the resolution, fully approving of all that had been said.

Votes of thanks were also tendered to the Vice-Presidents, Messrs. Wood and Beatty, the Inspection Committee of the Corporation, and the Managing Director and Staff.

Messrs. R. F. Spence and J. M. Martin, F.C.A., were appointed Auditors for the year 1902.

Certain Bylaws and amendments to By-laws were confirmed.

The following gentlemen were re-elected Directors for the ensuing year: John Hoskin, K.C., LL.D., Hon. S. C. Wood, W. H. Beatty, Jno. Bell, K.C., Jno. L. Blaikie, W. R. Brock, M.P., J. W. Digby, M.D., J. J. Foy, K.C., M.P.P., Jno. Foy, Hon. Senator Fulford, George Gooderham, William Hendrie, Aemilius Irving, K.C., Robert Jaffray, J. J. Kenny, J. W. Langmuir, A. B. Lee, Thomas Long, W. D. Matthews, Hon. Peter McLaren, E. B. Osler, M.P., J. G. Scott, K.C., T. Sutherland, Stayner, B. E. Walker and D. R. Wilkie.

At a subsequent meeting of the Board, Dr. John Hoskin, K.C., was re-elected President and Hon. S. C. Wood and Mr. W. H. Beatty, Vice-Presidents.

The Executive Committee was re-elected, comprising: John Hoskin, K.C., LL.D., Chairman, W. H. Beatty, W. R. Brock, M.P., Robert Jaffray, Thomas Long, E. B. Osler, M.P., T. Sutherland Stayner, Hon. S. C. Wood, J. J. Foy, K.C., M.P.P., John L. Blaikie, A. B. Lee, W. D. Matthews, J. G. Scott, K.C., and B. E. Walker. The retiring Inspection Committee was re-elected, viz: Mr. W. H. Beatty, Chairman, Mr. Aemilius Irving and Mr. John L. Blaikie.

KING HUMBER'S WIDOW TO VISIT UNITED STATES

The Dowager Queen of Italy to Visit the United States

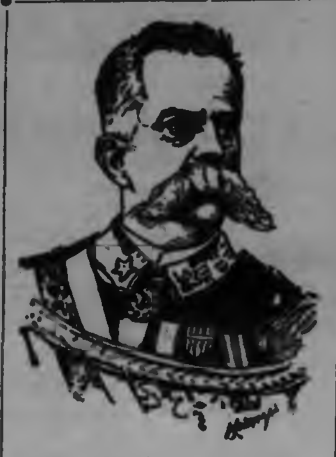
She May Also Take a Trip Through Canada and Visit Ottawa

A Lady of Rare Ability and High Attainments

New York, March 5 — There is now good ground for the story, once denied, that the Dowager Queen Margharita of Italy will shortly visit the United States. The glowing terms in which Mme. Ristori, the tragedienne, described the wonders of America to King Humbert's widow are said to have induced her definitely to make up her mind to make an early visit to the western republic.

Though naval officers are striving for the honor of conveying the queen to the States, it is said that she has practically decided to journey overland to England and take an Atlantic liner thence for New York. She will travel incognito as the Countess Stupinigi.

It is said that another reason for the queen's desire to visit the United States is the strong regard in which she has always held American women, whose beauty, frankness and self-possession have appealed to her strongly. She desires to see them at home. It is not generally known that an American woman, Mrs. March, assisted largely in the education of queen Margherita, Mrs. March having frequently been called into consultation by the Austrian instructor of the queen.



THE LATE KING HUMBERT

Queen Margherita is a very remarkable woman.

She is a linguist, speaks many modern languages, Latin is as familiar to her as Italian, and she is well versed in Greek.

She is what may be called a religious free thinker, being a devout Catholic, yet an ardent admirer of Jews and Protestants.

She is an author, having written many descriptions of knightly adventure and published a volume of middle age fairy stories.

She does not believe in woman's equality with man, but is convinced that monarchs have divine rights; is soft hearted, yet has an infinity of energy and resource; reads music with great facility and plays admirably; is a staunch friend, and was born in 1851.

MENACING CONDUCT OF U. S. OFFICIAL

Collector Ivey to be Punished by the Authorities at Washington

A GROSSLY INSULTING TELEGRAM

A Man Who Refuses to Obey the Orders—A Man Sent to Sitka to Replace Ivy

Washington, March 4 — The Treasury officials are at a loss to understand the grossly insulting and revolutionary conduct of collector Ivey. A few weeks ago Lieut Jarvis of the Revenue Cutter Service, who won fame in the winter of 1897-98 by leading the Government rescue expedition to Point Barrow, on the Arctic ocean, and who is one of the best informed men on Alaskan affairs was appointed Collector at Sitka by President Roosevelt. The collection district covers the whole territory of Alaska, which is about one sixth as large as the rest of the United States, and the office is, therefore, important. It is supposed that Ivey resented the appointment of a successor, and that this is the cause of his defying both the Federal authority and the terms of our foreign treaties. Lieut Jarvis is now in Washington, but will start for Sitka in view of Ivey's alarming action on the seal question and in the territory near the disputed international boundary.

The leading newspapers of this city are of opinion that Ivey must be punished. His anti-British feeling is such that he would go to any lengths to cause trouble.

THE PRINCE'S TOUR

Boston and Syracuse Prepare to Receive the German Prince

Boston, Mass., March 5—Everything is in readiness for the reception and entertainment of Prince Henry, who is due to arrive in Boston at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. His Royal Highness will be met at the Huntington avenue station by the mayor and the German consul, and conducted under military escort to the Hotel Somerset, where the governor commandant of the navy yard, President Eliot of Harvard and other men of distinction will be presented. The prince will then pay his return visits and incidentally visit the public library and other places of interest. A call will be made on Mrs. J. L. Gardner, after which the party will proceed to Cambridge, where the remainder of the day is to be spent inspecting Harvard University, in which His Royal Highness, as well as the Emperor, has expressed much interest. Returning to Boston in the evening the Prince will be the guest of honor at an elaborate banquet at the Hotel Somerset. At an early hour the following morning the party will leave for Albany.

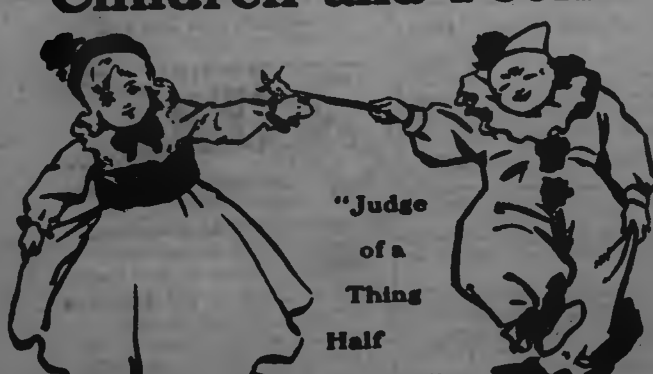
ARRANGEMENTS AT SYRACUSE.

Syracuse, N.Y., March 5 — Prince Henry will be greeted on his arrival here this evening by Mayor Kline and a committee of business men. The Liederkranz Singing Society will sing. The train, after engines are changed, will be drawn to Vanderbilt Square, where the ceremonies will take place. The Forty-first Separate Company will act as guard. The square will be brilliantly illuminated with electric lights so that all may have an opportunity of seeing the distinguished visitor.

To Break Up a Cold

all you require is a glass of hot water, a little sugar, and thirty drops of Polson's Nerviline. Take it real hot, and in the morning you will wake up without a cold. When depressed or tired, try Nerviline; it will tone you up better than stimulants. Nerviline wards off all sickness and keeps people well. Large bottles 25c.

"Children and Fools"



This is particularly applicable in cases where persons seriously troubled from the effects of coffee drinking and who take up Postum Food Coffee in its place, attempt to make the new beverage with a little hot water and two or three minutes' boiling. That sort of a "lick and a promise" produces a drink that is simply exasperating. It is flat and tasteless, whereas the person who will boil the Postum full fifteen minutes after the actual bubbling and boiling begins, will have a beverage that is something.

There is a point between twelve and fifteen minutes of boiling, when the character of Postum is changed, the food value is extracted, and the delicious flavor which much resembles the milder and more expensive grades of Java coffee is produced.

A lady in Salem, Ore., says: "Whenever I drank coffee at night, I always passed a restless, wakeful night. Extreme nervousness and a weak stomach have followed me ever since I have been using coffee. Finally, I got into such a state that my dyspepsia took the form of spasms and heart weakness.

"I suffered intensely, and when a physician was called, he inquired, among other things, if I drank coffee and insisted that I leave it off. I did so and took up tea, which I found almost as bad. Finally husband brought home a package of Postum, and we tried it strictly according to directions, for we believe in the adage that 'Children and fools judge of a thing half done.')

"The new coffee was delicious and from that day until now (which is a year) it has been our only drink at meals. My dyspepsia, spasms, etc., are things of the past. My husband had suffered some years with bilious headaches and indigestion, but during the past year, on Postum Food Coffee, he has entirely recovered his health and gained much in weight. Our friends frequently comment on our improved appearance and change in complexion." Name of writer supplied by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The matter of sending representatives to the meeting of the Provincial Trustees Association to be held in Toronto at Easter was taken up. Several of the Board were opposed to sending any delegates as they did not think the benefit derived from attending the meeting was worth the outlay to the Board.

Mr. J. J. Hartley who has been a delegate on three occasions considered the meeting was a benefit to the members of the Board as there was a lot of very useful information to be got at these meetings.

It was moved that Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Ferguson be appointed to attend the meeting.

Mr. Wrighton, moved in amendment that no one be sent. The amendment was lost and the first motion carried.

Mr. Eastwood stated that he thought it would be a great advantage to the scholars who were leaving the Institute to go to work if they had an opportunity of taking up shorthand, typewriting and book-keeping at the Institute. At the present time when the scholars were through with their course at the Institute they were unable to take up office work and were obliged to take a course at the Business College to be in a position to enter commercial life. Mr. Hayes was in favor of having these branches taught at the Institute. The cost would be very little and the pupils would be in a position to go into business when they left the Institute.

Considerable discussion arose over the subject. Mr. Bamford thought there were a number of subjects taught in the schools, such as Greek, Latin, French and other subjects that in three cases out of four were of no use to the scholar in following up his life's work. It was all right for a young fellow who wanted to be a doctor or druggist to learn the dead languages, but it was of no use to anyone else. He advocates giving the boys more useful training such as is required in everyday life. Mr. Hartley thought the scholars at the schools had all they could manage in the way of studies at the present time and would be in favor of paying for a course at the Business College for those of the pupils who wanted to take it. The cost of teaching these subjects in the Institute would be considerable as to be engaged. Mr. Langford said the education a scholar got at the Institute was in many cases of not use to him at all.

On motion the matter was referred to the Supervision Committee to make enquiries and report at the next meeting of the Board.

The Board adjourned.

Alive, Yet Half Dead

feeling miserable. This is the condition of thousands of growing girls and women. Can't eat enough to be truly alive. Digest so little of what they do eat, as to scarcely know what life really means. Miserable? Of course. But more, digest more, then feel streaming through life's renewed current, the buoyancy, the strength, the hopefulness of youth. Simply done if you'll just use Ferrozone, the wonderful blood maker, nerve strength and brain vigor. Ormond & Walsh, druggists, know all about it. Call and ask them about it.

PELERBOROUGH TO BATTLE WITH GALT

Collingwood Defeated by a Score of 5 to 3 Last Night

Toronto, March 4.—The hockey match between Galt and Collingwood, played at the Mutual street rink here tonight, resulted in Galt defeating the team from the northern town by a score of 5-3. The ice was in excellent condition, and the game was fast and exciting throughout, being almost entirely devoid of rough play. It was expected by some that Collingwood had a dark horse, and were going to surprise Galt. However, this rumor failed to materialize, and Galt, although they had to hustle for the victory, were not pressed as hard as they anticipated. The Galt forward line is exceptionally speedy, and "Dutcay" Morrison, their goal-keeper, is a wonder.

Excursions were run from both Collingwood and Galt, and a large crowd of enthusiasts accompanied either team.

The secretary of the O. H. A. has given out that Galt and Peterborough will play home and home games, and it is probable that Galt will play here on either Thursday of Friday night.

Peterborough ladies' hockey team journeyed to Cobourg yesterday, and defeated the ladies' team of that town by a score of 1-0 in a very close game.

AMERICAN LEAGUE MEETING.

Detroit, Mich., March 5.—To-day the eyes of the baseball world are turned to-day Detroit where the magnates of the American league have gathered for a meeting which promises to have important results for the future of the national game. While the meeting is ostensibly the regular spring meeting for the ratification of the schedule and the transaction of other business relating to the coming season, there are several matters other than routine to receive attention. It is the general belief that before adjourning the meeting will have definitely decided to put a club in New York city, thus bringing the warfare against the older league to a climax. With Chicago, St. Louis, New York and Boston in the circuit the American league will be in a position to contest the supremacy with the National league and with a good chance of emerging from the struggle on top.

CURLING.

Brandon, Man, March 5.—The annual bonspiel of the Brandon Curling Club began to-day and will continue through the week. The attendance is large and much interest is manifested by citizens generally, as well as by the members.

O'BRIEN AND DUFFY TO CLASH

Chicago, Ill., March 5.—Martin Duffy, the western lightweight champion, and Jack O'Brien, who gave Frank Erne the toughest kind of a twenty-five-round fight, are to mix things up in a six-round bout before the Acme Club to-night. The two fighters are among the best in their class and unless all guesses go astray they will put up a lively battle from the time the gong sounds. The winner will be matched to fight Frank Erne for the championship title.

GONE TO OTTAWA

A very large delegation of mill owners, steamboat men and manufacturers left last night on the mid night express for Ottawa to wait on the Minister of Railways and Canals to endeavor to persuade the Government to take ovr certain dams and to build new ones on the Trent Water route, to ensure a more equal and uniform flow of water in the river and adjoining lakes.

Among those who left last night were: Mayor Denne, Ald. Best and Shortly from the Town Council, Councillor Johnston from Ashburnham and Messrs. Adam Hall, W. G. Ferguson, J. C. Shook, J. Alex, Culverwell, Wm Scott, D. W. Dumble, Jas. Kendry, M.P., R. R. Hall, S. S. Moore, Chas. Mitchell of town, and Messrs. Fowlds, Hastings; Gilmour; Trenton; Rosser, Lindsay; Mulholland, Campbellford; and a number from Lakefield and other places.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND JAPAN MAKES CHINESE BOLD

General Botha Will Cross the Vaal---Convention of the United Irish League Calls on Graziers to Allow the Land to Lie Idle

London, March 5.—A despatch from Pekin to The Times, written by Dr. Morrison, says it is evident that the British-Japanese agreement has given the Chinese Government confidence in dealing with foreign questions and stiffened its back against German demands. Dr. Morrison says exclusive rights have already been granted to the Germans for ten miles on each side of the railway lines, covering an area of fifteen thousand square miles, yet the Germans send a consul to Si-Nan-Foo to extort from the Governor further concessions. The Germans have also applied to the Director-General of the Northern railways for permission to continue the Si-Nan-Foo line, now under construction, to join the Pekin-Han-Kow line at Cheng-Ting-Foo. This is not likely to be granted. The correspondent says the Chinese are more resolute in dealing with Russian demands. They persist in requiring the evacuation of Manchuria to be effected by one year, in successive periods of four months each, while the Russians demand three years.

The correspondent further says that the Chinese refuse to be prohibited from employing artillery in Manchuria. In spite of the expressed disapproval of the proceedings at the recent Imperial audience, Dr. Morrison says there is no doubt that the attention shown by the Emperor and the Empress Dowager to the foreign ladies and children, has materially increased the Chinese respect for foreigners. Whether the effect is permanent cannot be told, but the Chinese were never before so willing to meet foreigners, and the Chinese officials at Pekin were never before so friendly aliens. He adds that the insurrection in Kwang-Si causes uneasiness, because of the incompetent Chinese commander there. The Chinese fear that if the insurrection threatens the Tonquin border the French will interfere.

BOTHA WILL CROSS THE VAAL.

London, March 5.—The Times correspondent with General Bruce sends a despatch from Amersfoord, in the Southern Transvaal, which says that captured Boers report that General Botha intends to cross the Orange River Colony to meet Steyn and De Wet. Schalkberger is also to be present. The correspondent says that General Botha recently withdrew from the Vryheid District, South-East Transvaal, because of hustling experienced by the British on the high veldt, and has issued orders to all his commanders to follow him. Schalkberger has moved with headquarters to Roossenekal. He says that General Botha sought the low country because of the approach of winter. Col Plumer took twelve prisoners near Standerton on Friday, intercepting despatches from Britz to General Botha.

PROGRESS OF THE NO RENT CAMPAIGN.

London, March 5.—A despatch to The Times from Dublin says that at a convention of the United Irish League, held at Castlereagh, for the purpose of supporting the no-rent campaign in the Counties of Roscommon and Mayo, resolutions were adopted pledging support for disaffected tenants, and calling on graziers to surrender grass farms so that the land may be left idle until equitably divided.

AMERICANS NOT MUCH AHEAD.

London, March 5.—A despatch to The Times from Birmingham says that at the annual meeting of the Midland Iron and Steel Wages Board, Sir Benjamin Hingley, the president, declared that Americans were not much ahead of the British in the manufacture of puddled and rolled iron, but they enjoyed on advantage because the manufacture was not interfered with by stoppage as in England.

THE PRINCE OF WALES

Great Welcome Extended to the Prince of Wales Yesterday

London, March 5.—The Prince of Wales, heir apparent to the throne received a great welcome at Bristol to-day on the occasion of his visit to cut the first sod of the new dock at Avonmouth. It was the first visit of the Prince of Wales to Bristol and the ancient city gave him a truly royal welcome. Business was generally suspended, the decorations of flags and bunting were profuse and several triumphal arches spanned the streets. A special train conveyed the royal visitor over the Clifton Extension Railway from Bristol to Avonmouth, nine miles distant.

The new docks at the mouth of the Avon river are designed to be among the largest in England and are expected to result in a great increase in the trade of the city of Bristol. The cost of construction will amount to $10,000,000.

ANOTHER BIG TRUST

The Cooperage Business of the United States Go into Combine

Detroit, Mich., March 5.—A cooperage trust embracing three-quarters of the stave and hoop manufacturers of the country is to be launched at a meeting to be held in Detroit. The initial steps looking to the formation of the combination were taken at a conference held two weeks ago. The company will be called the Central Cooperage Sales Company and its headquarters will be in Buffalo. Its capital will be $500,000. Leading manufacturers of Ohio, Michigan, Illinois and Canada are the promoters of the movement. The announced purpose of the combine is to advance prices, reduce freight rates, prevent unjust claims, and stop ruinous price fluctuations.

Cincinnati is 100 Years Old

Cincinnati, O., March 5.—The city of Cincinnati is 100 years old to-day and it is celebrating the event in various ways. The main feature of the celebration will be the banquet to be held this evening under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce. Among the invited guests are Senators Hanna and Foraker, the Ohio congressmen, and the governors of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky.

A CASE AT THE NICHOLLS HOSPITAL

There has been for some time a serious agitation amongst some of the more prominent people of the town with regard to the dismissal of a nurse from the Nicholls Hospital staff without, as it is alleged, proper cause. There are always, of course, two sides to a question, but so far as we have been able to learn, there is danger of a serious injustice in this case, which, therefore, becomes at once a matter of public concern, and we do not think that it is the part of public journals to withhold reference to an affair of this sort so long that it should begin to look like "a conspiracy of silence." It appears that one of the nurses was desirous of attending the funeral of a near and dear relative, and that there was no especial reason why she should not be permitted to do so. However, those in authority declined to grant the required permission, upon which the nurse, feeling her position and the refusal keenly, decided to risk dismissal and to go. She returned without delay, but was at once dismissed, and on appealing to the pity and commiseration of her superiors, she met with a still harsher refusal, and it is these circumstances that are now engaging public attention. Meetings have been held, petitions circulated and interviews brought about, but all to no purpose, and it seems to us that while discipline must be maintained in all institutions, more than discipline has been maintained in this, especially when the reason for the dismissal has been changed to that of incompetency. This evasion of responsibility on the part of the authorities is not worthy of those guilty of it, and presents a new difficulty in the case, viz.: that of destroying a girl's future prospects by the indirect and simple method of suppressing the facts relating to it. The agitation has gone so far that the hospital affairs are on the eve of an explosion of such a nature that it will impair both the credit and the usefulness of an otherwise good and useful institution. We hope at least for a more satisfactory explanation of the difficulty than that already given by the superintendent and her advisers.

Items of Interest

London, March 5.—A strange story is exciting much discussion among military men, although it has been kept out of both press and Parliament. It relates to alleged reprisals taken by Australian troops for Boer outrages in firing upon wounded, and the Draconian measures adopted by Lord Kitchener for enforcing discipline. It is stated that the Australian officers and men who took the lex talionis into their own hands were tried by court-martial and some of them were sentenced to be shot. The story is told with precision and full details, but the censorship has excluded it from ordinary despatches, and official explanations cannot be obtained from Pall Mall.

An important discovery has just been made. A Boer recently captured, who stated that his name was Morrow and that he was a Free State burgher, was found to be no other than Judge Koch, who, flouting General Botha's express orders, personally led a body of Irish adventurers bent on the destruction of the mines the day Lord Roberts entered Johannesburg.

San Francisco, Cal., March 5.—The Peru of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company makes an initial passage start for Manila to-day, in pursuance of an agreement entered into between that company and the Occidental and Oriental and Toyo Kisen Kaisha lines, by which one of the nine steamers belonging to the three lines shall call once a month at Manila. It is believed that the United States government will foster the new service by throwing as much business in the way of the three lines as is possible.

BOTHA ESCAPED.

London, March 5.—It is reported, but the story is not confirmed, that Gen. Louis Botha was recently made prisoner and got away again.

According to the report the affair happened after the capture of Botha's laager near Knapdaar, and the astounding details would not now be known had not a trick been played on the British censor. The tidings came in a private letter from an officer in the field, the letter having been mailed by an intermediary at a free port to avoid the censor's scrutiny and certain mutilation.

When Remington's troops made the night attack at Knapdaar they captured several prisoners and the camp equipment of the Boers. Among the men taken was Gen. Louis Botha, but the British did not recognize him, and the other prisoners took care to shield him in every possible manner.

After the pursuit of the fugitives had ended the captured men were divided into groups, and Botha—fortunately for him—was included in the number that was entrusted to the care of the rear guard.

Another force of Boers hearing of the disaster to the main body, and that their general had been captured, menaced the British command. In the confusion of the expected attack the body of British troops that held Botha as their prisoner permitted a few of the burghers to escape, and among the number was the redoubtable Botha.

Special From Norwich, Ont.

The recovery of Mr. Norman Batty, hardware merchant, one of Norwich's oldest and most successful citizens, has excited much comment. For years Mr. Batty has been an unceasing sufferer from catarrhal asthma, and although no end of time and money was spent relief was not obtained until Mr. Batty commenced Catarrhozone treatment, which perfectly cured him. This case is only equalled by that of Mrs. Bannon, wife of J. J. Bannon, druggist, who was also cured of asthma and hay fever by Catarrhozone after thirty years' suffering. Fully a hundred persons in this town have been cured of catarrhal troubles by Catarrhozone, which is a remarkable proof of its value. Two months' treatment price $1.00, small size 25c. Sold by all druggists or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Weather Notes

Probs.—Fair and cold to-day.

Fair, moderately cold weather now prevails over the greater portion of Canada, with no immediate prospect of much change except that in Ontario and Quebec the temperature promises to be somewhat lower.

LADIES' MISSION CIRCLE

Of the Murray Street Baptist Church Held a Successful Meeting Last Night

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Mission Circle of the Murray Street Baptist Church, was held in the basement of the church last night, and was well attended.

After devotional exercises, the business was taken up and a number of very satisfactory and encouraging reports were read from the different mission fields. Mrs. Sharp, wife of Mr. Sharp, the missionary among the Indians in the North-West, was the principal speaker at the meeting, and gave an excellent report on the work being done in St. Peter's mission field. The reservation is very large and the work is consequently great. The work of reforming the Indians, and teaching them the Word of God, is flourishing. A great many of the Indians have been converted, and are constant attenders at the services held in a small log church on Sundays. A large number are being baptised every month and are being received into the church. A short time ago at the Sunday service, three of the converts said they were anxious to go into the wild north country, and preach the Gospel of Christ to their heathen brethren living there. They could not remain at home, they said, when they knew how their brethren were in darkness regarding the Word of God. They said it seemed very stingy, and they asked their pastor, Mr. Sharp, to allow them to go and preach. On the second day after, the three started with their dog sleigh on a long and tedious journey. No word has been received yet regarding them yet, but they have probably arrived at their destination in safety. Several other touching incidents of the anxiety of the Indians to help in spreading the gospel, were recited. A large amount of clothing has been sent from the Murray street congregation, and it was all received and used in assisting the needy ones.

A letter was read from Mrs. J. Gilmour, giving a very interesting account of Grand Lee and the work being done there.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

A very interesting report of the work of the Foreign Missions was read by Mrs. Hunter. The work she referred to was principally in India and showed the great need of more missionaries there. The mission field in India is very large, and although a large number of missionaries are engaged there, it will be a very hard task to reach all the inhabitants as there are millions of people in the country.

Representatives were present from the other churches in town, and delivered short addresses of encouragement and congratulation to the Mission Circle.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

The financial statement was presented by Miss Nicholls as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Foreign Missions	$161 82
Home Missions	61 71

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 5, 1902

NEW JERSEY'S COMING WAR ON THE MOSQUITO.

New Jersey is to wage war on the mosquito next summer. Its Assembly decided to take this step last week, and appropriated $10,000 with which to defray the expenses. The measure is an important one, that deserves popular approval and every encouragement. There was practically no opposition to the bill in the Assembly; but if the reports of the proceedings be an index, the members appeared to regard the matter as a huge joke, and as affording a golden opportunity for the delivery of humorous speeches. Nevertheless, although the subject was treated lightly by the Assemblymen and although the New Jersey mosquito undoubtedly figures largely in comic journalism, those who suffered last summer on the Atlantic coast from the pestiferous insects will be glad that some steps are to be taken for their extermination.

Experiments were made last year on Staten Island by the New York Health authorities to determine the possibility of getting rid of the pest of mosquitoes and with gratifying success. Petroleum was forced through small pipes to the bottoms of ponds in which the insects breed, and sprayed over damp grassy places in the neighborhood, with the result that spots previously badly infected were almost entirely freed of mosquitoes. What was done in such an encouraging manner on Staten Island can surely be done equally well in New Jersey. Fortunately, there are no unwise restrictions imposed as to the manner in which the money it is proposed to appropriate shall be spent. It is simply placed at the disposal of the State Experiment Station for the purpose of making scientific investigation of the habits, origin and breeding places of the mosquito and its relation to malarial and other diseases. The experiments are to be conducted under the direction of State Entomologist J. B. Smith, who has given years of study to the subject.

It has been proved beyond reasonable dispute that certain species of mosquitoes are prolific disease breeders, and this fact, apart from the annoyance they cause by their attacks, renders their extermination, if possible, both desirable and important. Thus far three means of at least reducing the number of these pestiferous insects have been discovered. One is by the liberal use of petroleum in waters where they breed and on the adjacent grass; a second is by filling up all shallow stagnant pools, and the third is by introducing into ponds and pools certain species of small larvae and insect eating fish. Even though the $10,000 which the Assembly has voted only suffices to point clearly to the best means of exterminating the mosquito in New Jersey, the money will be well spent.

YANKEES WILL BE CONCEITED

One Austrian Paper's Unfriendly Comment on the Prince's Visit

Vienna, March 4.—The official Fremdenblatt, commenting on Prince Henry's visit says:

"The importance of Prince Henry's journey lies in the fact that it has broken down the thin wall which busy hands erected to separate the two countries. They can now freely join hands across the ocean, and by exchanging views regarding world politics prevent their mutual relations being made dependent upon the goodwill of a third power."

The Vaterland, a clerical organ, thinks there has been a race between Germany and Great Britain for the friendship of the United States, and that Germany has won.

The only unfriendly comment in Vienna is from the Anti-Semitic and anti-British Neue Wiener Journal, which says:

"On a people, which, according to European notions, have no history as yet the [illegible] guest of a highly cultured nation like Germany is bound to make an impression. It tickles the vanity of Americans to be wooed as a nation in a way which as a rule only their heiresses enjoy."

The Journal says it believes that Prince Henry's pleasing flattery will soon wear off, but, it adds, it is a question whether America's self-conceit will not be inflated beyond endurance thereby.

Anecdotal.

Some years ago when Bishop Potter, of New York, was traveling in Minnesota, a man approached him on the railway platform and scanned his features closely. "Excuse me," he said, finally, "but haven't I seen your picture in the papers?" He was compelled to confess that he had. "I thought so," continued the inquisitive one; "may I ask what you were cured of?"

Here is a new story of Paderewski. He recently lost his only son, and the effect on him has been to soften down the little eccentricities which used to charm his less artistic followers. He went to Dresden for the first performance of his own opera. Amid the enthusiastic demonstrations which greeted its success, he observed in Russian to a friend, "All this might be dust if I could have one smile from my child!"

At a seaside hotel the other day a new arrival, having made terms with the proprietor, proceeded to write his name in the hotel book. While he was so engaged a rather large flea hopped across the open page before him. "Well," he remarked, throwing down the pen, "I have been in hotels where there were fleas, but never before have I been in an hotel where the fleas search the register for the number of their rooms."

When the Transvaal war was at its height, Paul Kruger sent a commissioner to England to find out if there were any more men left there. The commissioner wired from London to say that there were four million men and women "knocking about the town," that there was no excitement, and that men were begging to be sent to fight the Boers. Kruger wired back, "Go north." The commissioner found himself in Newcastle eventually, and wired to Kruger: "For God's sake, stop that war! England is bringing up men from hell, eight at a time, in cages!" He had seen a coal mine.

A quotable story is told of a missionary who was spending a short holiday in Texas. After he had been at his hotel for some days he met with a very fierce-looking man of the cowboy type, who, he noticed, had anything but a sweet temper. "Do you know," he said to him one day, "that you should love your enemies?" "That's a thing I can't do, sir." "What! I am sure a man like you could do anything if you tried." "Anything but that, parson; it's impossible." "Impossible!" said the missionary, surprised and hurt. "How?" "I ain't got one to love. I shot the last this morning."

Julian Corbett may be said to have established himself as an authority on the history of the British navy. A while ago Mr. Corbett wrote to the admiralty to suggest that a new first-class battleship then building be christened "Drake." A formal intimation that his letter had been received and should have due attention was followed, after a decent interval, by a dignified reply from my lords, in which they expressed their regret at not being able to carry out Mr. Corbett's suggestion, and explained that it would be contrary to precedent to name a first-class battleship after a bird.

A Sunday School teacher who has a class of little girls makes it her custom to tell them each Sunday of some little incident that has happened during the week, and request the children to quote a verse of Scripture to illustrate the story. In this way she hopes to impress the usefulness of Biblical knowledge upon the little ones. Last Sunday she told her class of a cruel boy who would catch cats and cut their tails off. "Now, can any little girl tell me of an appropriate verse?" she asked. There was a pause for a few moments, when one little girl arose, and in a solemn voice said: "Whatsoever God has joined together let no man put asunder."

Sir Harry Poland, a British magistrate noted for his brilliancy, is careless in his dress. Once his family persuaded him to go to Poole and order a fashionably cut suit. To the chagrin of the household, Sir Harry looked more outlandish in the new clothes than in his old ones. His brother-in-law went to see Poole about it. "It is not my fault, sir," the tailor assured him. "Every care was taken, but how could we fit a gentleman who would insist upon being measured sitting down?" And the only satisfaction that could be obtained from Sir Harry Poland himself later on was the dry comment: "Well, it's my business, and not yours. I like to be comfortable. I spend three parts of my life sitting down, and I prefer to be measured so."

A Philadelphia paper tells of a bride and bridegroom who recently went to housekeeping and are blessed with a maid of all work who is fresh from the Emerald Isle. This is her first "place," and her ignorance of domestic affairs is only equalled by her adaptability and her cheerful willingness to learn. At first she didn't know the names of the ordinary household utensils, even mistaking on one occasion, when there was company at dinner, the ice pick for the carving steel. One day last week the bride had been doing some shopping, and among other things she bought an umbrella stand for the vestibule. It was late when she reached home. "Did any packages come?" she asked. "Yis, mum," was the reply. "The wagon cum wid th' cuspidore for th' umbrellas."

A certain Scotch minister was very anxious that an old couple in his parish should become teetotalers, an anxiety they in no wise shared. After much pressing, however, they consented, laying down as a condition that they should be allowed to keep a bottle of "Auld Kirk" for medicinal purposes. About a fortnight after, John began to feel his resolution weakening; but he was determined not to be the first to give way. In another week, however, he collapsed entirely. "Jenny, woman," he said, "I've an awfu' pain in my heid; ye micht gie me a wee drappie, an' see gin it'll dae me ony guid." "Weel, gudeman," she replied, "ye're owre late o' askin', for ever sin' that bottle cam' into the hoose, I've been bothered wi' pains i' my heid, 'tis a' dune, an' there's nae drappie left."

"Do you think that Miss Strong will make Jack a good wife?" McRounders inquired of Clubbey.

"I wouldn't say that, but you just bet your life she'll try to make him a good hubby."—Philadelphia Press.

To the Late G. W. Steevens.

It is difficult to realise that already two years have passed since the sad news came out of beleaguered Ladysmith that the brilliant journalist and author, G. W. Steevens, had been carried off by fever, carried off in early manhood, long before he had reached the natural zenith of his fame. Figures move quickly across the stage of life and are soon forgotten. For a moment, however, Steevens is recalled by an affectionate tribute, printed on the second anniversary of his death, Jan. 15 last, in The Daily Mail, on the staff of which journal he was engaged as war correspondent. The lines are as follows, and written, doubtless, by a former colleague:—

In Memoriam.

George Warrington Steevens.
Died January 15, 1900.

Too soon, alas! life's little day was done.
Swift as a meteor flashing on the night,
He soared to fame, and, flaming in his flight,
Vanished a-sudden ere his course was run.
And we—we wonder if the Southern sun
Has gathered in the glory of his light;
But only know the havoc of the blight
Which slew him in the shadow of the gun.

So brave and strong! his every glowing word
Wearing an athlete's sinew. Dearest, best
To Mother England, as he tracked her sword,
With patriot-pride to bind him to her breast.
Thus do we love the records of the strong,
And miss them most, and mourn them doubly long.

—Bernard Malcolm Ramsay.

The American Press.

We hear so much of the pro-Boerism and anti-Britishism of the American press that it is worth while occasionally drawing attention to the fact that this element of the press across the border does not have all its own way. Some extremists in Chicago have suggested a burlesque of the coronation of the British Sovereign on the date on which the event takes place in London, and simultaneously a demonstration in favor of the Boers. It is not likely that such an ill-natured proposal would meet with much backing from the common sense of the people of Chicago, and it would doubtless in any event be confined to the lower classes. It may have been condemned by other newspapers, but one of the foremost in opposing such an unneighborly demonstration is The Chicago Israelite, which deals with the subject in the following trenchant fashion:—"The pro-Boers of Chicago, who invited ex-President Kruger to be in the city on the day that King Edward is to be crowned in England, have taken an unwarrantable liberty with their fellow-citizens. They have a perfect right to indulge in any amount of horseplay in attempting to burlesque the coronation, and if they like that sort of thing, then it is the sort of thing they like. But as they happen to be in a very small minority, and as there are a great many reputable persons in Chicago who have no desire to insult a friendly nation by making a display of hatred which is as puerile as it is coarse, and as impotent as it is vulgar, they have no right to refer to themselves, as they do in their resolutions, as, 'We, the citizens of Chicago . . . .' Now, I have no doubt that many of them are citizens of Chicago, most of them probably having taken out their naturalization papers—but they are not 'the' citizens of Chicago, not by a million and several hundred thousand. In consideration of this, and with the 'three tailors of Tooley street' in view, they might have spared the remaining million and several hundreds of thousands of Chicagoans the humiliation of being included among the promoters of their proposed spectacle, and as endorsers of their malignant utterances."

Almost simultaneously, The New York Independent, perhaps the most important religious journal on the American continent, shows that it also can view a great international question calmly and dispassionately, and that in the unfortunate South African war it has grasped the vital facts of the case. In the course of a reply to a correspondent The Independent says:—

"If we have seemed to any reader to convey the impression that we believe that the power to rule better gives the right of invasion and conquest, we have been greatly misunderstood. We believe that so long as they do not traverse the rights of foreigners the citizens of any nation should be allowed all the political education they can get by the self-rule of no matter how much bad government or how many revolutions. We have said that accordingly we ought to withdraw from Cuba and allow its people to rule or ruin themselves. We heartily accept the principles laid down by our correspondent.

"As to the Transvaal, Britain made no war on that republic; she was guilty of no invasion. It was the Transvaal that declared war on Britain, and invaded British Natal as soon as Britain began to gather troops to defend the border against what was the proclaimed plan, for which munitions of war had long been gathered, to expel the British from South Africa.

"We knew perfectly well that the Dutch and French Boers constitute the majority of the population of Cape Colony, as well of the Orange Free State, and that these two districts have been much better governed than the Transvaal. But certainly it is British rather than Boer influence that is to be credited with the superior legislation as to the rights of the native races which prevails in Cape Colony, and only Boer perversity is chargeable with the blunders of government which oppressed the great majority of the population of the Transvaal, whether Uitlanders or blacks."

Herr Meyer Lutz tells the following little story in "Mainly About People:" "Conducting once in Bradford, I noticed that the clarionet player, a young but clever and steady lad, jumped up a good deal during the progress of the opera. I found that his father, who played the trombone, sat just behind him, and every now and then he gave his son a hink, with the remark, "Look out, Sammy! there be a flat a-coming!'"

Might be Worse.

One day, Mackintosh, having vexed him by calling O'Coigly "a rascal," Parr immediately rejoined, "Yes, Jemmie, he was a bad man, but he might have been worse; he was an Irishman, but he might have been a Scotchman; he was a priest, but he might have been a lawyer; he was a republican, but he might have been an apostate."

"Save the Child."

That is the heartfelt cry of many a mother who sees her beloved child wasting and fading day by day. Sometimes it's too late for medical aid to help the child.

It is so weak, so lacking in stamina that there is no vantage ground of help. One of the results of the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription preceding maternity is a strong, healthy child. Thousands of mothers testify to this. Frequently mothers write, "I was never able to raise a child before using 'Favorite Prescription,'" or "All my other children are sickly except this one, and I took your 'Favorite Prescription' this time."

All the child's strength comes from the mother. "Favorite Prescription" gives the mother strength to give her child.

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription;" it contains neither opium, cocaine, nor any other narcotic. It is a purely vegetable and perfectly harmless medicine in any condition of the female system.

Accept no substitute for "Favorite Prescription." There is nothing "just as good" for woman's ills.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. Correspondence confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I am so thankful for what Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has done for me," writes Mrs. John T. Smith, of Slocan, British Columbia (Box 30). "It helped me through the long months of pregnancy and I have a big, strong baby girl, the most healthy of all my three, and it cured me of a disease which was taking away all my strength."

Free. Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Send 50 one-cent stamps for the book in cloth binding, or 31 one-cent stamps for paper covered. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

King Edward VII. Notepaper

is "quite English, you know." It was very popular when sold under the name of "Plashwater," but never so fashionable as now.

IT IS THE GENUINE "PLASHWATER."

Other papers sold in Canada now under that name are spurious imitations. Ask for "King Edward VII." Note Paper, with envelopes to match, and you will have the authentic kind.

The ONLY MORNING DAILY
BETWEEN TORONTO AND OTTAWA.

A Great Man and a Child.

IN his reminiscences of Horace Greeley in the "Youth's Companion's" series of Recollections of Famous Editors, Noah Brooks says that Greeley could bear a great sorrow or a great disappointment with the fortitude of a stoic, but a trifling annoyance would provoke him to an outburst of wrath that was simply childish. The death of his little boy, his only and idolized son, was to him an awful blow. No man can know what agony the stricken father silently endured, his grief coining the drops of his heart's blood. But a typographical blunder, especially if it were in one of his own writings, drove him into spasms; then his maledictions on the offending typesetter and proofreader were something blood-curdling to hear.

One morning he went swiftly down to the "Tribune" office to find the compositor who had made a bad error in setting the types for one of his editorial articles in the paper. Bounding upstairs into the composing-room, with blue fire in his eyes and shaking the paper folded across the page to show the offence, he shrieked, "Show me the man! Show me the man that did this!" The error had already been made a topic of discussion in the office, and the culprit, a very old man who had been with Mr. Greeley on the "New Yorker" and on the "Tribune" ever after, came out from behind his case and tremulously pleaded guilty. The editor, standing there in the full height and strength of his manhood, looked down upon the little old man with a startled air, and then, turning away, invited anybody in the office to kick him (Greeley) downstairs.

Of his education, Mr. Greeley said it "was picked up by the way." It is natural that one who knew him should wonder what manner of man he might have been if he had been trained and disciplined in an institution of learning. He might have been a very much greater man, thinks Mr. Brooks; and then, too, his raw resources might not have been so strong and abundant under a scholastic rule.

When he was a lad of nine years he was offered free tuition in the academy at Exeter, New Hampshire. His parents declined the offer, partly through pride, Mr. Greeley thought, although nominally because his mother was unwilling to part with him at that tender age. Later in life, speaking of this failure to secure an academic course of instruction, he said: "I suppose I ought to be sorry, but I am not much."

Mr. Greeley affected contempt for college-educated men, and was accustomed to say, with great emphasis, "Of all cattle, the most useless in a newspaper office is a college-bred man!" This seemed to be an affectation intended to justify his own lack of scholarship, as if he were the shining example of what a great editor could be without special training. As a matter of fact, adds Mr. Brooks, during my term of service on the "Tribune" a majority of the men on the staff were college-bred men.

Some Epigrams on Growing Old.

Max O'Rell, in an article on "Old Women," says, among other things:

"A woman who knows how to grow old gracefully is a delight; but an old woman, whose wrinkled grimaces try to be inviting, voluptuous smiles, whose skeleton, loaded with diamonds, seems to crack as if on the point of crumbling to dust, who has a painted face, dyed hair, and false teeth—that woman makes me shudder; it is the most horrible sight in the world.

"For a man, love is an expectation at twenty, an irresistible desire at thirty, a habit at forty, an indiscretion or a hesitation at sixty, and a profanation at seventy. For a woman love is a dream at twenty, an experience at thirty and a reminiscence after forty.

"Balzac, the greatest authority on love and women, and the most wonderful dissector of the human heart who ever lived, says that the best and most artistic effort of a clever and refined man is at fifty-two, and that a woman is perfect only at thirty-five. There is hope for some of us.

"Happy the woman who knows how to grow old! Happy her husband especially!

"I have heard it said that few women know how to get old. However true this may be, the old woman who believes that she is still attractive is much less ridiculous than the old man who believes that he is still irresistible."

The Considerate Dog.

A yellow dog who had bayed the moon ever since sunset was finally approached by a sedate old mastiff about 3 o'clock in the morning.

"See here, friend," said the mastiff, "will you be so good as to explain why it is you get so much comfort out of barking all night at the moon?"

"Well, it's this way," explained the yellow dog: "You see, I am afflicted with insomnia, and it takes an acute form which makes me feel obliged to bark at something; so I, being a considerate dog, bark at the moon, knowing that it cannot hear me. Therefore it is not annoyed in the least, and I am afforded much relief."

"So you are actuated purely by considerate motives and a sincere desire to spare anyone annoyance?"

"Just so!" and the yellow dog wagged his tail proudly.

"But did it never occur to you to consider your neighbors also?" demanded the mastiff.

The yellow dog was overwhelmed with confusion. He listened for a moment to the hitherto unnoticed profanity and tearing of hair that was going on all over the neighborhood. Then he tucked his tail beneath him and slunk under the house.

Moral: Before striking at an enemy be sure you have no friends within range.

Greeley's Editorial When Lincoln Died.

THE following very remarkable story is told in "James Russell Lowell and His Friends," by Edward Everett Hale. He is writing of Sidney H. Gay, then managing editor of the New York "Tribune:"

"I have never seen in print Gay's story of that fearful night when Lincoln was killed. But one hears it freely repeated in conversation, and I see no reason why it should not be printed now.

"With the news of the murder of Lincoln, there came to New York every other terrible message. The office of the 'Tribune,' of course, received echoes of all the despatches which showed the alarm at Washington. There were orders for the arrest of this man, there were suspicions of the loyalty of that man. No one knew what the morrow might bring.

"In the midst of the anxiety of such hours, to Mr. Gay, the acting editor of that paper, there entered the foreman of the typesetting-room. He brought with him the proof of Mr. Greeley's leading article, as he had left it before leaving the city for the day. It was a brutal, bitter, sarcastic, personal attack on President Lincoln—the man who, when Gay read the article, was dying in Washington.

"Gay read the article, and asked the foreman if he had any private place where he could lock up the type, to which no one but himself had access. The foreman said he had. Gay bade him tie up the type, lock the galley with this article in his cupboard, and tell no one what he had told him. Of course no such article appeared in the 'Tribune' the next morning.

"But when Gay arrived the next day at the office, he was met with the news that 'the old man' wanted him, and the intimation that 'the old man' was very angry. Gay waited upon Greeley.

"'Are you there, Mr. Gay? I have been looking for you. They tell me you ordered my leader out of this morning's paper. Is it your paper or mine? I should like to know if I cannot print what I choose in my own newspaper!' This in a great rage.

"'The paper is yours, Mr. Greeley. The article is in type upstairs, and you can use it when you choose. Only this, Mr. Greeley: I know New York, and I hope and believe, before God, that there is so much virtue in New York that, if I had let the article go into this morning's paper, there would not be one brick upon another in the "Tribune" office now. Certainly, I should be sorry if there were.'

"Mr. Greeley was cowed. He said not a word, nor ever alluded to the subject again. I suppose the type is locked up in the cupboard of the 'Tribune' office at this hour.

"It was by this sort of service that Mr. Gay earned Mr. Wilson's praise that 'he kept Mr. Greeley up to the war.'"

A Boom Town.

Bridgewater, Ontario, once a boom town of note, was brought into existence by one of the strangest gold finds and crazes in the history of this continent. Nearly thirty years ago a farmer's wife was searching the woods near their farm for a sow that had strayed, and, becoming thirsty, stopped to get a drink from a spring. Slipping, she fell upon a small, loose rock, which rolled to her feet, and which proved to be a twenty-pound nugget of almost pure gold. Bridgewater at that time was nearly forty miles from the nearest railroad, and the present site of the town was nothing but a wilderness, but inside of six months what had been a burned-over, barren wilderness was converted into a substantial city of nearly five thousand people.

In digging a shaft about a mile south of the town site, an immense quarry of the purest white marble was found, and the town was practically built of marble, for it has to-day the only hotel, church school, court house, and private dwellings constructed entirely of white marble in the world, and a mile north of the town are an abandoned axe factory and grist mill, whose foundations are built of the same beautiful material. And now comes the strangest part of the story. During the building of the town thousands of men prospected the entire country, and shafts and tunnels were driven—some of them nearly one hundred feet deep—but, strange as it may seem, there was never enough gold found to pay the cost of a single shaft or tunnel sunk or run in the entire district.

A Sensible Bishop.

The Italian Bishop of Fano, reports "La Science pour Tous," has sent out to the priests of his diocese the following circular:

"1. In all churches, immediately after feast days on which there have been very large congregations, the floors must be disinfected by means of wood sawdust soaked in one-tenth per cent. solution of corrosive sublimate. On ordinary days they must be frequently swept, after sprinkling them with water so as to raise no dust.

"2. Every week, and even oftener, the pews and confessionals must be cleaned with sponges and cloths moistened with pure water.

"3. Every week, and oftener if necessary, the grills of the confessionals are to be washed and polished.

"4. The holy water receptacles must be emptied every week, or oftener if necessary, and washed with hot water or a solution of corrosive sublimate."

The same journal comments as follows:

"That the provisions of the circular may be carried out, the bishop has instituted a service of inspection, and requires the payment of fines into the diocesan treasury for transgression of any of these hygienic rules. It is to be desired that the Bishop of Fano's example should be imitated by church authorities in other countries."

Great Things Probable.

A Chicago professor is lecturing on "How to Lie When Sleeping." The politicians are much interested. In the heat of a campaign, much time has been lost because lying has been limited to waking hours. The effects of the learned professor's discovery upon the next campaign are awaited with interest.—Nebraska City "Conservative."

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best!"

"If a ship," began the comedian with the rose tinted beard, "is 100 feet long and 40 feet wide, and its masts are 150 feet high, and the bo'sun is bowlegged, what does the captain weigh?"

"It weighs the anchor!" hoarsely shouted the audience, as it grabbed the benches to prevent itself sliding on masse and doing violence to the comedian.

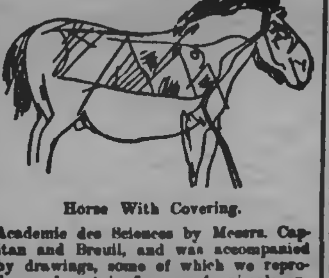
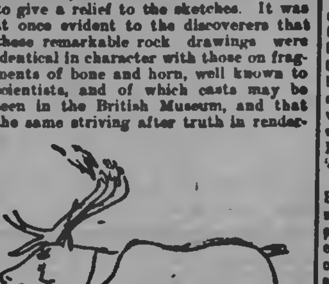
Man's Aesthetic Yearnings.

Among the most interesting of the discoveries made by the scientists who devote their time to researches into the Palaeolithic ages—thousands of years before recorded history begins—are those which prove that even in those dim and distant ages man, such as he was, held aesthetic yearnings. Few and far between are such discoveries; but when, once in a while, they are made, they cause a sympathetic thrill of interest in the bosoms of learned societies, and even of those who, not having time to be learned, feel the magnetic attraction of the "human document."

The Daily Graphic's illustrations, which are printed herewith, refer to one of the most important of such discoveries recently made in France, in the Grotto of Combarelles, near Eyzies, in Dordogne. "The discovery," says The Graphic, "was communicated to the Academie des Sciences by Messrs. Capitan and Breuil, and was accompanied by drawings, some of which we reproduce, of certain figures of animals engraved on the walls of the grotto on each side of its length. The drawings are in some places quite deeply engraved in the rock; in others they are only scratched; here and there is an effort to give a relief to the sketches. It was at once evident to the discoverers that these remarkable rock drawings were identical in character with those on fragments of bone and horn, well known to scientists, and of which casts may be seen in the British Museum, and that the same striving after truth in rendering the characteristics of the animals was to be seen in the Grotto of Combarelles, proving the familiarity of the artist with the appearance of the animals themselves. So that the artist was contemporary with the animal he drew. Now, one of these animals being a hairy mammoth, and the other a reindeer, it is evident that when those creatures roamed the hills and valleys of South Central France man was also there—that is to say, in the Palaeolithic or older stone age.

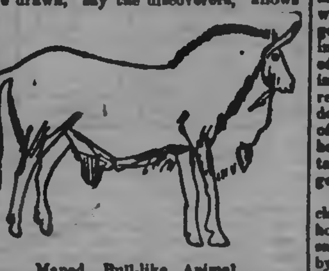


Horse With Covering.

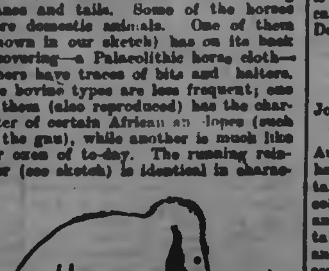


Running Reindeer.

"The precision with which the figures are drawn," say the discoverers, "allows us to recognise the species of the animals so represented. The equine types are sometimes large headed, with short, stiff manes—sometimes with flowing manes and tails. Some of the horses were domestic animals. One of them (shown in our sketch) has on its back a covering—a Palaeolithic horse cloth—others have traces of bits and halters. The bovine types are less frequent; one of them (also reproduced) has the character of certain African antelopes (such as the gnu), while another is much like our oxen of to-day. The running reindeer (see sketch) is identical in character with those which are engraved on bone and of the same period. The representations of the mammoth (of which fourteen were exhibited to the Academie des Sciences) are very characteristic. Some are more hairy than others." With these rock drawings are strange signs engraved in the rock: a circle with the semblance of human features, a double outlined lozenge on the middle of the body of one of the horses, others of M-like shape, semicircles, etc., all of mysterious and unknown significance. Since the memorable day when the first piece of engraved bone was discovered, embedded in the stalagmite of the caverns once tenanted by human beings, there has been no discovery which has caused so great an interest as this one in the Stalagmite Cavern of Combarelles. We have in these rude and yet skilful efforts of the human race deeply interesting evidence that man once chased with mammoth and with reindeer the Arctic plains of southern France.



Maned, Bull-like Animal.



Mammoth.

Piper Findlater, shot in both legs at Dargai, had his forerunner, nearly a century earlier, at Rolica, in the Peninsula, under Wellington:—"A piper of the 71st had his leg broken. Sitting down on his knapsack, the brave man cried out to his mates:—'I canna gang wi' ye, lads, but de'il tak' me if ye shall want music.'"

A Flag for the Empire.

The London Express is authority for the following late word on the vexed subject of a flag for the empire:—

"An empire flag! At last an ensign which shall adequately represent Great Britain both at home and beyond seas seems assured. The Express is able to announce that the King has received with favor the suggestion that a new flag was needed to keep pace with the growing empire, and that a finished design for the same will be submitted to his Majesty next week. Mr. C. D. Bennett, the cousin of a distinguished colonial Governor, and himself well known in several of the colonies, has been entrusted with the responsibility of preparing this design. Mr. Bennett has had many difficulties to contend with, in evolving an harmonious and artistic design which should fittingly express British sovereignty. He has succeeded, however, in giving our colonial possessions full representation, without sacrificing the chief feature of the old flag—the Cross of St. George—which is in itself a familiar emblem of England's power in every quarter of the globe.

"The following is a description of the new empire flag, as given officially to The Express:—

"On an absolutely white ground is embroidered a golden sun—typical of a race on whose dominions the sun never sets—shining on a large red Cross of St. George, representing, of course, the empire at home. In the left-hand corner is an Imperial Crown, the sign of one great empire, embracing all creeds, tolerating all beliefs, but under one great Imperial idea.

"Underneath the crown, on a blue scroll is inscribed the Latin rendering of the motto—'the empire on which the sun never sets'—which is the proudest boast of every Englishman:

"'Imperium cui nullus
Solis occasus.'

"In the righthand top corner of the flag will be placed the particular device representative of the empire beyond the sea. For instance, the flag to be used in India will contain the star of India in the righthand top corner.

"The flag as used in Australia will contain instead the device of the new Commonwealth, while the Canadian and other colonial Governments will add to the design their own badge, for use on all 'empire flags' in that particular part of the world.

"This design has been warmly commended by several persons high in authority to whom it has been exhibited. It now remains for his Majesty to place the final seal of approval. Mr. Bennett has notified the King that the design awaits his Majesty's pleasure, and it will probably be exhibited to him next week. Should it be approved by his Majesty, the new design will become 'official' without delay.

"To the King himself is due this idea. His Majesty has realized that the present national emblem does not fully express the dignity and importance of the empire. When the Prince and Princess of Wales started on their tour nearly a year ago they were especially instructed to carefully note every shade of colonial opinion on the subject—whether a new flag was desired and what each colony expected. Everywhere the answer was the same: 'Give us a new flag.' When the popular verdict was reported to the King, his Majesty at once signified a desire to have a proper design prepared. After weeks of toil the design is ready, which many people believe will eventually be flying at the mastheads of our warships and over British possessions at home and abroad."

The King's Champion.

The King's Champion, Mr. Frank Scaman Dymoke, is a man of the moment. In a timely description of his office and claims written for Pearson's Magazine the following interesting passage occurs:—

"The Champions of Britain were originally paid for their services by being allowed to hold Scrivelsby Manor by what is technically called Knight Serjeantry, a term applied to lands held in exchange for a yearly service rendered to the reigning Sovereign. The holding of estates by Knight Sergeantry, a remnant of the old feudal system, was done away with during the Restoration of 1660, so that the present Champion holds his estates exactly as other estates are held by the nobility or county gentlemen of England.

"His sole recompense now consists in claiming a gold cup, together with the horse used at the coronation, with the saddle, armor and furniture. The horse, by the way, is always supposed to be the second best in the Sovereign's stable—the best being used by the Sovereign himself. At the coronation of George III. the Champion, Mr. John Dymoke, is said to have ridden the horse which carried George II. during the battle of Dettingen."

Emperor Francis Joseph.

"The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria is very plain in his tastes and habits. At 6 o'clock in the morning he takes his breakfast, consisting of some cold meat, coffee and fresh-made bread and cake. Between 12 and 1 o'clock he takes his dejeuner, two dishes of meat and some ordinary pastry. Dinner is served at 6 o'clock sharp. All his meals are served in his library at his writing desk. Not even a tablecloth is spread. His personal valet on duty receives the dishes in an antechamber on a large tray, and puts the tray before the Emperor on his desk. Very often the Emperor takes a spoonful of soup between two signatures. He is a very busy man. With the meal, the menu for next day's dinner is sent up and laid before the Emperor. It contains two soups, patties, fish, two entrees, two roasts, two desserts, pastry, cheese, fruit, etc., and the Emperor with a blue pencil crosses out whatever he does not want. The Emperor does not care much for wine. He prefers a glass of beer. Nor does he indulge in expensive Havana cigars. A plain home-made cigar, the so-called Virginia cigar, long and thin, with a straw running through it, is his favorite smoke. These cigars cost only five kreuzer—that is, about twopence apiece."

Englishman—"You have some pretty high buildings in Chicago, haven't you?" Chicorgan (in London)—"I should say we have. Why, the tops of some of them are covered with snow all the year round."

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with us—
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, so black as soot, it strews
The streets and pavements where we go,
We tramp it under foot and kick—
'Tis not the snow we used to know.

Interesting to Smokers.

A New York Sun editorial the other day was of interest to smokers—even, possibly, to reformers who include in their list the "holy herb nicotian":—

A sacrificial fire has been burning in Clayton, N.J., and the savor of it still tickles Gloucester County nostrils. The Anti-Nicotine Club brought to its rooms all its idols, cigars, cigarettes, pipes, tobacco, and burned them up in the stove. So fierce for the moment is the rage in Clayton against the holy herb nicotian. The case of the Vice-President of the club, Mr. Samuel Turner, is especially glorious or sad, according to the taste and fancy of him who considers it. He is 75; he has smoked for 63 years; with reasonable prudence and longevity he might hope to hold the smokers' record, for this county at least, and puff away in peace and comfort for a whole green century. He throws away the laurel in his grasp. He makes fuel of the comrades of two generations. In the heat and fury of the Clayton anti-nicotine movement he gives up the charmer of pain, the consoler of sadness, the blameless companion of reverie, the silent partner of books, the lubricator of digestion, the fountain of philosophy, the mother of good temper, the nurse of sound old age, the old, faithful, harmless, constant friend.

A boy may toss away his cigarette and a youth his cigar or briarwood, worn for show and ornament rather than for use, and feel no loss. But wait till you come to forty year. Nobody really takes his degree in the first and greatest University of Virginia before that age. His bacon isn't really cured till then. Then he becomes entitled to the freedom of the city of Nicotia. Then, if he has eyes to pierce through the smoke, he begins to see how the world goes round. For instance, what made the Elizabethans great? Tobacco. What made Bismarck great? Tobacco. Take such a philosopher and let him come to sixty year, as he cannot fail to do unless you crush him with automobiles or dynamite. For twenty years more he has worshipped at the fragrant altar. Surely he will not be turned away from it now. Surely he will obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime.

The case of Samuel Turner of Clayton shows what capacity of self-renunciation exists in the bosom of the veteran smoker. But why do people leave off smoking? Well, one reason is that there is a lot of confounded doctors who make it their pleasure to knock yours in the head. They tell you point-blank: "You positively must stop smoking;" and all the time the rascals have cigar cases in their pockets. That's the worst pang of the condemned smoker.

The Guards' New Uniform.

The thirteen hundred Guards who left the other day for South Africa were accoutred in the new uniform which has displaced the khaki, which was the all-prevailing hue at the beginning of the war. Popular interest," said The Times in describing their inspection by the King, "in these ceremonies is as keen to-day as it was when the first contingent departed for the war. Long before noon the approaches to the barracks were crowded with spectators who had not the privilege of admission to the parade ground, and were content to look on from Birdcagewalk and the railings of St. James' Park. It was not an unfavorable morning for such a display. A sharp frost nipped the air and a light mist hung over the park. Within the enclosure was a scene of picturesque activity. Guardsmen, in long grey overcoats and busbies, moved about among the ever-increasing crowd of civilians; bands mustered, and men in the new campaigning uniform paraded for a preliminary inspection by their officers. Smart and serviceable is the judgment that will be passed on the new kit. The color is a blend of khaki and drab—drab tunic, drab breeches, drab puttles, and drab hat. The hat is a novelty in shape, being broader and more substantial in appearance than the ordinary soft felt with which we have become familiar. Rakishly looped up at the side—on the right for Grenadiers and Coldstreams, who wear the white and the red hackle; on the left for the Scots, who, instead of hackle, have the tartan badge of white and red—it is not merely a comfortable, but an effective and even picturesque head-dress. And it has this further advantage, that it is not uniform, and, therefore makes men less conspicuous objects for the enemy's rifles. In the early days of the war our soldiers were easily distinguished, even when lying scattered on the drab veldt, because of the uniformity of the helmet, though covered with khaki, whereas the Colonial troops in their soft felt hats were invisible from even a short distance. The accoutrements, however, have little of the quality of invisibility. The bandoliers are of light grey canvas, the belts are white, the haversack is white, the blanket is rolled in a white cover. Only the water-bottle and the cover of the "billy" or canteen which hangs from the shoulder over the blanket are of khaki color. The buttons, too, are of shining brass—buttons that are rarely seen after men have been once under the close fire of Boers. Yet there is this to be said—a few days on the African veldt will tone down the glaring whites to a neutral tint."

Big Application for Cash.

One of the recent incidents in the invasion of England by the United States has to do with an American boy of the "smart" order. Arising out of an application in court to presume the death of one Alfred Richardson, who had been manager of some cycle works at Middlesbrough, and who had mysteriously disappeared, it was elicited that he had been advertised for in some American papers, and that one reply was received from H. C. Starnes of Virginia, U.S., a boy purporting to be nine years of age, who alleged that the deceased had married his mother in 1883. There were also two enclosures from a man represented to be a County Court Judge. Asked by the solicitors for particulars, the boy further wrote: "If there is a Estate over thear coming to Alfred Richardson, of corse that is a coming to me, and I want to get just as I can." Another document came, said to be from a County Court Judge, which began: "This certifies that Mr. H. C. Starnes has brought before me 20 good old citizens of Scott country—and proved that his father was Mr. Alfred Richardson." It was signed "Judge." The English Judge said it seemed impossible that a County Court Judge anywhere could have written this, and he granted leave forthwith to presume the death.

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher told him in one thing and said: "Now while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone fifty times." On the other side was written "I have went home."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Our New Book on Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents, scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

POWER FORM NASSAU

Is Now Running the Machinery in the General Electric Works

The new power house at Nassau is completed and the first power was transmitted over the wires yesterday. Only one water-wheel is in position at the present, but a second one will be put in in a few days. There was about 250 horse-power transmitted over the wires yesterday although it is possible to send nearly three times that amount. The power station with the full equipment of machinary will be in runnnig order in a few days.

The company can pride themselves on having the most up-to-date plant in the country. The work of excavating for the foundation was a long and very tedious job and made the work on the erection of the building very slow. For the past few weeks, however, the work has been pushed ahead in good shape with the result that the building is completed and they are now in a position to supply their own power.

THE SUCCESSFUL PUPILS

The Scholars Who Won the Prizes for Scientific Temperance

A large number of people attended the presentation of prizes and the concert in the Y. M. C. A. hall last night. A very pleasing programme, consisting of songs, readings, recitations, etc., was presented.

The most interesting part of the programme was the presentation of cash prizes offered by the W.C.T.U. to the pupils taking the highest number of marks at the examinations last year, on Scientific Temperance. The winners of the prizes are John Corkery, first, and Fred Pope and Miss E. Crumley, equal, second. The first prize was $5, and the other prizes $2 to each.

Mrs. James Kendrey presided at the meeting, and in announcing the prize winners, stated that she was very pleased to see them take such a deep interest in that very important subject "Temperance."

The presentation was made by Mr. J. W. Garvin.

A number of ministers were present and delivered short and very instructive addresses.

FOUND IT.

Coffee Was Doing the Work in Good Style Measures for Results

Members of the same family are affected differently by coffee drinking. One may feel the effect in a disordered stomach while another may have no trouble with the stomach so far as known, but have palpitation of the heart and finally organic heart disease, or perhaps in another the kidneys may become affected.

As an illustration, a family in Murphysboro, Ill., reports an experience.

Mrs. Cole discovered that the sour stomach and nervous, restless nights were caused by coffee drinking. Her mother suffered from nervousness when coffee was used, while the brother of the family became a wreck directly from coffee drinking.

Mrs. Cole, in her letter, says, referring to her brother, "He went from one physician to another and his case puzzled them all until he had tried 11 different physicians. Some thought he had apoplexy, others locomotor ataxia, some advised operations to relieve the pressure at certain points, altogether his case became so alarming that we were afraid to have him alone. He frequently fainted away, and was in a most wretched condition.

Finally one of the physicians suggested that possibly coffee brought on some of the symptoms, so he was persuaded to give up coffee and begin the use of Postum Food Coffee. Then he began to recover, and day by day the old troubles left. Now he has gotten entirely well, has gained about 30 lbs. and is the picture of health. Of course he and his family use Postum regularly. He would as soon drink a spoonful of poison as of old fashioned coffee.

When we first began to make Postum it was boiled but a few minutes and none of us liked it, but since we began making it properly by having it boil long enough to bring out the flavor we all consider it superior to the old fashioned coffee. It is delicious when made right and that is easy.

A number of our friends have been cured of various ailments by leaving off coffee and using Postum. With Mrs. —— the coffee caused a smothering sensation, bloating and serious trouble with the heart. She has entirely recovered since changing from common coffee to Postum."

A ROYAL ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

King Edward Appreciated "Tributes of Love and Loyalty."

"Miss Edwards has received the following message from His Majesty, King Edward VII regarding the receipt of her booklet entitled Tributes of Love and Loyalty" which contained a number of short poems including the one written by Mr. J. W. Garvin, entitled "Victoria the Good." The message is as follows:

Marlborough House,
Pall Mall S. W.
8 Feb. 1902.

Madam,—I am commanded by the King to thank you for the collection of Poems from Canada, in memory of Queen Victoria.

His Majesty is pleased to accept the collection, with which he is greatly touched and gratified.

A Terrible Disease That Comes Unsuspectingly, and When Unheeded It Drags Its Victims to Death

Paine's Celery Compound

Has Wrought Thousands of Cure After Failures of Physicians

To-day, kidney disease is as common as rheumatism. Thousands of men and women, living in fancied security, have kidney trouble in some form that must develop from day to day and end in death, unless wise and proper treatment is at once taken advantage of.

Have you any of the following symptoms: backache, frequent urinating, fluttering of the heart, nausea, vomiting, a dry, harsh skin, fever, coated tongue, extreme thirst, a fickle appetite, acid bitter taste, deposit of mucous after urination, sour stomach, dropsical swelling, loss of memory, scalding sensations and constipation? If you experience any of these symptoms, begin at once with Paine's Celery Compound, which will quickly put to flight all symptoms of disordered kidneys. It is nature's true remedy, the only one you can rely upon with certainty of cure. Mr. M. Maher, hairdresser, of St. John's, Nfld., gratefully writes as follows:

"I suffered terribly for two years from kidney trouble and dyspepsia. I was completely run-down and could not eat or sleep. One of the ablest city doctors attended me, but no good results followed his work. Happily a friend advised me to use Paine's Celery Compound. I procured a supply, and the first dose relieved me. I have used eight bottles and now sleep well, appetite is good, and I am as strong as ever before. I recommend Paine's Celery Compound to all."

King Edward VII. Notepaper

is "quite English, you know." It was very popular when sold under the name of "Plashwater," but never so fashionable as now.

IT IS THE GENUINE "PLASHWATER."

Other papers sold in Canada now under that name are spurious imitations. Ask for "King Edward VII." Note Paper, with envelopes to match, and you will have the authentic kind.

The Great Annual Spring Sale

—WILL BE HELD ON—

TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY,

March 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th,

AT 10.30 O'CLOCK EACH DAY.

TUESDAY, MARCH 11th.

The catalogue will be published on the morning of the sale, so that it will contain full particulars of all the entries, consisting of Clydesdale and General Purpose Mares, Geldings and Stallions, all purchased direct from the farmers and breeders, specially for this great sale. This will positively be the finest collection of heavy horses and medium weight blocks ever offered by auction in Toronto. The usual trial and warranty will be given with every horse.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12th.

The following is a short description of a few of the strictly high-class roadsters, trotters, and high-steppers to be sold. Only horses of the highest type will be offered on this day, so that purchasers who want the best will be able to satisfy themselves. All the horses for Wednesday's sale will be on view at the "Annex," Simcoe and Nelson streets, from now to the day of the sale.

The sale will commence with the following consignment of highly-bred and exceptionally well-selected trotting stock, the property of Messrs. Bedford Bros., Chatham, who are selling their entire racing stable on account of Mr. A. G. Bedford having accepted a position as trainer with an extensive breeder of trotters. Special attention is called to the "Wild Brinos" in this lot. It is a well-known fact that there is no safer investment than the produce of this wonderful Canadian stallion, standing as he does, third in the list of great speed-producing sires of America for the year 1901. Wild Brino, 2.19 1-4, is the sire of:

DAN FINISTER — Bay stallion, 15.2 hands; foaled 1898; bred by William Henson, Louisville, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros., Chatham, Ont., by Roadmaster 2.28 3-4.

First Dam, by Black Diamond, full brother to Little Joe, 2.17.

Second Dam, by Kentucky Jack.

Third Dam, Thoroughbred.

Roadmaster, 2.28 1-4, (sire of Harold H., 2.04; Roady, 2.12 1-4; Master Roy, 2.20 1-4; Paddy D., 2.18 1-4, and several other fast ones yet unmarked), by Hambletonian Downing, Dam by London Traveller.

Note.—This colt, although perfectly green, has racehorse speed right now, and certainly looks and acts like the real thing; he will show for himself on day of sale; should pace in 2.10 next season if given a chance.

LITTLE JACK, 2.29 1-4 — Bay gelding, 15.3 hands; foaled 1895; bred by John Mount, Chatham, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros, Chatham, Ont.; by son of Wild Brino.

First dam by Wilkes Chief, son of Red Wilkes.

Second dam by Old Rooker, dam of Engerette, 2.14 3-4. sire of Nellie Rooker, 2.10 1-4, Maud Pollard, 2.13 3-4, and several others, and sire of the dam of Attor, 2.11 1-4; Frank Rysdike, 2.08 3-4, Roady, 2.12 1-4; Ella Eddy, 2.12, and several others better than 2.15.

Third dam by Blenkiron.

Note.—This gelding is a high acting trotter on the roads and a very fast pacer when at speed, has been a mile in 2.24, and a quarter in 33 seconds. A race horse right now.

LADY HOUSTON — Bay mare, 15.3 hands; foaled 1898; bred by John Houston, Chatham, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros., Chatham, Ont.; by Wild Brino, 2.19 3-4.

First dam by Old Rooker.

Second dam Thoroughbred.

Note.—This is a very stylish driver, and should, if trained, make a trotter, as she will go in a 3-minute clip on the road, with extra good action. Is direct from the breeder, and has not yet been handled for speed. Remarkably handsome, very kind and reliable.

WEDDING RING — Bay mare, 16 hands; foaled 1897; bred by Mr. Knight, Ridgetown, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros., Chatham, Ont.; by Gold Ring, 2.12 1-2.

First dam by Almedium.

Second dam by Routeon.

Note.—This stylish big mare is an extraordinary fast and true gaited trotter. Has shown a mile in 2.41 3-4, with four weeks training a quarter in 36 seconds; can now show much faster, and is one of the best prospects for a race horse we have ever owned. Be sure to ride behind this mare before the sale, as she is well broken and will show for herself.

ANTHLE—Bay mare, 16 hands; foaled 1897; bred by Peter Forbam, Wallaceburg, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros., Chatham, Ont.; by Textile.

First dam by Prince Edward, son of William Welsh, by Hambletonian (10) Wm. Welsh sired dam of Connor, 2.05 1-4, etc.

Second dam by Stranger, brother of Old Rooker, dam of Black Patti, 2.22 1-4.

Thirddam by Fitzsimmons' St. Lawrence.

Note.—This grand young filly possesses extreme speed right now, and the man who is fortunate enough to secure her is buying no has-been, but a strictly high-class mare, ready for the races as soon as the bell taps. Her breeding needs no comments, as will be seen is in the nick of fashion, has been a mile in 2.24 and a quarter in 33 seconds last fall with only two months' training over a poor half-mile track. Wears only quarter boots, as good gaited as lives, and very steady going, a perfect family mare, or speedway prospect after her racing days are over.

ERIE MAID, 2.29 1-4—Black mare, 15 1 1-2 hands; foaled 1894; bred by Mr. Muckle of Amherstburg, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros., Chatham, Ont.; by Indemion.

First dam, by ——

Second dam, untraced; Indemion, by Dictator, dam by Hambletonian.

Note.—Erie Maid not only possesses extreme speed, but is a grand individual, being very cobby built; she is a most desirable family mare, and can be driven by a lady with the most absolute safety; that she is a game, reliable race mare is shown by her past races; her present record is no indication of her speed, as she has shown miles in 2.20 over half mile track.

TOPSY MOUNT—Black mare; 15.2 hands; foaled 1897; bred by John Mount, Chatham, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros., by Wild Brino, 2.19 3-4.

First dam, by Old Rooker; sire of Dams of Attar, 2.11 1-4; Frank Rysdike, 2.08 3-4; Roady, 2.12 1-4; Little Jim, 2.18.

Second dam, by Combination.

Third Dam, by Blenkiron, thoroughbred.

Fourth Dam, by New York.

Dam of Bonnie Annie, 2.26 3-4.

Bonnie Doone, 2.24 1-2.

General Brock, 2.29 1-4.

General Riel, 2.31 1-2.

Black Hawk, the sire of the General Brock, 2.29 1-4.

Note.—This handsome filly, although perfectly green, can show 2.30 speed trotting, and is as good gaited as lives.

It is to be hoped she will be given a chance this year, as no surer race mare was ever offered at auction; a trial before the sale will convince anyone that Topsy Mount will be heard from.

MISS FORHAN—Brown filly; 15.2 hands; foaled 1890; bred by Peter Forhan, Wallaceburg, Ont.; owned by Bedford Bros., by Textile.

First Dam, by Blenkiron, thoroughbred; sire of Dam of Nellie Rooker, 2.10 1-4; Gen. Brooke, 2.24 1-4.

Second Dam, by Stranger.

Third Dam, by Fitzsimmons, St. Lawrence.

Note.—This filly is only nicely broken, but can show 2.40 clip on the pace, without hopples, excellent legs; very heavy bone; will make a 16-hand mare; lifey, but very quiet.

CHARLIE—Bay Gelding; 6 years; 15.2 hands; sound, kind and reliable in harness; a strong, serviceable driver, and can pace a 2.50 clip.

BRINO BELLE—Brown mare; 6 years; 15.2 1-2 hands; sound, kind and reliable in harness; square trotter, with extraordinary action; very breedy-looking, with lots of substance; one of the most desirable gentleman's roadsters we have ever offered; sired by Wild Brino, 2.19 1-4; dam a standard-bred mare, bred in Michigan; Brino Belle is direct from the breeder and has no special training, but can show a 2.30 clip, and is an excellent long-distance roadster.

BONNIE BESS—Brown mare; 5 years; 16 hands; sound, kind and gentle in every way; a model gentleman's roadster and family driver; very attractive looking; extra good all round action, and can go twelve miles an hour, with ease; sired by "Bon Ton," dam by John E. Rysdike.

FORESTER—Brown gelding, 6 years, 16 hands, sound, kind and reliable in single or double harness and in the stable. A fine, handsome, strong, well-bred family horse, absolutely fearless, and a prompt roadster up to twelve miles an hour and better. Ask to see this horse in harness before the sale.

Lots 13 to 17—Particulars not yet received.

VICTOR AND RICHMOND—Pair brown geldings, 6 and 7 years old, sound, kind and true in single or double harness. Handsome, full-made carriage pair, in good condition, and thoroughly trained to city sights and sounds. Any gentleman requiring a strictly high-class pair for Victoria or brougham, will do well to see them. They are undocked, but regular hackney patterns, weighing about 2,350 pounds. Drive like one horse and have good action, and a very fashionable appearance.

JUDGE—Dappled grey gelding, 6 years, 16 hands, sound, kind in single or double harness. Sired by Bob Hunter. One of the handsomest and best all-round show horses we have seen in years. If he gets into the hands of someone who will enter him at the coming Horse Show he is bound to be a winner. Safe for city use.

LIBERTY—Bay gelding, 4 years, 16 hands, sound, kind and true in single or double harness. A good goer of the weight-carrying hunter type, and carries a saddle well.

MAJOR AND OFFICER—Pair bay geldings, 5 and 6 years, 16 hands, sound, kind and reliable for city use. A well-bred fashionable pair of high-steppers, in excellent seasoned condition, splendid manners, prompt roadsters and in every way a strictly high-class pair.

DENNIS AND NORAH—Pair dark bays, mare and gelding, 6 and 7 years old, 16 hands, sound, kind and reliable in single or double harness. A good-looking, well-bred pair, with size and substance. Very fast roadsters, with style and action.

TOPSY AND DANDY—Pair black cobs, mare and gelding, 5 and 6 years, 15.1 hands, sound, kind in single or double harness and broken to the city. A fast, good-actioned, well-bred pair of the hackney type.

MONARCH—Black gelding, 6 years, 15.2 hands, sound, kind, and reliable for city use. A handsome, old-fashioned hackney pattern. Extra well broken to ride and up to weight. This is one of the most fashionable horses in the sale.

COUNSELLOR—Brown gelding, 5 years 15.3 hands, sound, kind in harness and saddle. Sired by Chancellor, dam by Blenkiron. An excellent combination horse for any gentleman fond of a well-bred horse. Full of life, but good tempered and easily managed.

BARRISTER — Brown gelding, 6 years, 15.3 hands. Sound, kind in harness and saddle. Full brother to Counsellor, and as well broken in every way. They are well matched and make an excellent pair together.

And 60 others.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager. Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

Extraordinary Precautions Taken to Prevent an Uprising in Belgrade To-Day

AN AMERICAN TO WED A SWEDISH PRINCE

King Edward's Plans—Meeting of the Canadian Forest Association at Ottawa To-Day—Arkansas Republicans

Vienna, March 6.—A despatch from Belgrade says that extraordinary precautions are being taken to prevent disturbances to-day, which is the thirteenth anniversary of King Alexander's accession to the throne. According to recent advices from the Servian capital the situation there is described as that of a volcano likely to burst forth at any moment in an uprising that will sweep the throne and all the friends and supporters of the present regime out of existence. King Alexander, almost if not quite an imbecile, is said to be virtually a prisoner in the royal palace, while politicians of all factions are scheming in regard to the occupant of the throne after his downfall.

AMERICAN TO WED PRINCE.

Paris, March 6.—A rumor is current here to the effect that Miss Helena Gorham Wilde, an American, who has made her home in Paris for a long time, will shortly marry Prince Eugene of Sweden, if he can gain the consent of his father, and arrange to resign his right of succession to the throne of the Bernadottes, as his brother Oscar did some years ago when he made a morganatic alliance by espousing Miss Ebba Monck—a marriage which created considerable of a stir at the time. Prince Eugene is a painter of some note who has lived in the Latin quarter for many years. Miss Wilde is both pretty and wealthy.

KING EDWARD'S PLANS.

London, March 5.—So fully is King Edward occupied with state functions and business, social engagements and all the preparations for the coronation, as to which he is of course supreme arbiter, that there is growing uncertainty as to whether he will be able to go abroad before proceeding to Denmark for the celebration of King Christian's eighty-fourth birthday, to be present on which occasion Queen Alexandra is preparing to make the voyage to Copenhagen on the royal yacht Osborne early in the coming month.

RAISE IN WAGES.

Camden, N. J., March 6.—On and after to-day the wages of the motormen and conductors of the local street railways will be seventeen cents per hour instead of fifteen as heretofore. The increase was voluntary on the part of the company.

Houston, Texas, March 6.—This was the anniversary of the fall of the Alamo, when so many brave sons of Texas died for liberty. In commemoration of the event the San Jacinto chapter, Daughters of the Republic of Texas, to-day decorated the graves of all the veterans of the Texas republic in this locality.

WIDOW OF P. D. ARMOUR, JR. WEDS.

New York, March 6.—The marriage of Mrs. P. D. Armour, Jr., and P. A. Valentine will be quietly celebrated here to-day. The ceremony will be attended only by members of the two families and a few intimate friends. Part of the honeymoon is to be spent with Mrs. P. D. Armour, Sr., at the Hotel Bon Air, Augusta, Ga.

The bride of to-day is noted as a woman of extraordinary beauty. Before her marriage to the late P. D. Armour, a millionaire Board of Trade operator of Chicago. She has two children, Philip D. Armour III. and Lester Armour, both of whom are preparing for preparatory school. For many years Mr. Valentine was manager of the interests of the late P. D. Armour and is extensively interested in the business. He is credited with possessing several millions of dollars. Mr. and Mrs. Valentine will make their future home in Chicago.

CANADIAN FORESTRY ASSOCIATION.

Ottawa, Ont., March 6.—The Canadian Forestry association will begin its third annual meeting in this city today about three hundred members in attendance from various parts of the Dominion. The sessions continue through tomorrow and promise to be of unusual interest to those interested in the cultivation and preservation of the forests.

ARKANSAS REPUBLICANS.

Little Rock, Ark., March 6.—Considerable interest is manifested in political circles in the meeting of the Republican State Committee to be held this afternoon at the Lincoln Club. The purpose of the meeting is to recommend a successor to Colonel H. M. Cooper, as United States marshal for the eastern district of Arkansas, and to confer regarding the appointment of several postmasters. Col. A. S. Fowler of this city will in all probability be recommended for the marshalship.

A SPLENDID REPORT

The Fifty-fifth Annual Meeting of the Canada Life Assurance Co.

Elsewhere will be found the financial report submitted by the directors at the fifty-fifth annual meeting of the Canada Life Assurance Company. The report is of a most gratifying character, fully justifying the policy announced by the esteemed President, Hon. Geo. A. Cox, to "build on foundations that will stand the strain and stress of years." The assurance written in 1901 amounted to $7,761,131, being an increase of $2,397,396 over the previous year, and the Company is now carrying a total of $84,404,972, against which it has assets of $24,504,790. Without waiting to be directed by the Government, the management of the Canada Life saw that the rate of interest was coming down, and took steps to be prepared for the new conditions. The period of readjustment has extended over eight years, and now the liabilities on policies issued previous to 1900 are valued on a 3 1-2 per cent. basis, while those of a later date are valued on a 3 per cent. basis. On these valuations the reserves for the protection of policyholders amount to $22,709,306, which is $2,565,198 more than the amount required by the Government standard. The income of the Canada Life last year was $3,517,617, of which more than a million was derived from interest, and the death claims came to $1,163,098. The funds of the Company were fully employed at paying rates.

The report will be read with deep interest by the host of friends and patrons of the Company in Peterborough and elsewhere, and they will not only be satisfied that the old Canada Life deserves a continuance of all the confidence they learned to feel in it and its management years ago, but they will also note with pride that it continues to lead the procession in the amount of new business, in gross and net income, and in the total of assurance in force. The foundations were well laid, and the traditions of the Company have been maintained throughout its whole history.

AN INTERESTING LECTURE

Delivered in St. John's Church Last Night By Canon McNab

A most interesting and instructive lecture was given in St. John's church last night by Canon McNab on the subject "History of the Church of England." Rev. Canon McNab is an excellent speaker, and the address he delivered was most attentively listened to. The lecturer told of the advancement of christianity, from the time of the landing of the Jutes, Angles and Saxons. Previous to that time, Christianity had made some progress in Briton but on their arrival it received a very serious set-back. A few years after, however, it was revived, and has continued, although it met with many obstacles.

The lecture was illustrated with lime-light views, which were very interesting, some of the pictures showing the remains of churches and abbeys erected centuries ago.

The Sunday school room was taxed to its utmost capacity, and many who could not find seats were obliged to stand. At the close of the lecture a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Canon McNab for his very instructive address.

There's a Story in Morning Tiredness

A story of poor blood, weakened nerves, of a starved brain. Plenty of food, mind you, but perhaps poorly prepared and too poorly digested to maintain a vigorous body. Ferrozone quickly makes blood, gives strength to the nerves, cures the fagged feeling that prevents vigorous thought and action. Use Ferrozone, it makes blood and good blood feeds the nerves. Strong and vigorous nerves are just another name for good health. If you seek health, and a relief from the tired morning feeling, use Ferrozone. Sold only by Ormond & Walsh.

ARAB CHIEF TAKES CITY BY STRATAGEM

The Descendant of Former Ameers Recovers Throne

MAY AFFECT GREAT POWERS

Disturbances in Central Arabia Connected with Question of Persian Gulf

Bombay, March 6.— Abdul Aziz Ben Feysul, a descendant of the old Wahibi Ameers, with an army of two thousand men, has captured the City of El Riad, in Central Arabia.

Abdul Aziz Ben Feysul entered the city by stratagem at night, with fifty followers. These men rode to the palace and killed the Governor of El Riad and thirty of his retainers. The garrison of the city then surrendered, whereupon the army of Abdul Aziz Ben Feysul entered.

It is believed that the Wahabi dynasty is endeavoring to regain its supremacy and overthrow Ibu-el Rashid, the Ameer of Nejd, and conquer that district. Many tribes are flocking to the banner of Abdul Aziz Ben Feysul. Owing to its connection with the questions of the Persian Gulf littoral and the interests involved of Great Britain, Turkey, and other powers now engaging in trade in those parts, the internecine warfare in Arabia may have far-reaching consequences. Ibu-el Rashid, one of the chief actors in the present conflict, was mentioned as an important personage lying in the background in the recent Koweyt incident.

El Riad is one of the chief cities of the Sultanate of Nejd, the central inhabitable district of Arabia. It lies on the northern spurs of the range of mountains which runs across Arabia from west to east, touching Turkish territory on either side, with Mecca on the west and the Persian Gulf on the other side of the peninsula.

About two centuries ago Abd-el Wahhab, a native of Nejd, preached a reformed Mohammedanism, and this movement spread over Arabia. He established himself as Sultan, and for a time the Sultans of Nejd ruled nearly the entire country. The inhabitants of this portion of the peninsula are still Wahhabees. The desert regions of the interior are occupied by wandering Bedouins. Some of the tribes are dependent upon the Sultan of Nejd, but the majority owe allegiance to no one.

The disturbances, which have again come to a head in Nejd are chronic. Owing to a sanguinary conflict for the throne of Nejd between Abdullah ben Feysul, of the Wahabi reigning family, and his brother, Saud, about 30 years ago, Ibu-el Rashid was enabled to seize the chief power. Turkey has never succeeded in penetrating into Nejd, but claims a nominal sovereignty over Central Arabia.

When Midhat Pacha was Governor-General of Bagdad he was appealed to for assistance by Abdullah ben Feysul and prepared a considerable force to make an expedition into Nejd, so as to make valid the Sultan of Turkey's influence in that quarter. Latterly Turkey has again shown signs of exerting herself from the headquarters of her army at Bagdad and Busra, at the head of the Persian Gulf. It was said to be at Turkey's instigation that Ibu-el Rashid made an attack on the Sheikh of Koweyt, on the Persian Gulf, which led to a great battle in Arabia in the winter of 1900, in which the losses on both sides were said to have amounted to five thousand killed and wounded.

British Soldiers Get Better Pay

London, March 4.—In introducing the army estimates, of £69,310,000 in the House of Commons to-day, War Secretary Brodrick entered into a long defence of the War Office, which he contended had done its work well, considering that a war had never before been waged on such a scale as the South African war. The War Office to-day was feeding 300,000 men and 246,000 horses in South Africa, and there were no complaints on that score. The experiences of the past year had confirmed the necessity for changes in the army administration, in decentralisation, etc., as outlined by the Government last year. Military officers and clerks were being rapidly substituted in the War Office for civilian officers.

In regard to recruiting, Mr. Brodrick believed the limit had been reached. No reduction in the strength of the army could be expected, and probably the Indian garrisons must be increased. The country had already enough experience of allowing the colonial garrisons to sink below their proper limits.

WILL GIVE BETTER PAY.

With the view of giving a fillip to recruiting, Mr. Brodrick said the Government proposed to allow enlistment for three years with nine years in the reserve, and with the object of inducing men to enlist for India and elsewhere abroad, it was proposed to give every man a clear shilling per day. If, after two years years, the soldier decided to serve eight years with the colors and four years in the reserve, he would be paid an extra sixpence daily. Mr. Brodrick believed this would result in enlisting a better class of men.

In regard to the much-discussed question of volunteers, Mr. Brodrick declared that, if the volunteers were to be a bar to conscription, they must make themselves efficient. It was proposed to establish a volunteer reserve of men over 40 years of age who were unable to comply with the ordinary regulations, and establish during the present year a military reserve of 50,000 men. The education of all officers would be vigorously prosecuted and the expenses of young officers would be lightened.

London, March 4.—The Viceroy of India, Lord Curzon of Kedleston, telegraphs that the rainfall has been light and scattered and of no benefit to the affected districts. About 250,000 persons are now receiving relief.

A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Lahore says 2,000,000 acres of wheat in the Punjab are suffering from total drought.

WILL NOT VISIT IRELAND.

London, March 4.—It is reported that the projected visit to Ireland of King Edward has been abandoned on account, it is understood, of the aggressive action of the United Irish League.

LABOR UNION

Formed at Lakefield Last Night—A Very Encouraging Meeting

A branch of the American Federation of Labor was formed in Lakefield last night. Several speakers were present, the principal speaker being Mr. Jas. A. Flett, an organizer of the Federation. The benefits and workings of the union was fully explained and at the close an opportunity was given for those who wished to join the organization. A number of men were initiated. A large number of members went up from Peterborough Lodge and assisted in forming the new lodge.

The growth of the union in town has been marvellous and it is now one of the strongest in the country. There is good prospects for a large and flourishing union at Lakefield.

Items of Interest

Ottawa, Ont., March 5.— The Dominion Rifle Association held its annual meeting this morning. Lieut.-Col. Henshaw presided in the absence of Col. the Hon. J. M. Gibson, who could not attend owing to his Parliamentary duties in Toronto.

His Excellency Lord Minto, Dr. Borden, Minister of Militia, and General O'Grady-Haly and Col. Lord Aylmer, adjutant-general, were present, and delivered short speeches. In moving the adoption of the report, Col Henshaw paid a compliment to the fairness of the Minister of Militia. He alluded to the deaths of Major Gen. Howard and Hon. R. R. Dobell, both members of the association. He intimated that an American team would probably come to Canada to win back the Palma trophy, but expressed his confidence that the Canadians would keep it here.

His Excellency referred with satisfaction to the efforts of the association to encourage individual shooting and discourage the pot-hunter for prizes. The war in South Africa had taught the lesson that the chief quality of the soldier must be to shoot straight.

A resolution was adopted thanking the Government for the appropriation of $10,000 for the rifle matches.

Dr. Borden was unanimously voted honorary president of the association, and the constitution was amended to take in the new office, the Minister of Militia being the first honorary president the association has had.

The association passed a resolution of condolence with the family of the late Lord Dufferin, one of the first patrons of the D. R. A.

Col. J. M. Gibson was re-elected president.

LORD HOPE'S BRILLIANT IDEA.

London, March 5.—Lord Francis Hope, who has managed to spend $3,000,000 since coming of age has just assured himself of a certain income for the rest of his life, by turning over all his property and expectations to a life insurance company, which guarantees him an income of $10,000 a year for life. Lord Francis is now at Brighton, where he is recovering from the amputation of his foot, performed some time ago.

BALDWIN ZEIGLER EXPEDITION.

Copenhagen, Denmark, March 6.—Letters dated from Franz Josef Land, August 17, have been received here from the Danes who accompanied the Baldwin-Zeigler Arctic expedition (which left Tromsoe, Norway, July 15 last year on the steamers America and Belgica). The vessels arrived at Franz Josef Land after trying experiences with all on board well. The America intended to winter at Franz Josef Land, and then proceed northward until stopped by the ice, when the party on board of her was to start towards the North Pole. Mr. Baldwin hoped that the America would reach 83 degrees north.

Pekin, March 5.—The Dowager Empress to-day gave another reception in honor of the women of the Diplomatic Corps. In addition to the wives and other relatives of the Ministers, a number of women who, under the diplomatic regulations, were not entitled to be present, were in attendance.

It was arranged in advance that gifts from the Dowager Empress would not be acceptable. In spite of this, however, the legation children each received a present of $100.

Mrs. Conger, the wife of the American Minister, who is the senior woman member of the corps, exchanged good wishes for the Chinese New Year with the Dowager Empress, who said she looked forward with pleasure to the women's next visit. The Emperor was present at the reception.

The formality of the programme was modified by the Dowager Empress deciding to receive the women in her own apartments.

Belgrade, Servia, March 5.—An extraordinary attempt to start a revolution was made this morning at the frontier town of Shabatz, a town on the Save, 66 miles west of Belgrade, by a raid under the leadership of Alavantics, a relative of Prince Karageorgevich, the pretender to the Servian throne. The only result was that Alavantics was killed, and his adherents were arrested.

Alavantics, wearing the uniform of a general in the Servian army, and accompanied by a handful of followers, arrived at Shabatz, from Mitrowica on the Austrian bank of the Save, and called to the frontier guard to follow him. The latter, not suspecting anything wrong, accompanied the supposed general to the Town Hall, where Alavantics ordered the men of the fire department to join him. This motley procession proceeded to the gendarmerie barracks, where Alavantics paraded the gendarmes. Two of the latter, however, whose suspicions were aroused, escaped and apprised their commander, Captain Nikolics. The latter, when he arrived on the scene called on Alavantics to produce some document as authority for his actions, but was fired upon by the would-be revolutionist and slightly wounded. Nikolics then promptly shot and killed Alavantics and caused the arrest of his followers.

AGAINST SELLING THE INDIES.

Copenhagen, March 5.—New petitions are being circulated by the opponents of the sale of the Danish West Indian Islands to the United States, for presentation to the Rigsdag. They will probably have no effect.

FOOLISH RUMOR DENIED.

Paris, March 5.—The officials of the Foreign Office and of the British Embassy here unite in denying the truth of a report, circulated in the United States yesterday, that Miss Maude Gonne, the "Irish Joan of Arc" had [illegible] Monson, had made formal complaints against her utterances, claiming they were treasonable.

London, March 6.— A despatch from Harrismith, Orange River Colony, to the Central News, states that several prisoners recently captured declare that Christian De Wet was shot in the arm in a recent attempt to break through the British lines.

The despatch says that these prisoners also confirm the statement that Manie Botha was killed, and say that Philip Botha, nephew of Commandant-General Botha, is a prisoner.

On the best informed opinion the Pall Mall Gazette prophesies the end of all serious hostilities in South Africa by September, and this is rather a pessimistic than an optimistic view. Judging from Lord Kitchener's progress this week, and the well-founded rumors of Gen. Botha's personal inclination to surrender, the practical end of the struggle may considerably antedate September.

BOER DELEGATES ARE RESERVED

Washington, March 6.— Messrs. Wessels and Wolmarans, accompanied by Montague White, Counsul-General for the South African Republics at New York, who have been in Washington for several days past, have arranged for a reception by Secretary Hay. This reception will be purely unofficial, the Boers occupying the status of private citizens of another country sojourning in the United States. The delegates themselves are reserved when questioned as to their mission, and as to their pretensions respecting official recognition by the Department of State, merely saying they had several different proposals for their guidance under consideration, and had not yet reached a determination.

GREATEST OF GOLD FINDS

London, March 6.—A despatch to the Central News from Grand Bassam says surveys which have just been completed by prospectors of the Ivory Coast Gold Fields Company show that there is banket ore on an almost unbroken line for eleven miles, assaying one ounce and upwards. This is regarded as one of the most extraordinary discoveries ever made.

DIAMOND DYES
Are the Strongest, Brightest and Richest and Excel All Other Home Dyes

A few years ago it was the opinion of many that the dyers of oriental lands produced the best colors in the world for the dyeing of all fabrics. To-day, this idea will not be entertained or supported for a moment. The introduction of the celebrated Diamond Dyes has given to the civilized world colors that are unequalled. Diamond Dyes are far more durable and much brighter and fuller than the dyes produced by Oriental or European dye manufacturers. Users of the Diamond Dyes at all times obtain as good results in the home as professional dyers can produce in the large city dye houses.

Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns are having a tremendous sale everywhere in Canada. If you would work one up in your home, send your address at once to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain st., Montreal, P.Q., and they will mail you [illegible] of the newest designs to select from.

LOOKS LIKE A THROW DOWN FOR GERMANY

Prince Henry's Visit to the United States Proves a Political Failure

VEXATION CAUSED BY THE SUGAR QUESTION.

Santos-Dumont Makes Sensational Promises—Praise for the Heroism of the New Zealanders

Paris, March 5.—The correspondent of the New York Herald, writing from Berlin, says: I have reviewed and carefully digested the utterances of the leading journals reflecting every shade of political opinion, and have come to the conclusion that every one who makes a similar attempt to gauge public opinion here must admit Prince Henry's mission to the United States to be a failure so far as the political importance which attaches to it. The Reichstag tariff commission replies to salutations from across the water by demanding a tariff on United States imports of foodstuffs. One of the main objects of the Prince's visit was to cultivate friendly trade relations and to convince members of the Foreign Relations Committee in the American Senate that friction might be avoided by passing reciprocity bill framed on behalf of Germany by John A. Kasson, Commissioner under the Tariff Act, which now lies in a dusty pigeon hole. No assurance of any kind has been received by the German Government, that Congress will tinker with the tariff.

SUGAR QUESTION CAUSES HEART BURNING.

London, March 5.—A despatch from Vienna to The Times says that notwithstanding the Brussels agreement to the effect that Britain will not grant a preference for colonial sugars if continental bounties are removed, the sugar question is sure to continue a prolific cause of discord. Governments, beet-root growers and manufacturers are all more or less at odds being overtaken by the common misfortune which befalls industries founded on an artificial base. Each interest is anxious to reduce its own shares of this penalty at the cost of the others. In Austria it is probable the investors and territorial magnates who sank money in the enterprise will succeed in transferring their burdens to the shoulders of the taxpayers. The tendency in Vienna is to represent Britain as undermining the main pillar of continental industries in favor of her own. England is regarded as showing a lack of consideration for such an old friend as Austria.

SANTOS-DUMONT'S SENSATIONAL PROMISE.

Paris, March 5.—Santos-Dumont, the aeronaut, who is at London arranging for an exhibition at the Crystal Palace, was interviewed by the correspondent of the Paris edition of the New York Herald and said: "I have decided to go to America next year to take part in the aerial competition at St. Louis. I am very anxious to exhibit my machine in America as soon as possible. If I do go I shall make a flight over New York. I intend to go up East River, pass under the Brooklyn bridge, and then come back above it." He will attempt to fly over London from Crystal Palace to Hyde Park and return.

HEROIC WORK OF NEW ZEALANDERS PRAISED.

London, March 5.—A despatch from Wellington, New Zealand to the Times says that Earl Hopetoun and the Federal and State Premiers of the Australian Commonwealth have addressed messages to the capital, congratulating the New Zealanders on the bravery of the troops in the recent operations in South Africa. Lord Hopetoun predicts that their heroic work will end the war.

TWENTY THOUSAND FOR SIX WEEKS' RENT.

Paris, March 6.—A despatch to the Paris edition of the New York Herald from London, says that Whitelaw Reid, the United States envoy to the coronation, has rented Brooke House, the Park Lane residence of Lord Tweedmouth. During his stay in London Mr. Reid will pay twenty thousand dollars for six weeks' rent. Miss Alice Roosevelt is to be the guest of Mrs. Reid.

A GRAPHIC STORY OF THE DISASTER

How the British Were Overpowered at Klerksdorp

THEY CHARGED WITH BAYONETS

Entire Company was Eventually Overpowered and Killed and Captured to a Man.

London, Wednesday, March 6.—Telegrams received here from Klerksdorp describing the attack upon and capture by the Boers on February 24th at a point south-west of Klerksdorp of 467 British soldiers who were acting as a convoy to an empty wagon train show that General Delarey laid his plans with consummate care and a precise knowledge of the ground. The third Boer attack upon the convoy was conducted from various points, and was most determined. By sheer recklessness they sought to ride down and overwhelm the British defence. British guns shelled the charging Boers, but nothing stopped their onslaught, which was carried out with resistless impetus. The convoy of mules was subjected to a heavy fire.

They stampeded and put many of the defenders temporarily out of action, and caused the wildest confusion. For two hours the British held out. They then divided, and were surrounded. A few minutes of confused fighting and all was over. The Boers galloped along the line, firing at every man who showed the slightest tendency to resist, until they reached and captured the guns. In the extreme rear the Northumberland Fusiliers, who had been cut off, succeeded in fighting their way out for some distance when their ammunition became exhausted. They charged with bayonets, but were speedily overpowered. By 7 in the morning all resistance was at an end. Dead and wounded were scattered all over the field. Broken wagons and panic-stricken horses and mules made a scene of indescribable confusion.

Not until General Delarey came in person was anything like order restored. He stopped the Boers engaged in stripping the British wounded by the free use of his sjambok, but they continued the work of despoiling directly his back was turned.

Weather Notes

Probs.—Fair, not much change in temperature.

There is a disturbance of much energy situated over the middle Atlantic States attended by a snowstorm, but it is unlikely to affect Ontario and Quebec. A cold wave which has moved into Alberta during the night appears to be of importance. Not much change in temperature [illegible] in Ontario and Quebec.

THE ITALIAN MINISTRY IS DOOMED AND OUTCOME PROBLEMATICAL

London, Wednesday, March 6. — The Rome correspondent of the Morning Post describes the political and social situation as being extremely complicated, and says it may at any moment develop in an unexpected manner. The possibility of a railway strike is still impending. More than six thousand railway employes have not been summoned to the colors, and they are practically free to strike if they wish. The Government and the railway companies are unable to agree regarding the plan demanded by the employes, which involves better conditions. The correspondent represents the Government as being pledged to support the men's interests which the railway conventions adopted by Parliament 17 years ago were supposed to protect, but the companies have never respected the conventions. The Government lately prosecuted the companies for not observing them, but the final judgment of the Court of Cassation is not expected before April, and the outcome is most uncertain. If the Government fails to obtain sufficient concessions from the companies a partial strike will follow. A deputy who was about to leave Rome on a journey asked a Socialist deputy confidentially whether if he went he would be able to get back. The Socialist significantly advised his questioner to start immediately and to return as quickly as possible.

A partial strike occurred at Naples to-day owing to the railway employes misinterpreting the instructions of their leaders, who are now at Rome treating with the Government. They may be able to persuade the men to resume work to-morrow. If there are no disorders and a strike does not occur among the men not summoned to serve with the colors, the Chamber of Deputies will meet before the end of the week, but the downfall of the Ministry then is generally predicted, and the outcome cannot be foreseen.

The troops have restored order in [illegible] fresh disturbances are reported in the neighboring town of San Marco, owing to the agitation for railways.

KILLED BY NICKEL FUMES.

Coppercliff, Ont., March 6.—A peculiar accident occurred at the Ontario Smelting Works, by which George Legault, an employe, lost his life. Contrary to orders, he remained in the dust-room when the hose was turned on, and the fumes caused by the water coming into contact with the hot nickel dust inflicted severe burns that he succumbed soon after.

Montrose Hayes, an employe of the Canadian Copper Company, at Creighton Mines, whose duty it was to attend to the ore bins, accidentally fell into one of the bins and was smothered to death. The remains were taken to his home, Pembroke, for burial.

Vancouver, B. C., March 6.—It is understood that a new salmon cannery combine, taking in at least 45 of the largest cannery plants in British Columbia, is almost completed. The combine is on the line of that on the Columbia River. Americans, it is reported, are backing the deal, with a capital, it is said, of $4,000,000. H. Doyle and Co., and Vancouver, have arranged the deal.

For the Farmer.

Ducks Against Mites.

One of my neighbors told me a few years ago that ducks would rid our premises of mites. As we had old biulidings infested with mites, which kept me overworked in summer in order to raise any poultry at all, I concluded to try the plan. Accordingly I bought 170 duck eggs, hatched 147 of them and raised 140 ducks, which I drove into the henhouse every night as soon as they were well feathered, and I never saw a mite that year. The following year I raised thirty-five and housed them the same way until they were ready to pick, and I did not have any mites until late in the fall. As soon as I discovered some I drove the ducks into the poultry house to sleep, and in a short time I could not find a mite.

I often caught some of the ducks in the morning to examine them, and found their beautiful white feathers covered with the little pests of all sizes and colors, which made me feel guilty of cruelty to animals at first, but when I looked deeper into the thick, creamy down not one of the insects could be seen near the body, and when they came up at night with no mites to be seen I was convinced that the down and feathers were too thick and oily for mites to penetrate, and that they were very soon bathed off the outer plumage.

I am so pleased with my success that I expect to try ducks again, for I found a few mites last summer, and it requires no more labor to raise them than to battle against the mites, and it certainly is much pleasanter and is profitable. I am not prepared to keep them through the winter, so I buy eggs of neighbors and get them off early enough to pick them twice and sell them in full feather the last of October. The first year I sold them for five times the amount I paid for both eggs and feed, but did not do so well the next year because the eggs were higher and did not hatch so well.—Mrs. Shannon Staten, in Poultry Farmer.

Clean Sleeping Places.

At this season of the year the swine need careful watching that their sleeping quarters are in good condition. It will not do to turn the herd to straw stacks, thinking that by so doing they will be comfortably and properly provided by a bed that will keep them warm and comfortable, with no bad results following.

The main feature in the hog bedding is to have it dry and free from manure or heating filth. The hog nest or sleeping apartment should be free from draughts or currents of air. There should be no air blowing in on the hogs while sleeping. This does not imply that the sleeping apartments should be close, low from roof to roof or poorly ventilated; on the contrary, they should be airy, plenty of space for circulation of fresh air. It is a bad plan to have hogs sleep in low, close quarters, where there is a tendency to create a steam or dampness that will settle over the hogs. A clean hog-house, with tight walls, moderate ventilation above to carry off the damp air is the basis of good sleeping accommodation for the swine.

The kind of bedding is a matter that may admit of some difference of opinion. The swine should not be left to the bare floor, without any warm, soft material for bedding. The hog, while indifferent in many ways about its comfort, enjoys a good, soft bed. The hog is also very sensitive to cold, and will always busy itself in carrying straw, leaves and soft materials to make a big, soft bed to sleep in, if left to its own inclinations. This manifestation of instinct should teach every hog-owner the need of supplying the hog with plenty of good, dry material for the nest.

Corn stalks are considered one of the very best bedding materials. Wheat straw is also good, but requires more frequent changing. Give the hogs good, clean bedding, change the bedding frequently and keep the hogs clean and comfortable through the cold season. It will pay. Hogs are worth too much money to handle carelessly in these times of high prices.—Nebraska Farmer.

Rheumatism is a Constitutional Disease

The pain and localized conditions are mere results of constitutional conditions. Poisoned blood sends its evil influence to various parts of the body, and to cure permanently you must treat it constitutionally. Nothing so completely dispels these poisons from the system as Ferrozone. It makes new blood. It imparts vitality and vigor, enabling the system to throw off the poisons that engender rheumatism. Ferrozone also fortifies the system against the weakening effects of rheumatism, and cures, not simply relieves, as most medicines do. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Ivan Turgenev.

In the course of a very charming study of Ivan Turgenev, which is published in the February number of The North American Review, Mr. Charles Whibley strongly deprecates the tendency of some critics to regard the novels of that great literary artist as being political pamphlets. According to that school, Turgenev kept a constant hand upon the public pulse, and symbolised social or political movements in the characters he created. That is the spirit in which one of Turgenev's best known works has been characterised as "a poem of the youth of the Russian democracy," and one of his most attractive heroines as "foreshadowing and standing for the rise of young Russia in the sixties." Mr. Whibley insists that Turgenev preached neither for nor against the new ideas, and was in no way responsible for the political condition of his country. Russia was the material of his art, which he treated with a loftiness of purpose and a sincere impartiality which forbade him ever to play the part of advocate. Referring to the diverse pictures of contemporary Russia presented in the works of Tolstoi, Dostoievsky and Turgenev, Mr. Whibley says:—

"In the generation which is dying today, three masters have lived and worked, who belong not only to their own time and country, but to the literature of all countries and of all times. Turgenev, Dostoievsky, Tolstoi—all three have painted the Russia of their faith and enthusiasm, but in colors so diverse, with a sentiment so contradictory, that when we have read their books we are left with a tangle of hostile impressions. To find a formula which shall express the vision of the three is impossible. Their books are all strange to us—strange pictures of a strange land; the elemental man reveals himself at every turn under the polish of western refinement; but he reveals himself in so dissimilar an aspect that we can do no more than put him in the common class of humanity. If Raskolnikov be a distant cousin of Bazarov, can we regard him even as a vague kinsman to Litvinov, Lepine or Prince Andry? Impossible though it seems, we must accept in a single act of faith the high authority of Turgenev, Dostoievsky and Tolstoi; we must believe that their pictures are the truth seen through the eyes of a various temperament, remembering that in fifty years, when the unessential differences of politics are forgotten, the work of all three may appear harmonious even to the stranger."

Is It a New Dynasty.

If the authorities in England are unable to determine whether or not a new dynasty has been started with the advent to the throne of King Edward VII., it is hardly to be expected that we should speak with authority on the subject in Canada. But if we can throw light on the question, it is our duty to speak out. The London Daily Chronicle is quite unable to come to any conclusion in the matter. That journal, in its interesting daily causerie, says:—

"It would be interesting to know what warrant the new editions of Peerages and other books of reference have for the statement that a change of dynasty has taken place. Debrett says: 'Upon the death of her Majesty Queen Victoria, which terminated the Hanoverian dynasty, a new one, that of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha (or perhaps better, of Saxony), commenced.' His Majesty sits on the throne not by any right derived from Saxe-Coburg-Gotha or Saxony, but as the direct representative of the House of Hanover, which has reigned over us since 1714. Where, then, the ordinary man asks, is the change of dynasty? Perhaps the learned ones will say."

On this very topic a letter reaches me from a correspondent in Belleville, Mr. W. R. Bigg, who has gone to some trouble to show why the Debrett view of the question is the correct one. It may be added that Debrett's view is also that of that very reliable publication, Whitaker's Almanack in its 1902 issue, and that The Globe recently expressed a doubt whether the King's title did not as a matter of fact derive from his mother, and not from his father, causing him to rank in the House of Brunswick. It is in reply to this point that Mr. Bigg writes. He says:—

"It is through the very fact you mention, 'that the title comes through the female side,' that constitutes the name of the House on the father's side, and each and every precedent in English history confirms it, as the following synopsis will show:—House of Normandy, William the Conqueror, claimed by conquest—House named from the male line. House of Blois, Stephen, claimed through Adela, daughter of William I.—House named from the male line. House of Plantagenet, Henry II., claimed through the mother, Matilda, daughter of Henry I.—House named from the male line. House of Lancaster, Henry IV., claimed through Edward III.—House named from the male side, 'time-honored Lancaster.' House of York, Edward IV., claimed through his great-grandmother, Ann, great-great-granddaughter of Edward III.—House named from the male line. House of Tudor, Henry VII., claimed through Margaret, great-great-granddaughter of Edward III.—House named from the male line, 'Owen Tudor.' House of Stuart, James I., claimed through Margaret, great-granddaughter of Henry VII.—House named from Henry Stuart, third husband of Margaret Tudor. House of Orange, William III., claimed through his mother, Mary, granddaughter of James I.—House named from male line. House of Brunswick, George I., claimed through the mother, Sophia, granddaughter of James I.—House named from male line, Duke of Brunswick and Elector of Hanover. House of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Edward VII., claimed through the mother, Victoria, granddaughter of George III.—House named from the male side. The English are great sticklers for 'from precedent to precedent,' on Tennyson's authority, hence to rank Edward VII. as of the House of Brunswick would violate every precedent in English history."

Mr. Bigg's reasoning appears unanswerable to me, and I hope our London contemporary will have its doubts on this question removed as effectually.

The question should be disposed of finally before coronation, as it would never do to have a Sovereign whose second name we are not sure of.

AFTER MANY YEARS

Of suffering from kidney disease, Miss Minnie Ryan, of St. Louis, Mo., found a complete cure result from the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It is such cures as this which establish the soundness of Dr. Pierce's theory: "Diseases which originate in the stomach must be cured through the stomach." Every other organ depends on the stomach for its vitality and vigor. For by the stomach and its associated organs of digestion and nutrition the food which is eaten is converted into nutriment, which, in the form of blood, is the sustaining power of the body and each organ of it. When the stomach is diseased the food supply of the body is cut down, the organs are starved, and the weakness of starvation shows itself in lungs, heart, liver, kidneys or some other organ.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, and so cures disease of other organs which have originated through deficient nutrition or impure blood.

"I had been suffering with kidney trouble twenty years," writes Miss Minnie Ryan, of 1317 Louisiana Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., "and I had doctored with a number of the best physicians. Two years ago I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription' and took also several vials of Doctor Pierce's Pellets. I took eight bottles (four of each), and I feel now perfectly cured."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the Company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of all wells, oil seepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

Current History.

Current History for February presents a record of the world's events during December last and closes the eleventh volume of this valuable chronicle. A striking portrait of Secretary Hay is the frontispiece of this number, to accompany an opening article by Joseph Fitzgerald, entitled "The New Treaty and Secretary Hay." The contents in general deal with Congress and the President's message, the South African war, the United States in China's crisis, the Supreme Court decisions respecting the Philippines, the Pan-American Congress, South American matters, Lord Rosebery's Chesterfield speech, Marconi's triumph, etc. Price $1.50 a year. Beginning with the March number a new department entitled "Literary Chronicle," conducted by Nathan Haskell Dole, will be added to the magazine, considerably increasing its value. Other important additions to the corps of writers are being made. Sample copy free on application. Address Current History Co., Boston, Mass.

A remedy suggested for scours in lambs or sheep is to give them two fresh raw eggs. Repeat in twelve hours if relief does not come. This is worth cutting out and pasting in your scrapbook. Insect powder dusted into the wool is recommended for sheep ticks. A pound will dust from ten to fifteen sheep effectively. Avoid buying large, coarse boned rams to mate with small ewes. Size should be attained gradually and in accordance with the correct principles of breeding. A sheep will stand severe cold so long as kept dry and out of draughts. A wet fleece becomes a good heat conductor and absorbs bodily heat until the animal becomes thoroughly chilled.—Shepherd.

Remarkable Surgery.

One of the most astonishing feats of surgery to date, though we are getting accustomed to these marvels, was exhibited at the recent surgical conference at Lyons, France. The subject was a young man whose larynx had been removed and replaced by an artificial one of hard rubber. "The natural glottis and vocal cords," says a French journal from which the Literary Digest translates, "are replaced by a thin rubber diaphragm with a slit in it. As the size and tension of this diaphragm are always the same, it can vibrate in only one way and produce but a single note. The man's voice, therefore, never varies in pitch, and is much like the voice of Mr. Punch; but as the modifications of the voice which produce vowels and consonants are due to motions of the palate, tongue and teeth, which parts remain intact, the subject can speak distinctly, though always in the same tone. Above the rubber larynx is a metal sieve, which prevents the entrance of solid food into the larynx and breathing-tubes. Liquids which trickle in are led away by a tube connecting the rubber larynx with the esophagus or gullet. There is still another tube which comes out in the front of the neck. This enables the subject to breathe more freely than he could do through his artificial glottis and gives this a rest. When he wishes to speak, he stops the hole in his neck with his finger."

Sandwichmen's Banquet.

There is an annual gathering at the Lambeth Baths, London, Eng., during the Christmas holiday week which is well on its way towards becoming one of the historic celebrations of the great British capital. Certainly it is of a kind that would be possible nowhere else. It is the annual banquet to the London sandwichmen. Organized originally by the proprietors of Reynolds' newspaper, it is, perhaps, one of the most grateful of festivals in Yuletide benevolence the world over, largely because its recipients are the human flotsam and jetsam of the greatest mass of humanity congregated in one spot on the earth. Reynolds has the first right to describe it, and the report of the proceedings in that newspaper has a flavor of Dickens' London that makes it good reading:—

An air of expectation hung over and possessed the crowd which thronged around the doors of the Lambeth Baths at about six o'clock on Monday night. This expectation was the child of knowledge. These men, or at least many of them, knew what awaited them. Their nostrils had been already invaded by savory odors and they were glad in the belief that huge joints of beef, legs of mutton, loins and legs and briskets of pork, with vegetables galore, with hot steaming Christmas pudding and delicately-flavored mince pies awaited them. They knew that they would be able to wash this goodly fare down with honest ale, or that, if they preferred, they would be permitted to quaff the innocuous ginger beer. They knew, too, that they would afterwards be invited to smoke sound tobacco—for the great tobacconists who contribute to this feast never send aught but the good leaf—out of a homely pipe. They knew, moreover, that while they did this they would be listening to good music and merry humor and witnessing clever art. They were finally ecstasied in their anticipation by the sure and certain hope that when they quitted the hall they would carry with them a gift of clothing, including a warm, cosy, cardigan jacket, a packet of tea, a briar-wood pipe, and—laugh not, ye Philistines; it meant Christmas comfort to these men—a florin coined in his Majesty's own mint. Was it any wonder that these poor fellows, possessed by the sure and certain knowledge of sure and certain good cheer, counted, as the poet says, "the weary beatings of the clock?"

They did not allow their anxiety to hurry them into indecorum. When at last the doors were thrown open they marched to their seats as quietly and with as excellent an obedience to the usages of courtesy as even the estimable Jeames Yellowplush would desire. There was no scurrying, no scuffling. It was a procession of well-contained men. A genial, good-tempered officer stood at the inner door, with one or two other men in uniform beside him; but their services were never required. A cheery "Pass on, my lads," from the sergeant was sufficient to quicken the procession, and a good-natured warning was sufficient to check it. The savory smell which had defied bricks and mortar and flavored the very atmosphere of the street had now become a comforting, assured fact. The great doors of the kitchen were open; and the guests caught glimpses of white-aproned and becapped cooks hoisting up from cavernous saucepans veritable mountains of well-cooked, honest English meat. The sight was the hors d'oeuvre of the feast. These men wanted afterwards no stimulant to a jaded appetite. They revealed—most of them—a fine Falstaffian capacity.

Skimmilk as Food for Hogs.

I regard skimmilk as a valuable part of the hog ration, worth at least 30 cents a hundred pounds, when mixed with grain, either whole or ground. That is, if a dollar's worth of feed be used for hogs, 30 cents' worth, or one hundred pounds, of skimmilk would make the ration more valuable than if the whole dollar was used for grain, with only water instead of skimmilk.

This skimmilk keeps the hog healthy, and therefore thrifty, preventing constipation and its attending evils, especially swine plague or hog cholera, the dread of all farmers raising hogs. In fact, I cannot recall a case of hog cholera or other disease among hogs where skimmilk formed a good part of the hog ration. I have in mind notably the case of one of our station patrons who recently sold a nice, thrifty hog in this market, weighing some four hundred pounds, fed and raised wholly on skimmilk from this station, which shows that we can make porkers equal to the best grain fed, and more healthy than those fed on grain alone. If this result of feeding skimmilk can be obtained in one instance, why can it not be obtained in many and by any farmer?—J. H. Crowley, in Kansas Farmer.

"Johnnie," said his mother to the incorrigible, "I am going to have your father whip you when he comes home to-night!"

"Please don't, mamma," replied Johnnie, positively, "paw is allus so tired when he comes home."—Boston Post.

A Scene in Nassau.

The following delightful sketch of the outlook from a window in Nassau, the capital of the Bahama Islands, is a portion of a letter which a correspondent sends me:—

I am now going to try and make you envy me. I wonder if I can succeed. I am sitting at brother Percy's bedroom window, which commands a magnificent view of the harbor and of several small islands and a sweep of the blue, blue sea. In the foreground, between our house and the beach, which is about a quarter of a mile away, I get a view of hundreds of palm trees, banana trees and other foliage peculiar only to the tropics. I might go on for an hour describing the other objects that are included in this picture, but should still leave the picture in such a state that it could not be said to give the faintest idea of what box of paints, containing all the colors of the rainbow, and still I should fail. Why? Simply because the colors defy the artist in all his attempts at reproduction. Likewise the poet finds himself beggared for words in which to express the beauty of the scene. The foliage is of such rich and varied colors that we northerners cannot form the slightest conception of it; only they who have visited the tropics can realize what it is like. But now I have come to the climax of coloring, the harbor. Take in your hand a lovely piece of mother-of-pearl and trace in it the rich, fiery flashes of green and blue, yes, a lovely opal ring like mine would be better, and it is not the slightest exaggeration to say that they would faintly give you an idea of the colors of that harbor. It is simply magnificent—rich blues of all shades, light and dark greens, heliotrope shading to deep purples, strange to say all blending together, blaze out brilliantly. Tourists who have visited nearly every corner of the entire globe agree in saying they never saw anything to compare with it. The bottom of the water is of pure white coral, white as snow, and in 75 to 100 feet you can see the bottom quite clearly through the most beautiful crystal-like water. I think probably the snow-white bottom has a prismatic effect on the light passing through it, thus showing all these brilliant colors. However, I am going too much into detail, though if you could see it yourself you would scarcely blame me. Dotted here and there are sailing vessels, their sails reflecting the bright sunshine, scarcely moving on the quiet waters of the ocean. The sky is of a rich, deep blue, with a few fleecy clouds floating idly about. The sun is shining brightly, although not at all oppressive, as the temperature is only 74 degrees. The surface of the ocean is as quiet and smooth as glass, scarcely a ruffle disturbing its surface. I think, in a disjointed way, I have gone over most of the scene. Don't you envy me now? And now, dear, the dinner bell is ringing, and I will tell you all about the delicious oranges from 24 cents to 48 cents per hundred in my next letter.

Wireless Signalling.

While Marconi, with his wireless telegraphy, holds the field as the last nine days' wonder of science, Waldon Fawcett, in the current Harper's Magazine, shows that telephony is keeping almost equal pace with her sister invention in perfecting ways and methods. He writes:—

The very acme of achievement in the transmission of messages would seem to have been reached in the wireless telephone system, which has recently been developed by Professor A. Frederick Collins, an electrical engineer residing in Philadelphia. Spoken words are transmitted great distances through the ground without the use of a connecting wire, and in accordance with a plan totally different from that of the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy.

The Collins system simply takes advantage of the fact that there are natural electrical currents in evidence slightly below the surface of the earth at any point that may be selected, and by this invention currents of this character are utilized to cause a flow of electricity between two instruments stationed above the surface of the earth. The only underground mechanism employed consists of small zinc-wire screens, which are buried in shallow holes, one at the sending station and the other at the receiving station. Above these are tripods supporting transmitting and receiving apparatus, such as is employed in ordinary telephony, a wire affording connection in each case with the buried screen. When the electricity from a storage battery is turned on, sounds of all kinds may be sent through the transmitter, and heard, in many instances, even more distinctly than were a regular overhead telephone employed.

The Collins invention in its simplest form is adapted to sending a message but one way—that is, it is not possible to utilize a receiver as a transmitter and reply to a message received, but the transmitter and receiver are each equipped with an annex for performing the opposite function, so that to all intents and purposes this new telephone is not different from the instrument already in use.

Of the improvements of the telephone in its uses at sea, Mr. Fawcett also adds:—

Unique methods of telephony are working wonders in the field of marine signalling, and when this phase of the new achievements has been fully developed it is believed that the danger of collisions and other disasters at sea will be very materially lessened. One of the most important of these systems of telephone signals for ships was invented by the late Dr. Gray. By this plan the water of a lake, ocean, or river is made to act as the medium for conveying sounds, as, for instance, the strokes of a bell tolled below the surface of the water. The sounds thus transmitted are heard distinctly at great distances by means of exceptionally sensitive telephonic receivers designed especially for such service. Inasmuch as any number of different signals may be arranged by the introduction of various combinations of strokes given in quick succession or at long intervals, it will be seen that the possibilities of the system for signalling purposes are virtually limitless. The practical application of this invention has already been carried so far that ships have been fitted with apparatus which causes gongs to ring automatically when the vessel comes "within hail" of one of these submerged bells.

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with us—
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, as black as soot, it strews
The streets and pavements where we go,
We tramp it under foot and kick—
'Tis not the snow we used to know.

For the Farmer.

Ducks Against Mites.

One of my neighbors told me a few years ago that ducks would rid our premises of mites. As we had old buildings infested with mites, which kept me overworked in summer in order to raise any poultry at all, I concluded to try the plan. Accordingly I bought 170 duck eggs, hatched 147 of them and raised 140 ducks, which I drove into the henhouse every night as soon as they were well feathered, and I never saw a mite that year. The following year I raised thirty-five and housed them the same way until they were ready to pick, and I did not have any mites until late in the fall. As soon as I discovered some I drove the ducks into the poultry house to sleep, and in a short time I could not find a mite.

I often caught some of the ducks in the morning to examine them, and found their beautiful white feathers covered with the little pests of all sizes and colors, which made me feel guilty of cruelty to animals at first, but when I looked deeper into the thick, creamy down not one of the insects could be seen near the body, and when they came up at night with no mites to be seen I was convinced that the down and feathers were too thick and oily for mites to penetrate, and that they were very soon bathed off the outer plumage.

I am so pleased with my success that I expect to try ducks again, for I found a few mites last summer, and it requires no more labor to raise them than to battle against the mites, and it certainly is much pleasanter and is profitable. I am not prepared to keep them through the winter, so I buy eggs of neighbors and get them off early enough to pick them twice and sell them in full feather the last of October. The first year I sold them for five times the amount I paid for both eggs and feed, but did not do so well the next year because the eggs were higher and did not hatch so well.—Mrs. Shannon Staten, in Poultry Farmer.

Clean Sleeping Places.

At this season of the year the swine need careful watching that their sleeping quarters are in good condition. It will not do to turn the herd to straw stacks, thinking that by so doing they will be comfortably and properly provided by a bed that will keep them warm and comfortable, with no bad results following.

The main feature in the hog bedding is to have it dry and free from manure or heating filth. The hog nest or sleeping apartment should be free from draughts or currents of air. There should be no air blowing in on the hogs while sleeping. This does not imply that the sleeping apartments should be close, low from roof to roof or poorly ventilated; on the contrary, they should be airy, plenty of space for circulation of fresh air. It is a bad plan to have hogs sleep in low, close quarters, where there is a tendency to create a steam or dampness that will settle over the hogs. A clean hog-house, with tight walls, moderate ventilation above to carry off the damp air is the basis of good sleeping accommodation for the swine.

The kind of bedding is a matter that may admit of some difference of opinion. The swine should not be left to the bare floor, without any warm, soft material for bedding. The hog, while indifferent in many ways about its comfort, enjoys a good, soft bed. The hog is also very sensitive to cold, and will always busy itself in carrying straw, leaves and soft materials to make a big, soft bed to sleep in, if left to its own inclinations. This manifestation of instinct should teach every hog-owner the need of supplying the hog with plenty of good, dry material for its nest.

Corn stalks are considered one of the very best bedding materials. Wheat straw is also good, but requires more frequent changing. Give the hogs good, clean bedding, change the bedding frequently and keep the hogs clean and comfortable through the cold season. It will pay. Hogs are worth too much money to handle carelessly in these times of high prices.—Nebraska Farmer.

The Farmyard in Spring.

How it usually looks after the long winter of the north country! Bits of board, scraps of bone, perhaps brought there by the dog, or, what is worse, thrown out there after dinner; wisps of straw, scraps of paper, and all manner of debris scattered there during the cold days of winter, come to light, now that the snow has vanished.

What about it? It ought to be cleared up. You know it. Then why not do it? We live in this world only once. Life is precious to most of us. Pity the man of whom this is not true. More than we know or realize our health and length of life depend upon our farm surroundings. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the light which comes in through our windows, all have much to do with the length of our days and the joy of living. All the waste material left by the winter days will surely decay if left where it is, and decay means malaria, which is simply the latter day big word for bad air. The washing from this decaying matter floats along the surface of the ground until it finds its way into the well, bringing back to us impurities which pass into the food we eat and the water we drink. The house drains get stopped and need opening.

But, putting aside all considerations of health, look at the matter from an aesthetic standpoint. How much better it looks to pass a farmhouse the grounds of which are well kept! You have noticed this. You cannot help it. About houses owned by those who "have no time for such things" you have seen indisputable proofs of the fact that the man who lives there thinks that all there is of farming is the money he can get out of the place. Nine times out of ten, if you really knew the family sheltered by that house, you would find them ill-natured, hard worked, and generally unhappy. Life has little meaning to its members. Everything about the farm corresponds to the appearance of the grounds around the house. No doubt the boys and girls are just aching to get away from the home to the city. The rundown and slipshod way of keeping the house yard may be taken as a sure index of all the other methods of the farmer.

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone" fifty times. On the other side was written: "I have went home!"

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Our New Book on Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents, scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm on route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

TROUBLES THAT LEAD TO INSANITY AND SUICIDE

They Result From a Diseased and Disorganized Nervous System

Paine's Celery Compound

THE GREAT BANISHER OF NERVOUSNESS IN ALL ITS FORMS

Are you a victim of melancholia, and do you brood from day to day? Does the shriek of the steam whistle, the rattle of the wheels or the clangor of bells cause you to start and shiver? If this is your condition, be assured your case is extremely critical.

It is fitting that you should investigate your condition at once. If you are sleepless, depressed in spirits, if your mental movements are slow, if you are subject to terrifying hallucinations and an aversion to food, we say with all earnestness, beware of insanity and suicide.

The science of medicine has, thank Heaven, furnished a means for the banishment of all the troubles referred to. Paine's Celery Compound is the great restorer and builder of the weakened and shattered nervous system. This marvellous prescription of Professor Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., begins its work directly on the nerves by bracing them up; it strengthens nerves and muscles; it causes pure life-giving blood to flow freely to every part of the body, carrying health, vigor, joy and happiness into each hour of life. Beware of remedies that have no merit or reputation to commend them, they simply aggravate existing troubles. Ask your druggist for Paine's Celery Compound, the medicine that never disappoints.

New Church at Cordova Mines

The Miners' Institutional Church at Cordova built by the Presbytery of Peterborough, assisted by the Company and friends will be formally dedicated next Sunday by the Rev. A. C. Reeves, B.A., of Campbellford. Arrangements have been made for a large mass meeting also in the afternoon when a number of ministers who have been active in the development of the work there, will be present, and give addresses. On Monday night following there will be an open meeting, and excellent talent has been secured from neighboring towns. Some of Peterborough's "best" will take part in quartettel work. The building will be described more in detail after the dedication. The basement of the church is set apart, and will be well equipped for a reading and recreation room, and it is understood will be furnished with a library and a number of first class magazines.

A HEARTY SOLDIER

Worked On New Rations

One of Uncle Sam's Army boys got a lift with Grape-Nuts. A private at Fort Harrison, Mont., named Orlando Miller, says, "When I was all run down with dyspepsia and got so I weighed only 121 pounds a friend recommended that I take Grape Nuts Food.

This was last spring and I followed the advice. I have steadily improved. Gradually lost my stomach trouble, until I have gained my strength and health. I am now weighing 155 1-2 pounds. Any one in my regiment, 8th Regulars, can verify these facts."

Canada Life.

55th Annual Meeting.

Change to 3½ Per Cent Basis Completed.

The announcement of Senator Cox that the policy Liabilities of the Canada Life Assurance Company are now valued on an interest basis of 3 1-2 per cent. for all business prior to 1900, and 3 per cent. for policies issued since then, thus putting the Company on the most stringent valuation basis of all those organized on this continent, was the feature of the annual meeting.

The report of the Directors is as follows:

The Year's Business

The number of applications received for assurance was 3,871 for $8,467,243. The number of policies issued was 3,059, representing assurances of $7,761,131. Applications for $185,642 of assurance were declined, and the balance were deferred or incomplete at the close of the year. As compared with the previous year there was an increase of 1,579 in the number of policies issued, and of $2,397,906 in amount. The number of new policies on which first premiums were actually paid during the year was 3,238, effecting assurances of $7,078,256. This constitutes the largest paid-for business in any year of the Company's history. The total assurances now in force amount to $34,404,972, being an increase of $3,365,891 for the year.

The Income.

The net premium income amounted to $2,476,251.29, and the income from interest to $1,041,265.94, making a total net income of $3,517,617.23. It is pleasing to note that the interest income, for the first time in the Company's history, has exceeded the million dollar mark.

The Payments

The death claims paid during the year amounted to $1,163,898, an increase of only $50,720.60 over those paid in 1900, and the amount was again well within that expected. Including bonus additions, the death claims, endowments, and annuities paid in 1901 amounted to $1,384,239.04, while $175,703.51 was paid as surrender values and dividends to policy-holders, making total payments to policy-holders $1,559,942.55.

The Assets

The total assets at 31st December, 1901, as shown by the Balance Sheet, amount to $24,504,790.48, being an increase of $1,856,586.40 over the previous year. Apart from the $560,380 received from calls on Capital Stock, the natural increase in the assets of $1,296,206.40 must be very gratifying to all interested in the Company's welfare. The funds have been kept fully employed during the year at remunerative rates of interest.

The Liabilities

Two detailed valuations of the Company's policy liabilities were again made—one upon the combined Experience 3 per cent. basis, the other upon the Institute of Actuaries Hm 3 1-2 per cent. table. In addition to these, a third valuation was again made for all policies issued since 31st December, 1899, upon an Hm 3 per cent. basis. The Directors have much pleasure in announcing the final transfer of the Company's reserves to an Hm 3 1-2 per cent. basis, and further that for all policies issued since January 1st, 1900, a rate of interest of 3 per cent. only has been employed in the valuation now adopted. So far as known, no other Canadian Company, and, with one possible exception, no United States company, employs so stringent a valuation basis, or holds such strong policy reserves as the Canada Life. After providing for these and all other liabilities, except Capital Stock, there remains a surplus on policy-holders account of $1,348,706.22.

Review

It is perhaps not too much to say that the year 1901 was the most successful in the Company's long record of fifty-five years. The new business paid for was the largest in the Company's history, while the total business in force shows a very material gain. The increase in assets was very gratifying, the interest earnings most satisfactory, while the mortality experience was well within that expected. To crown all the completion of the transition to the new and stronger basis of reserve, now announced, must be a cause of great satisfaction to all interested in the continued prosperity of the Company.

GEORGE A. COX, President.
R. HILLS, Secretary.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

The President, in moving the adoption of the report, said:

I have pleasure in moving the adoption of the report, which has just been presented to you. I feel very strongly that the shareholders and policyholders alike are to be heartily congratulated on the result of the operations of the Company during the fifty-fifth year. The growth in all its departments has been most satisfactory, as a brief review of the figures will show.

The number of applications received for the year was 3,871 for assurances of $8,467,243. The policies actually issued represented assurances of $7,761,000, an increase over the previous year of 1,579 in number, and of $2,397,900 in amount, while 3,238 policies were delivered, effecting assurances of $7,078,256. The number of policies actually paid is the largest in the company's record for any one year, and this, I think, is a very marked indication of the quality of the business which our agents are securing, as it establishes beyond any question the fact that only applicants are approached who can afford to maintain their policies, and who make application with the strong conviction that they are doing right and have fully decided to carry out their part of the contract if the policy be issued. Of course some applications, received prior to the 31st December, had not been completed, but in many cases the policies have now been issued and paid for, and will be included in the business of the current year.

In regard to the premium income in 1901 it is not easy to make a proper comparison with that of 1900, as in the latter year our Quinquennial Division of Surplus took place, and a considerable sum entered our premium income in that year as single premiums to purchase reversionary additions. Perhaps I should explain that this course, although usual heretofore with many Companies, was adopted for the first time by our Company in accordance with the legal requirements of the Insurance Departments of those States of the American Union where we do business, and is also approved by the Dominion Insurance Department. As this is the only way whereby we can obtain credit in the Government returns, for dividends applied as bonus additions, we propose to continue this method at subsequent division of surplus.

In order, therefore, to make a fair comparison between the regular premium income of 1900 and that of 1901 it is necessary to leave out of account the special sum arising as single premiums at the Quinquennial Division, and doing this, I am pleased to be able to say that our regular premium income for 1901 exceeded that of 1900 by $122,000.

The income from interest was $1,041,265.94, an increase of $124,[illegible]; this should be specially gratifying to all, as it indicates the very healthy state of this Company's investments, and demonstrates the care which has been exercised not only in the investment of our money, but in looking after it subsequent to its investment. Our total annual income now exceeds three and one-half millions of dollars.

The death claims paid during the year, as you will see from the report, are very little in excess of those paid during the previous year. We have had a number of sudden deaths during the year of comparatively young lives, where the previous health has been apparently perfect. These resulted from acute disease which could not have been foreseen, and from accident; but, notwithstanding this, it affords me much pleasure to be able to say that the total claims were well within the amount expected and provided for. It is interesting to note that the average duration in the Company of those lives assured whose policies became claims during the year was 21.18 years, as compared with an average of 13.55 shown by our forty-seven years' experience published in 1895, and with the average of 13.50 as shown by the Institute of Actuaries Hm Experience.

The assets of the Company now amount to $24,504,000, and in referring to this item I would like to draw your attention to the figures which were presented to you in the report for the year 1891. In that statement the total assets were shown to amount to $12,074,124.87 — a growth of over 100 per cent. being the result in one short decade. I mention this simply to give you a clear idea of the actual growth which we are enjoying.

I now come to the question of liabilities, and I am at a loss to know how to adequately convey my congratulations to the policyholders and shareholders upon the completion of the change in the valuation basis. Several years ago the fact was pressed home upon us that the rate of interest assumed in the calculation of our reserves was altogether too high in view of the constantly decreasing rate of interest obtainable on loans and investments of the first quality. After the most careful consideration, and after seeking the advice of men of undoubted ability in the Actuarial, as well as in the Financial world, steps were taken to gradually lower the rate of interest employed in making our calculations. This, as you are aware, has been in progress now for some eight years, until to-day your statement appears with its liabilities on policies issued prior to 1900 valued on an Hm 3 1-2 per cent. basis, and those issued since that date valued on an Hm 3 per cent. basis. The reserves thus brought out amount to $22,709,306, and exceed those required by the present Canadian Government standard by $2,565,198. In confirmation of this I am glad to be able to put beside our own valuation the actual valuation of our policy liabilities made by the Dominion Superintendent of Insurance, whose certificate calls for reserves of $20,144,108. As intimated in the report, so far as is known, no other Canadian Company, and with one possible exception, no United States company, employs so stringent a valuation basis, or holds such strong policy reserves as the Canada Life now does. I think it is important to point out that the adoption of this new standard of valuation practically removes the necessity of any further change in our valuation basis for the present generation of policyholders, so that the Canada Life may now be said to have arrived at a settled basis for the valuation of its existing policies. It is interesting, however, in this connection to note that in Great Britain out of sixty-eight companies reporting to the Board of Trade, fifty-six of this number value on a basis lower than 3 1-2 per cent., while fifty of them value on 3 per cent. or lower, and eight value on 2 1-2 per cent. The Australian Mutual, with head offices at Sydney, Australia, value their policy liabilities on an interest basis of 3 1-2 per cent., so that you will see the present position of the Canada Life, with its liabilities valued on a 3 1-2 per cent. and 3 per cent. basis, compares favorably with that of the leading companies of the Empire.

I have much pleasure in moving the adoption of the report.

VICE-PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Mr. F. W. Gates, the Vice President, spoke as follows:

To second the adoption of the fifty-fifth annual report of this Company upon this occasion is to me a source of no little satisfaction. To have been privileged to see the consummation of our efforts in bringing up our reserves to the new valuation basis is a source of keen gratification to one who, like myself, has been intimately identified with this company for nearly half a century, and who has had the honor of filling its Vice-Presidency for a quarter of a century. I have lived to see the reserves of this institution moved, first from a 6 per cent. interest basis to a 5 per cent. basis; then from a 5 per cent. to a 4 1-2 per cent. basis; afterwards from a 4 1-2 per cent. to a 4 per cent. basis, and now from a 4 per cent. to a 3 1-2 per cent. basis, with a further provision to a 3 per cent. valuation for recent business. Our position now, therefore, is practically this: All the business of the last century is upon an Institute of Actuaries Hm 3 1-2 per cent. basis, while all the business of this new century is upon a 3 per cent. basis.

I am sure that the announcement which we make to-day as to the completion of this difficult problem in the readjustment of our reserves will be hailed with great delight by all our field representatives, and also by all those interested in the permanent welfare of this great institution.

I was much interested in reading the other day an article from a financial journal, touching upon events that have happened since our last quinquennial report. I note two or three sentences:

"It is also worthy of remark that during the past year several of the British Life Companies have dealt in a very radical way with the problem of increasing reserves; for instance, the Life Association of Scotland, one of the oldest and best known Companies of Edinburgh, last year entirely passed its quinquennial division of profits. The same remarks apply to such a large and progressive Company as the Gresham Life, of England, which also passed its quinquennial division of profits. Several other British Companies have made very large reductions in their last profit divisions, so that what appeared to be two years ago a heroic measure on the part of the Canada Life Assurance Company has since that time been outstripped by even more heroic treatment on the part of well-known English and Scottish Companies.

"The Canada Life appears to have very well weathered the difficult passage, which it encountered a couple of years ago, and its policyholders as a rule now appear to accept the situation as in their best interests."

It therefore appears that in the home of life insurance, where its principles are best understood, the course pursued two years ago by this Company at its quinquennial division of surplus has since been followed by prominent British companies, and in some cases far exceeded. So far as the past year is concerned, the new business was very large and satisfactory, in fact the largest paid for new business in our whole history.

It should not be forgotten, too, that during 1901 a good deal of pioneer work was done in establishing agencies in new fields, and this, while temporarily an expensive undertaking, will, we hope, ultimately prove profitable.

The Directors of the Company are endeavoring to follow the ideal set by our President in his address two years ago, when he said "Conservative Progress" was to be our motto.

If, as a result of our policy of Conservative Progress, this Company can make as rapid strides in the next ten or twenty years as in the last quinquennium, I am sure the Canada Life will then, as now be known as Canada's Premier Life Insurance Institution.

I have much pleasure in seconding the adoption of the report.

At the close of the meeting Hon. Geo. A. Cox was re-elected President, Mr. F. W. Gates was re-elected Vice-President, and the retiring directors were also re-elected.

I. O. O. F. "At Home."

The members of Peterborough Lodge will hold an "At Home" to-morrow evening. A very enjoyable time is expected. A large number of Peterborough brethren have been invited and have signified their intention of being present. Those who will go are requested to be at the C.P.R. station not later than four-thirty. The party will return on the mid night train.

Consumption is Infectious

Every precaution should be taken to prevent its spread of the "White Plague." Persons coming into contact with consumptives should inhale Catarrhozone several times each day as it is a powerful destroyer of disease germs and renders them innocuous. Catarrhozone is a most efficient preventive and may be thoroughly relied upon to promote expectoration, soothe the cough and benefit in many ways too numerous to mention. Both from a medical and scientific point of view Catarrhozone is the most valuable addition to the armament against consumption. Its merit cannot be too warmly applauded. Sold at all druggists, two months' treatment, price $1, small size 25c., or by mail from N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

APSLEY.

—Many of the lumbermen in this section are sorrowing over the loss of snow. Hundreds of logs are yet in the woods.

—Mr. S. McColl is Apsley's busiest man. His large contract with the MacDonald Co., for cant hooks has been successfully filled. He is improving his mill by adding new machinery.

—Mr. T. Leans, who has been in Havelock, is giving up business there and has purchased a farm near the village, where he intends to go into stock raising. We wonder that more men of means do not see the almost unparalleled opportunity to make money by purchasing land and raising stock, not only for dairying, but for the market. Cheese is a good price, and cattle buyers come up every fall and pay good prices for young cattle. One great advantage this country has above the settlements nearer the front, is the abundant crop of beaver-meadow hay that cattle and horses will keep fat on during the winter, and anyone can have all they can cut. Having this advantage of securing the supply of hay for winter use, the entire farm may be used for pasture in the summer, with the exception of whatever may be used for grain, garden and roots. One objection is sometimes raised that we are too far from any market. Yes, we are, if we must go into a town in order to find a market, but what better market does any country want than the many lumber camps within a few miles, where hundreds of men work and enjoy first class fare? The lumber companies pay good prices for all the produce you can raise. Any man who is willing to work six days in the week can make as good a living here as anywhere, and with less capital.

—Dr. Bell has successfully treated a few serious cases of pneumonia and inflamation. He is now attending Mrs. Sharp, who is sick with la grippe.

—The many friends of Wm. Wilson son of Thos. Wilson, who moved to the west a few years ago, were grieved to learn of his death. He was killed by falling logs. A memorial service was held in the temperance hall on Sunday evening.

Catarrh Poisons and Their Remedy

The poisonous secretions from Catarrh are dangerous because they affect the stomach and bowels, giving rise to an unhealthy condition of these organs. Catarrh is the source of much ill health and was considered practically incurable until it was demonstrated to the satisfaction of the medical profession that by the use of Catarrhozone any case of nasal or throat trouble can be permanently and quickly cured. Catarrhozone by its unusual merit has enlisted the support and endorsement of the most prominent medical authorities, who freely state that anyone giving it a trial is sure to receive permanent benefit. Sold for $1. Small size 25c. At druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

RETURN VISIT OF

PROF. O'BRIEN

CANADA'S GREATEST PHRENOLOGIST AND THE ONLY RECOGNIZED SCIENTIFIC PALMIST.

Owing to numerous people being unable to consult Prof O'Brien during his first visit in Peterborough a few weeks ago, he has been prevailed upon to pay the town a return visit on his way east, and can now be consulted at his former private office, 263 Hunter Steet Terrace, from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. As Professor O'Brien will only remain in town for a very short season, people wishing to consult him should call at once as this is their last chance. A photo read free to patrons.

Prof. O'Brien has just concluded two most successful seasons in Lindsay and Cannington and is urgently requested to pay both towns a return visit at an early date.

Prince Henry's Visit a Flat Failure so far as Commerce is Concerned

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

New York, March 7.—The arrival of the Boer delegates simultaneously with that of Prince Henry, spoiled what would otherwise have been a hostile demonstration against Britain. There was a movement on foot to give the Boers a big reception, not so much by the Boers sympathizers as by the Irish element and British haters. The affair fell through on account of the simultaneous arrival of Prince Henry with the delegates.

A FLAT FAILURE.

There is no disguising the fact that the visit of the German Prince is a flat failure, so far as creating a better condition of affairs commercially between Germany and the United States is concerned. Uncle Sam is not to be bought in any such a way. The barrier against German goods entering the United States will not be reduced in the slightest extent, according to the statement recently made in the United States Senate.

THE SHERMAN STATUE

After eleven years of waiting, the Sherman statue by Augustus St. Gaudens, has arrived. The famous sculptor contracted to deliver the statue by February 1894, but celebrated sculptors can not be held to contracts of this kind. High art can not be hurried, and Mr. St. Gaudens has given himself eight years' extra time. In the meantime many of the subscribers to the fund of $53,000, have died. But it must be confessed that if the artist has taken his own time, he has at least produced a satisfactory work. New York contains many statues, most of which are from the art standpoint, very inferior; but the St. Gaudens equestrian statue of General Sherman is pronounced by those who have seen it to be a notable achievement of the sculptor's art. It will be unveiled sometime this year.

MISS ROOSEVELT'S POPULARITY

No doubt, if Miss Alice Roosevelt, could easily know the number of fads among New York women that are named after her she would be surprised—but not always flattered. Every new whim introduced is called after the daughter of our Chief Executive. The latest affair of Alice Roosevelt title is a graceful minuet and nothing is so popular with society lovers of Terpsichore —despite the fact that it is Lent—than this pleasing exercise.

BECOMING CHEAPER

Prices of seats on the New York Stock Exchange are becoming cheaper. The last sold at $70,000, a drop of $10,000 from the previous sale. This is due, it is said to the inactivity of the market and the absence of public interest in Stock Exchange matters. Nevertheless $70,000 is a good sum and it will take a good boom to run up the price again to $80,000.

NEARING AN END

In spite of the good time that they have had it is whispered that the officers and crew of Prince Henry's yacht will not be sorry to get the start which their departure next week will bring. The people who have secured permits to visit the Hohenzollern number high in the thousands and besides the crew's being worn out, the imperial yacht has lost many little trimmings which have been clipped from various places as souvenirs.

WAR AGAINST SKYSCRAPERS

New York has always been a little jealous of Chicago in the matter of skyscrapers, and of late years the rivalry between residents of Gotham and the Windy City has been unusually interesting. It is therefore disappointing to many of the builders of the tall office buildings of New York that the Aldermen of the city should commence a war against skyscrapers almost at the very time that Chicago Aldermen have decided to abolish the law limiting the hight of buildings. In future the structures erected in this city will be limited to 200 feet. There are now many buildings that tower more than 100 feet above this figure. A bill introduced into the Legislature a few years ago, having the same object in view was beaten. The Board of Trade and Transportation is behind the present move. Under the new City Charter the Board of Aldermen can regulate the height of buildings and the officials are taking advantage of their power to put in force a law which is highly favored by many residents of the Metropolis.

PRINCE HENRY'S VISIT

One of the most important incidents connected with the visit of Prince Henry of Prussia is the dinner which is to be given to His Royal Highness to-night by young Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt. This will be the only unofficial function which the Prince will attend and naturally New York society is at the white heat of excitement over the event. The affair is all the more interesting for the reason that the friends of Alfred Vanderbilt, who inherited the bulk of his late father's fortune, say that since the family is to be so highly honored his should be the privilege of entertaining the royal visitor since he is the acknowledged head of the house. It will be remembered that Cornelius Vanderbilt was practically disinherited by his father a few years before the latter's death because he contracted a marriage displeasing to that parent. The list of guests bidden to the event is very exclusive and William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., who married Miss Virginia Fair, of California, is the only one of the Vanderbilts whose name appears among the list of invited ones.

SIXTY MILLION OF DOLLARS

Sixty millions of dollars will be distributed to the shareholders of leading corporations during this month, this being about $6,000,000 in excess of the March payments of other years. Two corporations alone will pay $35,000,000 and these are the Standard Oil Company and the U. S. Steel Corporation. These two companies are the only industries that will distribute more than $1,000,000. The dividends for $60,000,000 for March compares with $123,000,000 distributed during January, which is the principal month of the year for interest and dividend payments.

NEARS END OF TOUR

New York, March 7 — Although Prince Henry will spend a longer period of time in this city on his return from his memorable southern and western tour than at the earlier visit, the official incidents of his reception are now practically at an end. The party is due to reach New York about 6 o'clock this evening. At 8 o'clock the Prince will dine at the University Club. To-morrow will be a day of recreation spent in visiting the city, at the end of which the Prince will dine at the Grosse Deutsche Gesellschaft. Sunday he will take luncheon at the University Club, attend a private dinner, and in the evening visit the New York Yacht Club.

Berlin, March 6—Lieut.-Colonel Piquart, whose honorable connection with the Dreyfus case will be remembered, is publishing in the "Grande Revue some " notes on the military situation, in which the relations of the European powers are examined from the viewpoint of a professional soldier. He points out that France can carry no further the enlargement of her army, whereas Germany has still at her disposal many means of increasing her military power. Although, however, France already is comparatively weak, and seems destined to grow weaker, might she not contrive, he asks, by new alliances to re-establish the equilibrium now compromised? By new alliances, of course, are meant combinations additional to the existing league with Russia.

The questions are answered in the affirmative, but Col. Piquart is not one of those who imagine that, because French and German soldiers fought side by side in China there is a prospect of a cordial understanding between France and Germany in Europe. He perceives that to any such understanding Alsace-Lorraine blocks the way. Germany will never give up those provinces, nor will France renounce the hope of regaining them. Under the circumstances, to discuss an alliance between France and Germany would be a waste of words. There is no such insurmountable obstacle to a friendly understanding between England and Italy on the one hand and the Franco-Russian League on the other. Col. Picquart is deeply impressed with the apparent extent and sincerity of British hostility to Germany; and, at the same time, he can see no adequate basis for French Anglophobia in the Fashoda incident or in England's determination to subjugate the Boers.

Col. Picquart finds it easy to demonstrate that France would have much to gain even from the neutrality of England, involving, as this doubtless would, the neutrality of Italy. Under such conditions, France being relieved of concern as to her Alpine frontier, could utilize all her troops on the Rhine, while those of her soldiers who are normally stationed at Algeria would have nothing to fear during their crossing of the Mediterranean. Moreover, the Franco-Russian fleet would, in the supposed event of Anglo-Italian neutrality, be mistress of the North Sea and the Baltic. Of course, if England's attitude, instead of stopping short at neutrality, could be transformed into an active alliance, such as existed in the Crimean war, the advantages derivable by France therefrom would be far greater. The merchant navy of Germany could be hunted from the sea, and so far as that country depends for food supplies from transmarine purveyors, it could be cut off from them. That is not the only nor the chief benefit to be gained from an alliance with Great Britain. Under the conditions of modern warfare, it is becoming more and more certain that victory will go to the longest purse. How obvious would be the effect on an international conflict, if France and Russia were able to place loans in England, while German securities could find no market on the London Stock Exchange.

A final reason given by Col. Picquart for proposing, what the London National Review has long been advocating, to wit, an Anglo-French alliance, is that the South African war has given England an opportunity of creating a veritable army. When that local contest is over, England will be able for the first time since the close of the Napoleonic wars to render an ally substantial aid, not only in a naval and a pecuniary way, but also in a military way.

A Remarkable Old Man Who Resides at Oak Ridge, Montgomery County

Canajoharie, N. Y., March 7.—John Barlow of Oak Bridge, a small settlement in the southeastern part of this country, who will reach the age of 107 years in a few weeks, is said to courting, with with prospects of making her his fifth wife, a well-known widow with 97 years to her credit. Mr. Barlow is a wonderfully preserved old man. He frequently takes long walks through the country and by his retentive memory has for seventy-five years been a court of last resort on boundary line disputes. He has very accurate knowledge of the topography of the country which surrounds Sloansville, Schoharie county, and Oak Ridge and Charleston, Montgomery county. He has been a farmer all his life and elected as highway or road commissioner many times. He has never been compelled to consult a physician or require the services of a dentist or oculist. He is bald-headed and his face is adorned with shaggy white whiskers. Mr. Barlow says he has drunk whiskey and chewed and smoked tobacco nearly all his life. He had two sons who are great-grandfathers, thus making the old man a great-great-grandfather. If the rumor of his fifth marriage turns out to be true the whole country neighborhood in which he lives will give the bride and groom such a send-off that they will remember it until the end of their days.

England Trying to Protect Trade with Cuba

British Chamber of Commerce Asked to Adopt Some Method as Against the U. S.

London, March 6.—The Vienna correspondent of The Times calls attention to the book issued by Professor Ernst Halle, which contains the unblushing statement that it is Germany's intention to absorb Holland, first economically, then politically. The correspondent says the author is one of the ablest of the younger German professors. He advocated the Emperor's views to increase the fleet some years ago. The book has been issued officially by the publishers for the German War Department. Halle reproaches the Dutch for coolness toward Germany in the former crisis, and suggests that the combined influence of Wilhelmina's German consort and the fear of Britain and America will open Netherlands' eyes to the advisability of closer union with Germany. Halle admits that the position of Holland at the mouth of the Rhine is the cause of Germany's failure to secure naval prestige. He proposes a naval convention and customs commercial union of the two countries and urges Holland to consider the fate of Spain.

Paris, March 6.—A despatch to the Paris edition of the Herald from London says that at a private meeting the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Britain agreed that action was necessary to prevent the loss of trade with Cuba, which now amounts to ten million dollars yearly. Representatives for traders with Cuba asked co-operation of the Chambers of Commerce in the effort to obtain favored nation treatment for British merchants. There is a movement in Cuba to make a reciprocity treaty with the United States which would destroy the greater part of the European trade.

Paris, March 6.—A despatch from London to the Paris edition of the Herald says that the Cunard Company has decided to build two new steamers for the Atlantic trade to eclipse in size anything afloat. The vessels are to be over 800 feet long, of 48,000 horse-power, and will make twenty-five knots an hour. The steamers will be built on the general outlines of the Lucania.

VENEZUELAN REBELS ROUTED

Garbira's Army Attempts Invasion, but Suffers a Crushing Defeat

Willemstad, Island of Curacao, Mch. 6—According to advices from Caracas the Mockist leader, Garbira, with 1000 men, nearly all of them Colombians, attempted a new invasion of Venezuela near La Frias Feb. 24. After a bloody fight at Las Cumbres, the insurgents were completely routed and obliged to retire across the frontier, leaving a large number of dead on the field.

The steamer Bolivar, formerly the Ban Righ, and more recently known as the Libertador, which was at Dominica, in the Leeward Islands, Feb. 25, is reported as coaling at San Lucia yesterday.

THE FEDERAL LIFE

The Most Successful Year in the History of the Company

The progress of the Federal Life Assurance Company, of Hamilton, since its organization twenty years ago, has been one of steady advancement and success. The report of the past year, is one that is most pleasing and satisfactory to the officers of the company the shareholders and the policy holders. The twentieth annual report of the Company, which has just been presented at the annual meeting held in the city of Hamilton, is one that is worthy of close inspection. During the past year the business has been very large, the total risks now amounting to over $12,000,000; the new business written up last year amounted to $2,285,763, the largest amount in any year in the history of the company. The amount of money received in premiums amounted to $430,504, and the interest income $57,554. The payments on policy holders' accounts amounted to $182,925.

As will be seen, the Federal Life now occupies a very enviable position with other companies.

Since the end of the past year, very favorable reports have been received from the agents of the company, and the prospects are that the present year will be a still more successful one.

During the twenty years of the company's business career, Mr. Dexter, the organizer, has very ably filled the position of Managing Director, and its great success is largely due to his perseverance and energy. At the recent meeting Mr. Dexter succeeded the late Mr. Beatty as President, at the same time retaining his position as managing director. Lieut.-Col. Kearns of Burlington, and Mr. F. H. MacPherson, of Hamilton, were appointed Vice-Presidents.

The company is ably and successfully represented in this district by Mr. H. B. Maharry, Simcoe street.

The 57th Regiment Band gave another of their delightful concerts in the market hall last night. The attendance was large and thoroughly appreciated the program which was presented.

ENORMOUS WEALTH BACKS ROSEBERRY

The Rotschilds Espouse Cause of Ex-Premier

SUPPORT OF THE TIMES

he Great Banking House Said to Owu Half In'erest in the Great Newspaper

Shows Discontent with Financial Policy of Government—Attitude of Old Unionist Organ Surprises the Conservatives

London, March 7.—Lord Rosebery has resolved to use the moneyed forces of Britain to overthrow the present government and to further his own propaganda. This is plainly shown in the remarkable attitude of the London Times, the traditional organ of the conservatives, which now deliberately takes up the cudgels in behalf of Lord Rosebery as against the duke of Devonshire, who himself is only half-hearted in his opposition to his former leader.

A member of the government said to-day:

"I believe it is quite true that the Rothschilds now own a half interest in the Times. We can no longer rely on the Times' support and can only deduce that the Rothschilds intend to back up Lord Rosebery's movement with all their millions and the other resources under their control."

Lord Rosebery's family connection with the Rothschilds (Lord Rosebery married Hannah De Rothschild, the eldest daughter and heiress of Baron Meyer De Rothschild) and their frequent outspoken dissatisfaction with the financial and internal policy of the present cabinet strengthens the supposition, and the statement of the peer above quoted would stand against any number of formal denials and means far more than mere schism in the liberal party.

CABINET AWARE OF PERIL

This accentuated danger is palpably appreciated in inner cabinet circles, though it is overlooked or intentionally ignored by the leading conservative organs allied with the Rothschilds.

It is said that there are several other papers in London waiting for a favorable opportunity to come out in support of Lord Rosebery.

Important developments in the campaign are not likely to occur in the immediate future. It is understood that Lord Rosebery and his allied interests are willing to wait until the verge of the next election before issuing a definite programme, in the meanwhile creating such weapons as the recently formed Liberal league and influencing defections among the members of the house of commons, both from Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and the liberal unionists of Lord Rosebery's platform of efficiency, imperialism and liberal economics.

A curious light has been thrown on the remount scandals by a high officer of the government, who tells that, however the merits or demerits of the case, it would never come up had not a private squabble arisen between members of the house of commons.

DARES A HUGE SCANDAL

According to this statement one member sent a bid for horses which was refused in favor of a Newmarket dealer. Against the latter the disappointed bidder and several racing members of the house of commons had bitter grudges. A cabal was formed, quite regardless of party lines, and a determination was arrived at to make the government suffer for giving contracts to a man who was not in favor with the aristocratic parliamentary racing set. These personal grievances apparently had long been common talk in the lobby of the house of commons and the bait thrown to the opposition by the disgruntled unionists was eagerly taken up, with the resulting exposition of the horse scandals.

On the best informed opinion the Pall Mall Gazette prophesies the end of all serious hostilities in South Africa by September and this is rather a pessimistic than an optimistic view. Judging from Lord Kitchener's progress this week and the well-founded rumors of General Botha's personal inclination to surrender, the practical end of the struggle may considerably antedate September.

LARGEST ARMY IN THE WORLD FOR THE DEFENCE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE

The Most Gigantic Military Scheme Known in English History and Canada will Provide Four Militia Corps--Conference at Coronation

London, March 7. — A despatch from Portsmouth to the Evening News says there is reason to believe from information received from a trustworthy source that the most important military scheme known in English history was foreshadowed by Secretary of War Brodrick in his speech in the House of Commons on the army estimates yesterday, when he said:—

"I trust it may be possible that an arrangement may be made by which the whole forces of the Empire would be available in case of a war in which the whole Empire would be involved. An opportunity for conferring with our colonial friends on this subject will occur at the same time of the coronation."

The correspondent says that from what can be gathered, Great Britain and Ireland would produce and equip six army corps, three of which, representing, with their cavalry brigades, a force of 150,000 men, would be prepared to take the field in defence of the colonies or for action against a European power. This would leave an equal number of men for home defence, besides the militia, yeomanry, and volunteers allotted for coast and garrison defence. This scheme is said to arrange for India to provide one army corps from its various presidencies. South Africa would raise two army corps available for service anywhere, and Australia two. New Zealand and Canada would each be marked to furnish four militia corps, wholly available for use if required. According to the correspondent, the scheme provides for the largest army in the world.

PASS THE NATAL LINE

London, Thursday, March 7.— A despatch to the Standard from Pretoria says that Gen. De Wet and ex-President Steyn have passed the Natal line and are now reported to be conferring with General Botha in the Utrecht district. The conference is the result of the recent severe losses inflicted on De Wet's force.

WANT CANADIAN TEACHERS

Ottawa, March 7. — The Secretary of State has received an application from Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, asking the services of forty Canadian lady teachers to proceed to South Africa to look after the Boer children in the concentration camps. The engagement is for one year. The salary will be £100, with rations and house or tent accommodation. Passage will be paid both ways. Twenty will be secured in Ontario and twenty in the other provinces. A Normal School certificate is the standard of qualification.

THE PRINCE'S TOUR THROUGH THE U. S.

Boston Gives the Kaiser's Brother A Reception That Will Long be Remembered

ALBANY TO WELCOME THE PRINCE

The Prince is Nearly Through with His Visit—He will be Pleased When the Trip is Over.

Boston, Mass., March 6 — Prince Henry's reception in Boston to-day was a repetition of the hearty welcomes he has encountered everywhere since his arrival in the United States. The special train reached the city on schedule time, arriving at the Back Bay station shortly after 10 o'clock. Since an early hour in the morning, crowds had been congregating in the vicinity, and it was with the utmost difficulty that the police, aided by squads of infantry and marines, were able to keep the people in check. The Prince was officially greeted by Mayor Collins and William T. Reincke, the German consul. Under an escort of cavalry the party proceeded to the Hotel Somerset. The route was through the business district, and all along Winter, Tremont and other thoroughfares the sidewalks were packed with spectators who cheered loudly as the Prince passed.

When the party arrived at Boylston street it was greeted with a salute of seventeen guns fired by a battery in Boston Common. During the stay of the prince and his suite at the hotel the cavalry remained on guard outside. Governor Crane was one of the first to appear to make his call of state, and then, as demanded by the formalities of the occasion, he hastened back to the state house to receive the return call of the royal visitor. Under the cavalry escort the prince and his suite proceeded to the state house by way of Commonwealth and Massachusetts avenues and Beacon street.

At the conclusion of the call upon the Governor, and after a look at the Shaw monument, the party proceeded to the public library where, amid the Abbey paintings, Mayor Collins and other city officials awaited their turn to greet the visitor. From the public library the prince was taken by way of Dartmouth street and Commonwealth avenue back to his hotel.

PRINCE HENRY AT HARVARD

Cambridge, Mass., March 6—Prince Henry spent the afternoon at Harvard University, noting all that he saw with a keen eye and expressing surprise and astonishment at the size and completeness of the institution. The Prince was heartily received by the faculty and students of the university. The visitors arrived under escort from Boston at half past one and were received in Memorial Hall by President Eliot. After the greetings had been exchanged all proceeded to the faculty room, where after the professors and officers had been presented, luncheon was served. The meal was as informal as consistent with collegiate and imperial dignity, and when it was finished all repaired to the Harvard Union building, where there was a formal reception to students and a few brief speeches. The programme of the afternoon closed with a reception to the Germanic student Association at the home of Professor Munsterberg.

ALBANY TO WELCOME PRINCE

Albany, N.Y., March 6—All arrangements have been made for the reception of Prince Henry and his suite, who will arrive in Albany early tomorrow morning. The guest will be escorted by committees representing the Albany City Club and the State Legislature, first to the City Hall, where the Mayor will formally present the freedom of the city. From the City Hall the party will proceed to the State Capitol, where the Prince and his suite will be presented to Governor Odell and members of the Legislature.

MYSTERIOUS DISSAPPEARANCE

Paddy Donoghue, of Lindsay Thought to Have Suicided

The town of Lindsay is in a state of nervous excitement, the cause of which is the mysterious disappearance of one Paddy Donoghue, a laborer who is somewhat addicted to drink. On Monday Paddy had been drinking, and early that evening Chief Nevison put him in the lock-up for a few hours to sober up. About ten o'clock he was released and started for home. When he arrived there the place was locked up and Paddy was obliged to sleep out that night. Where he stayed, no person knows. About 6.30 next morning he was met by a young man named O'Brien, an employee of Sylvester Bros. foundry, on Lindsay street, near the bridge. This was the last seen of him. On Tuesday forenoon, Mr. Lew Winters found an overshoe and hat on the ice near the waters edge. These articles were identified by Mrs. Donoghue as the property of her erring spouse. Search was at once made along the river, but no trace of the supposed suicide was found.

DAIRY CONVENTION

To Be Held Here on March 13th—Prominent Speakers Coming

A Dairymens' meeting, under the auspices of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute will be held in the Town Council Chamber on Tuesday, March 13th, and should be well attended by the farmers and dairymen of the district.

The meeting will open at 1.30 sharp, when Mr. D. Derbyshire, President of the Eastern Dairymens' Association will address the meeting. Mr. H. Glendenning, of Manilla will give an address on "How to Feed and Handle the Dairy Cow," and "The Breeding and Feeding of the Bacon Hog." Mr. L. A. Zufelt of the Kingston Dairy School will deliver an address on "The Care, Handling, and Manufacturing of Milk."

The addresses will be very instructive and interesting and should be well attended.

Swatted for Trumping Her Ace

"If your partner trumps your ace jump across the card table and hit him in the mouth as hard as you can," is a rule among Peterborough whist players, and and it is what society woman did to one of the social lions the other night during a game at one of the homes in town. The attempt by the woman to impress upon her partner that he should not trump his partner's ace came after a series of provoking misplays. The lady, had frequently complained of her partner's lack of whist sense. Finally, when she led an ace he trumped it she threw her cards on the floor, leaned across the table, and struck the man a stinging blow squarely in the mouth. "Won't you ever learn anything?" she shouted. "You are a ninny to trump that ace. You have spoiled this whole evening for me. You couldn't play pins." With blushes and awkward excuses, the hostess tried to laugh away the incident, and the victim of the blow said it was a joke, but the man's pugilistic partner declared that it was not a joke and that it was what anybody merited who would try to play whist when he does not know Hoyle from Homer.

Rheumatic Pains Cured by Nerviline

This is the testimony of Mr. Benjamin Dillon, Leeds, Ont., who says: I feel it my duty to proclaim the marvellous value of Polson's Nerviline as an infallible cure for rheumatic pains. It cures them every time. Nothing I know of equals it as a household liniment, and mothers should feel it as necessary as bread itself. Nerviline has cured rheumatism of 20 years standing, and can cure you. Instant relief, absolute cure. Large bottle 25c.

THE ENORMOUS COST OF THE BOER WAR

How the British Underestimated the Great Task of Conquering the Boers

SINGLE ARMY CORPS SUFFICIENT

But Five Times This Number had to be Sent to the Veldt—Years Effort Required Before the Country Will be Prosperous and Happy

London, March 7—When the first call for money and men was made with which to prosecute the Boer war in 1899 the sum of $49,000,000 was asked for, and it was believed by the blind jingoes that the Dutch Republics could be extinguished in four months by an army of 47,000 men. The last demand for money in the past year was for the sum of 278,743,000, and Parliament has appropriated, altogether, $704,948,300 for the conquest of the Boers. By the end of the last month, which was the end of the British fiscal year, the total cost of the war will reach at least $844,000,000. The war is in its fourth year, and instead of 47,000 men, the British force in South Africa at the last report numbered 237,000 men. The average during active operations has been in the neighborhood of 200,000, and the British have lost by death or permanent disabilities over 25,000 men, while the total of British casualties, including the surviving wounded, numbers 100,701 men, and 6240 officers. This is a tremendous sacrifice to make in blood and treasure, and the contest is not ended. It has burdened the people of this and the next generation with heavy debt, and has been accompanied by the jobbing and corruption which are, perhaps, more dangerous to a nation than war itself. The government seems to have been swindled on a great scale. It paid double prices for horses, and received bad mounts. Meat was sold by a company to the army which was forced to pay at least twice as much as civilians in South Africa for the same articles, and recently the company declared a dividend of 100 per cent., besides carrying $2,430,000 to its reserve fund. The Boer Republics are practically wiped out, and the country is desolated. Years of effort and immense outlay will be required to restore the land to prosperity. From this bloody war no good can come, unless it be that it will enforce the lesson that in these days of high power arms and precision, war, even against the smallest nation, is a dangerous undertaking.

Malt Breakfast Food

Has Become the Standard Breakfast Cereal

Cereal breakfast foods that have not the proper proportion of mineral salts are not up to the standard established by food experts by the aid of digestion and for the work of keeping the blood pure.

Eminent analytical chemists assert that Malt Breakfast Food is complete in all the points that go to make a perfect health food. It is rich in malt, gluten and phosphates; a perfect food for body and brain. Prof. O'Brien Has Returned

Prof. and Mrs. O'Brien, who will be so pleasantly remembered by a large number of friends, returned to town yesterday at noon, at the earnest solicitation of the professor's many friends and admirers, and will be pleased to meet his friends at his private office, No. 223 Hunter street terrace, where he was during his former visit. Since leaving town, Professor O'Brien has met with great success in Lindsay and Cannington, where he made a great many friends. At both of these places he delivered lectures to very large audiences, who warmly appreciated his explanation of his wonderful science. Prof. O'Brien is recognized as the leading phrenologist and palmist in America, which reputation he has held for many years. By referring to his card in another column, those desiring to call on him professionally, can obtain further information as to hours, etc. As the professor's time in town will be short, those wishing to consult him should do so at once.

MASONIC GATHERING

Free Masons Meet in Town Yesterday—The New Hall Dedicated

The Masonic District Lodge of Instruction was convened in the new Masonic Hall yesterday afternoon. A large number of brethren from lodges in the surrounding district were present. Among those present yesterday afternoon were Rt. Wor. Bro. Judge Harding, Acting Grand Master; Rt. Wor. Bro. Rev. Von Pergh, Grand Chaplain, and Rt. Wor. Bro. Ed Worth D.D.G.M., of Erie District, No. 1.

During the afternoon and evening the work of the several degrees was exemplified by visiting lodges of a lodge of instruction. During the evening a special convocation of the Grand Lodge was also held, and the handsome new blue room, [illegible] in Ontario, was dedicated with interesting and imposing ceremony. Some 250 members of the fraternity sat down to a sumptuous banquet, which was pleasingly interspersed with toasts and vocal and instrumental music.

Anecdotal.

As a preface to his attack upon the recent army appointments in England, Rudyard Kipling tells a story of a man who was carrying a bag, and of whom a fellow-traveler asked what it was that the bag contained. "Mongooses," was the answer; "my brother sees snakes, and I'm taking the mongooses up to kill them." "But your brother doesn't see real snakes." "No; but these aren't real mongooses."

Hans Jensen, a Dane, who appeared before a Kansas judge in order to take out naturalization papers, very easily demonstrated his fitness for the privilege. "Hans," said the judge, "are you satisfied with the general conditions of the country? Does this government suit you?" "Yas, yas," replied the Dane, "only I vould like to see more rain." "Swear him!" exclaimed the judge. "I see that he already has the Kansas idea."

On one occasion Hans Richter was present at a concert given by a brother composer, at which the latter performed a long and not particularly interesting work of his own. When the composition came to an end Richter expressed his criticism in a very few words. "Well," he said, "I too haf written compositions to make a pile so high," raising his hand three feet from the ground; "but I haf burned them!"

A story is being told in the London clubs about King Edward. A discussion once arose among a circle of his intimate friends as to how they would each meet a sudden reverse of fortune. One of them turned to the Prince—it was before his accession—and said: "If the monarchy was overthrown here, sir, what would you do?" The Prince of Wales thought for a moment, and then replied: "Well, I think I might support my family by lecturing in the United States upon how it feels to be Prince of Wales."

When Mark Twain lived in Buffalo he made the acquaintance of some neighbors under peculiar circumstances. Emerging from his house one morning, he saw something which made him run across the street, and remark to the people who were gathered on the veranda: "My name is Clemens; my wife and I have been intending to call on you and make your acquaintance. We owe you an apology for not doing it before now. I beg your pardon for intruding on you in this informal manner, and at this time of day, but your house is on fire!"

While Charles A. Towne was senator from Minnesota for about thirty days last winter he made a speech on the Philippines in the Senate Chamber of Congress, and it was pronounced a great effort. At the conclusion of his speech, Senator Chauncey Depew was among the first to take Mr. Towne by the hand and congratulate him. "Senator Towne," he is said to have remarked, "your delivery was splendid, your rhetoric unsurpassed, but your argument was damnable." This left-handed compliment was no doubt intended to embarrass Senator Towne, but it didn't. He bowed politely to Mr. Depew, and said: "Senator Depew, I am glad you compliment the only features of my speech you are capable of understanding."

Nebuchadnezzar's Throne Room.

(Berlin correspondence of the London "News.")

The German Oriental Society confirms the reports in American papers to the effect that Dr. Koldewey has succeeded in discovering Nebuchadnezzar's throne room at Babylon. It is a gigantic building, about 60 feet wide by 160 feet long. Exactly opposite the door is the niche in which once the royal throne stood, and on both sides and on the northern front of the hall are richly colored ornaments, in good preservation, which will doubtless prove of the highest historical and artistic importance. The German expedition has also begun excavations in the City of Babylon, near the present village of Jumjuma, and has already discovered a goodly number of inscribed clay tablets, which, according to the testimony of Dr. Weissbach, the Assyriologist of the expedition, contain letters, psalms and vocabularies. They are, therefore, all documents of the deepest interest, and are specially calculated to further the study of the Old Testament.

With the help of new railway material, the work on the hill of Amran-ibn Ali is shortly to be resumed, and the excavations of this unique Pantheon of the Babylonian metropolis, hidden deep down in the earth, promise rich and varied discoveries.

The German Oriental Society does not confine its activity to Babylon. It has secured two other hills, named Fara and Abu Hatab, which are believed to contain particularly fine monuments dating from 4000 B.C. The two hills are not far from Nuffar, where the American excavations are being made, and the Sultan has already issued an irade permitting the excavations.

Jack Frost, Artist.

One of the small wonders of the winter season is the abundant and beautiful tracery which Jack Frost has a habit of writing on the pane, usually overnight, in the hours of sleeping, when the fires burn low and the house has lost something of the cheery warmth of day. Everyone has seen and admired the mysterious fungus-like growth which is often the thing which greets him in his first look at the world of a biting winter morning perhaps without knowing that its formation, in all its multiform and delicate variations, is one of the most incomprehensible of phenomena. In Cosmos recently a writer gave some of the theories that have been advanced from time to time to explain it. The Literary Digest translates from the article as follows:—

"The least arrangements of these tiny interlacing ice-crystals furnish decorative designs of incontestable originality and of unequalled delicacy. The observer asks, not without surprise, how in these marvellous formations of ice one and the same design is often rigorously and mathematically reproduced in a certain space, while its character differs totally only a few inches away. There is in this fact alone a real mystery that no one can explain plausibly, at least at present.

"In one place appear very distinctly almost recognizable plants with long, thick leaves. Palms and ferns abound, forming mimic forests. By their side stretch out fine fringes bordering the angles of fantastic sheets. Further away seem to rise the serried trunks of a lofty grove in the midst of a carpet of verdure.

"Then the scene changes completely. On all sides appear the light feathers and plumes of birds. . . . .

"What are the physical phenomena that control the formation of these tree-like frost pictures, so remarkable and so varied? Most of our scientists answer these questions by hypotheses, more or less valuable. Almost all give abundant explanations of the deposition of frost along the branches of trees. As to the causes that determine the appearance of such delicate and beautiful ornaments of this same frost on the panes of our windows, most of them remain silent.

"They tell us that the most probable method of frost-formation is as follows: Every tiny droplet of water, if it is produced by condensation of vapor below the freezing-point, is necessarily in a state of 'superfusion.' In this condition when it meets a rough surface it is deposited thereon as a microscopic crystal of ice impregnated or covered with a thin layer of liquid water at the freezing-point.

"This latter, being in continual contact with air that is colder than itself, must finally freeze. As the motion of the air brings up new masses, the thickness of the frost increases.

"Other physicists, we are told, give a somewhat different explanation. According to them, when the vapor of water in the air is deposited as ice, without passing through the liquid state at all, it constitutes frost. That the vapor does not really pass through the liquid state is abundantly shown by the fact that frost has not the structure of frozen dew. It presents, on the contrary, a layer of spongy, opaque ice in which we can detect the prismatic crystals lying side by side. There are still other scientific men who explain the feathery frost formations on the branches of trees by the congelation of a thick mist that comes in contact with a body of lower temperature than the freezing-point or by the solidification of a fog in superfusion, determined by contact with a solid body. The French writer says further:

"We will leave the reader to take his choice of these opinions. So far as the deposit of frost on our window-panes is concerned, we must suppose that the infinite variety of design presented by the crystals is due to the nature of the glass. This substance is, in fact, a very bad and very irregular conductor of heat; it also offers a certain resistance to the physical action of crystallization. These causes are sufficient, when vapor is congealed on the surface, to bring about the formation of these designs, which are as varied as they are remarkable."

Not so Sick as Supposed.

Judging from an opinion expressed recently in The London Spectator, Turkey's sobriquet of the "Sick Man" is being maintained under false pretences. "A strong Sultan," says the writer, "could still place in the field an army of 600,000 of the bravest soldiers in the world, defend his coasts and ports with torpedo boats, and even in defeat inflict terrible blows upon his conqueror. It is true that the advent of a strong Sultan is most improbable, the race of Othman appearing at last to be worn out, but a Sultan weak as a Merovingian is quite probable, and a strong Mayor of the Palace or Grand Vizier would be even more dangerous, because replaceable. A ruler of Turkey who threw all caution to the winds, summoned every Osmanli to his standard, stopped all payments except for munitions of war, and fought as the Mahdi fought at Omdurman, would, to begin with, shatter all European alliances, might hold in check for three years any single European power, and might while being defeated cause an explosion such as Europe has not had to face since the Spahis threatened Vienna. The Sick Man will bequeath nothing, and the whole western world desires his heritage. The catastrophe may not come just yet, for the strange being who now occupies the throne of Turkey, and who will neither yield nor fight, seems irremovable; but it cannot be put off forever, and every blow such as the one M. Delcasse has just delivered brings us nearer to its occurrence. If history affords us any guidance, the Turk will die biting hard."

"I once won a case with one of James Whitcomb Riley's poems," says Congressman Brick of Indiana, who is a lawyer, "and so I stand for him. I was defending a man charged with stealing silk, and it looked so bad for him that I decided on an appeal to the jury. I did the best I could to win with the evidence; but I banked most on the fact that the defendant was a young man with a wife and child, and that it would go hard for all of them to have him go to the penitentiary for a term of years. My whole argument led up to the point where I closed with Riley's little poem, 'Back From a Two Years' Sentence.' When I finished, the jury was in tears, and even the Judge and the Attorney for the prosecution were affected. The jury took just one ballot, and returned a verdict of not guilty."—New York Tribune.

Information for the Farmer.

Honesty in business pays in the long run. The Americans exported in 1880 127,553,907 pounds of cheese. Owing to adulteration, skim and filled cheese, the United States output to foreign countries decreased last year to 39,813,517 pounds. On the other hand, Canadian cheese, which has a name for reliability, has grown in exports from 40,368,000 in 1880 to 190,926,327 pounds in 1901.

The amount of carbonic acid gas given off by a few plants is so small that one hundred plants in a room would not give as much as one man during a night, and they make many volumes of oxygen during the day more than sufficient to compensate for their presence. Rooms in which plants are kept have, moreover, a fresh odor about them, owing to the fact that they absorb nitrogen, and it is this in part that makes a room stuffy, because nitrogen occurs in most of the secretions emanating from man or animals.

Choice of Grain for Seed.

By instructions of the Minister of Agriculture another distribution will be made this season of samples of the most productive sorts of grain to Canadian farmers for the improvement of seed. The stock for distribution is of the very best and has been secured by the Director of the Experimental Farms from the record-breaking crops recently had in the Canadian Northwest. It will be worth while for farmers generally to renew their seed of oats when varieties which have produced more than 100 bushels per acre can be had. The distribution this spring will consist of samples of oats, spring wheat, barley, field pease, Indian corn and potatoes. Every farmer may apply, but only one sample can be sent to each applicant, hence if an individual receives a sample of oats he cannot also receive one of wheat, barley or potatoes, and applications for more than one sample for one household cannot be entertained. These samples will be sent free of charge through the mail. Applications should be addressed to the Director of Experimental Farms, Ottawa, and may be sent in any time before the 15th of March, after which the lists will be closed, so that all the samples asked for may be sent out in good time for sowing. Parties writing should mention the sort of variety they would prefer, and should the available stock of the kind asked for be exhausted some other good sort will be sent in its place.

Winter Washing of Fruit Trees.

The winter season offers the fruit-grower his opportunity for wreaking vengeance on the insect enemies which play such incalculable havoc with the fruit trees in the summer months. The insects are practically at his mercy in the dead season, for they cannot flee from the deadly poison he may with safety apply for their destruction, and if the owners of orchards care to exercise their powers of quelling infestation at the proper time and in the proper way they can largely diminish, if not entirely remove, the risk of harmful insect attacks. The Board of Agriculture has prepared, and is circulating free of charge, a leaflet dealing with this subject which is deserving of thoughtful attention.

As is well known, the insects hibernate in the broken bark of the trees, and the course of treatment proposed is the washing of the trees with caustic alkali wash, the use of which has been found effectual in removing the rough decaying bark under which the insects shelter, and at the same time in destroying the eggs of noxious insects. The directions given for the preparation of the wash are:—First dissolve one pound of commercial caustic soda in water; then one pound of crude potash in water. When both have been dissolved mix the two well together; then add three-quarter pound of agricultural treacle, stir well, and add sufficient water to make up ten gallons. The best time to apply is about the middle of February, when the eggs are in a more susceptible state and the trees still safe from injury.—London Post.

It Pays to Keep Hogs.

It is a mistake for any farmer not to keep live stock of some kind. Almost all farmers appreciate the profit there is in cows, and the fact that they maintain the good condition of the soil and tend to add wealth in more ways than one.

But how is it about hogs? They go well with the dairy. It was a mistake to get scared at the time when hog cholera prevailed—at least to get so scared as to give up hogs altogether. We know a great many farmers who made money out of hogs the last year. Hog cholera has not prevailed so extensively as in some years in the past.

But it seems to be the fact that on many farms not a single hog is to be found. As some one has said, these farmers are throwing away enough milk and refuse from the table to keep a good sow or two, and besides raising their own meat have a nice little bunch to sell each year. "The idea seems to prevail among a great many," says this writer, "that unless you own or are operating a large farm there is no place for the hog. This is a very mistaken idea. There can be just as much made in proportion with hogs upon a small form as upon a large one.

"Few are the farms (it matters not the size) that will not support a brood sow or two and do it well, with scarcely any other feed than the milk, parings and refuse from the table and a liberal supply of grass. Sows kept in this manner will, as a rule, have more pigs, and they will also be healthier and stronger. After the sows have their pigs, push them along and do not let them become stunted, because a pig stunted when it is little will never make the hog it would have made had it been kept continually growing. After the pigs will weigh from 60 to 100 pounds, if they are nice, growthy, attractive fellows, there is always a market for them. There is scarcely a neighborhood where you will not find men that are always on the lookout for shoats of this kind, to follow cattle or feed out, and this is the small farmer's opportunity to dispose of them at a good profit, too."—Farm, Field and Fireside.

"Do you think that Miss Strong will make Jack a good wife?" McRounders inquired of Clubboy.

"I wouldn't say that, but you just bet your life she'll try to make him a good hubby."—Philadelphia Press.

Callisthenics

Are a benefit to healthy women. But to women who are suffering from diseases peculiar to their sex they are an injury. When there is weak back or bearing-down pains, sideache or other indications of womanly weakness, exercise can only aggravate the condition. The womanly health must be first restored before strength can be developed by exercise.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well. It does this by healing the womanly diseases which undermine the general health. It stops the drains that weaken women, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"When I first commenced using Doctor Pierce's medicines," writes Mrs. George A. Strong, of Gansevoort, Saratoga Co., N. Y., "I was suffering from female weakness, a disagreeable drain, bearing-down pains, weak and tired feeling all the time. I dragged around in that way for two years, and I began taking your medicine. After taking first bottle I began to feel better. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, two of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' one vial of 'Pleasant Pellets,' also used one bottle of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Now I feel like a new person. I can't thank you enough for your kind advice and the good your medicine has done me.

"I have a sister who is taking your medicine and it is helping her."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets promote regularity of the bowels, and assist the action of "Favorite Prescription." No other laxative should be used with Dr. Pierce's Medicines.

A Great Man and a Child.

IN his reminiscences of Horace Greeley in the "Youth's Companion's" series of Recollections of Famous Editors, Noah Brooks says that Greeley could bear a great sorrow or a great disappointment with the fortitude of a stoic, but a trifling annoyance would provoke him to an outburst of wrath that was simply childish. The death of his little boy, his only and idolized son, was to him an awful blow. No man can know what agony the stricken father silently endured, his grief coining the drops of his heart's blood. But a typographical blunder, especially if it were in one of his own writings, drove him into spasms; then his maledictions on the offending typesetter and proofreader were something blood-curdling to hear.

One morning he went swiftly down to the "Tribune" office to find the compositor who had made a bad error in setting the types for one of his editorial articles in the paper. Bounding upstairs into the composing-room, with blue fire in his eyes and shaking the paper folded across the page to show the offence, he shrieked, "Show me the man! Show me the man that did this!" The error had already been made a topic of discussion in the office, and the culprit, a very old man who had been with Mr. Greeley on the "New Yorker" and on the "Tribune" ever after, came out from behind his case and tremulously pleaded guilty. The editor, standing there in the full height and strength of his manhood, looked down upon the little old man with a startled air, and then, turning away, invited anybody in the office to kick him (Greeley) downstairs.

Of his education, Mr. Greeley said it "was picked up by the way." It is natural that one who knew him should wonder what manner of man he might have been if he had been trained and disciplined in an institution of learning. He might have been a very much greater man, thinks Mr. Brooks; and then, too, his raw resources might not have been so strong and abundant under a scholastic rule.

When he was a lad of nine years he was offered free tuition in the academy at Exeter, New Hampshire. His parents declined the offer, partly through pride, Mr. Greeley thought, although nominally because his mother was unwilling to part with him at that tender age. Later in life, speaking of this failure to secure an academic course of instruction, he said: "I suppose I ought to be sorry, but I am not much."

Mr. Greeley affected contempt for college-educated men, and was accustomed to say, with great emphasis, "Of all cattle, the most useless in a newspaper office is a college-bred man!" This seemed to be an affectation intended to justify his own lack of scholarship, as if he were the shining example of what a great editor could be without special training. As a matter of fact, adds Mr. Brooks, during my term of service on the "Tribune" a majority of the men on the staff were college-bred men.

Some Epigrams on Growing Old.

Max O'Rell, in an article on "Old Women," says, among other things:

"A woman who knows how to grow old gracefully is a delight; but an old woman, whose wrinkled grimaces try to be inviting, voluptuous smiles, whose skeleton, loaded with diamonds, seems to crack as if on the point of crumbling to dust, who has a painted face, dyed hair, and false teeth—that woman makes me shudder; it is the most horrible sight in the world.

"For a man, love is an expectation at twenty, an irresistible desire at thirty, a habit at forty, an indiscretion or a hesitation at sixty, and a profanation at seventy. For a woman love is a dream at twenty, an experience at thirty and a reminiscence after forty.

"Balzac, the greatest authority on love and women, and the most wonderful dissector of the human heart who ever lived, says that the best and most artistic effort of a clever and refined man is at fifty-two, and that a woman is perfect only at thirty-five. There is hope for some of us.

"Happy the woman who knows how to grow old! Happy her husband especially!

"I have heard it said that few women know how to get old. However true this may be, the old woman who believes that she is still attractive is much less ridiculous than the old man who believes that he is still irresistible."

The Considerate Dog.

A yellow dog who had bayed the moon ever since sunset was finally approached by a sedate old mastiff about 2 o'clock in the morning.

"See here, friend," said the mastiff, "will you be so good as to explain why it is you get so much comfort out of barking all night at the moon?"

"Well, it's this way," explained the yellow dog: "You see, I am afflicted with insomnia, and it takes an acute form which makes me feel obliged to bark at something; so I, being a considerate dog, bark at the moon, knowing that it cannot hear me. Therefore it is not annoyed in the least, and I am afforded much relief."

"So you are actuated purely by considerate motives and a sincere desire to spare anyone annoyance?"

"Just so!" and the yellow dog wagged his tail proudly.

"But did it never occur to you to consider your neighbors also?" demanded the mastiff.

The yellow dog was overwhelmed with confusion. He listened for a moment to the hitherto unnoticed profanity and tearing of hair that was going on all over the neighborhood. Then he tucked his tail beneath him and slunk under the house.

Moral: Before striking at an enemy be sure you have no friends within range.

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with us—
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, as black as soot, it strews
The streets and pavements where we go,
We tramp it under foot and kick—
'Tis not the snow we used to know!

THE LIAR OF WINTERGREEN SHOAL.

BY JAS. A. TUCKER.

WHERE the little driftwood fire in front of "Bush" Gallagher's "shack" danced fitfully to the whimsical music of the west wind, the figures of four men reclined uneasily. Uneasily, for it was a rough beach—a narrow margin, bowlder-built and deadwood-strewn, 'twixt the dark, forbidding "bush" and the yet more dark, forbidding water. Twinkling lights, at intervals up and down the shore, told of other encampments and of civilized man's love of the cheer of fire, when divorced from his accustomed haunts and set down in the midst of inscrutable night and unfamiliar nature.

It was the time of the fall trolling at Wintergreen Shoal, on the Georgian. Men had come out from town to enjoy the unsurpassed sport, and to share the harvest of the waters with the bronzed and hardened fishermen and farmers. A fine season it had been, too, and great was the catch of that most toothsome and delicate of finny creatures—the plump, meaty, muscular, and always game salmon-trout, the "namaycush" of the fresh-water seas. Forty, fifty and even sixty of these mottled beauties, weighing anywhere from four to six or seven pounds, and taken, fish by fish, by the incomparably sporty method of line and spoon, had this season been no unusual day's record for experienced trollers.

"Bush" Gallagher was not only one of the oldest settlers and farmers along the lake shore—he was one of the best fishermen, hunters and trappers also, and, like all men of real prowess in these pursuits, something of an accomplished liar to boot. "Bush's" farmhouse being a couple of miles back from the beach, he had built a fishing shanty down by the water. Here he kept his boat and hither he came and established headquarters every fall when the fish schooled in to the shoal. Often he found profit in sharing the accommodation of the shack with townsmen, who feared rheumatism and colds from sleeping in tents, or in wigwams, or under upturned boats, in the latter end of October. And so it happened that this fall "Bush" Gallagher had three "boarders" who were glad enough to pay $2 a head for a week's comfortable shelter, with "yarns" to enliven the long nights and pointers on the subtleties of successful trolling from the most renowned fisherman and romancer of Wintergreen Shoal.

"Bush" had been, on the evening in question, reciting for the second time a marvelous account of the great fishing of thirty years before.

"Yes, siree, that was a great fall, a great fall, I say. Why, sir, so farmers took so many trout we couldn't eat 'em, salt 'em, or give 'em away, and so we fed 'em to the pigs by the hundr'd, sir; yes, sir, I say by the hundr'd. An' would you bee-lieve it, so much fish diet did the pigs have all that fall that when killin' time come, on towards Chris'mas, would you bee-lieve it, there wasn't a ham or a pork-chop or a side o' bacon in all this lake-shore settlement that didn't taste disagreeable strong o' fish—yes, sir, I say disagreeable strong."

"It's a wonder," quietly remarked Mr. Joshua Ketch, the dignified K.C., who was one of "Bush" Gallagher's guests and auditors, and who at that time was adding the right proportion of aqua pura to a modest dose of dark liquid from a stone jar, "it's a wonder that, with so much phosphorous diet, the porkers did not run entirely to brain rather than bacon."

"Yes," added Dr. Killem, "and outstrip their owners in intelligence."

"Which wouldn't 'a' been a very hard matter, sir, not a very hard matter, I say, considerin' the intellec' of a lot o' the neighbors hereabouts," added "Bush" with a laugh at his dexterity in turning the shaft aside from himself.

"Now, I say, 'Bush,'" said "the Kid," his third protege, drawing contentedly at his pipe, "we've had a good deal of fiction. I suppose that's but natural, seeing this is a fishing party. Let's have some fact for a change."

"I don't comprehend you, sir; what do you mean, sir?" said "Bush." "I've been tellin' you gospel truth, an' I hope you don't mean to suspicionate the same."

"Ah, go on 'Bush,'" put in the lawyer, winking with his weather eye. "The Kid's right. You needn't be so dead serious about it. Now, tell us, honest Indian, hope-you-may-die, what, in your judgment, was the most exciting occurrence in the history of this shoal."

"Bush" was silent for some moments, not so much in the effort to recall the past as with the evident purpose of appearing to disdain so direct an impeachment of his veracity. He stirred the fire, put on a fresh log—for the night, though pleasant for October, was growing late—and then, after resuming his seat, bit off a "quarter section" of a plug of black tobacco.

"In 1869," he began, dreamily, "yes, it was '69, 'cause that's the year there was nine cows killed by lightnin' on Beaconsfield Jones' farm, an' the year the nine cows was killed was the same year Martha Jane Meredith an' 'Slug' Parki'son got hitched, an' the year them two got hitched was the same year that—but there's my story. Well, in 1869, as I was sayin', there was a stranger come down the Center road, one stormy October night, and turned in at Pete McLean's. Pete was a pretty well-to-do farmer, you mus' understand, but not too well liked in this here neighborhood, fer he was keen on money an' always got ahead o' the other feller in a deal. This stranger was a shabby-lookin' customer, with seedy clo'es, an' a hooked nose an' curly hair an' beard. He had a big carpetbag bulgin' out with stuff, and he said he was a travelin' salesman (I'd call him a peddler), an' expected to do business with the settlers in these parts. He give his name as Sol Nitler or Needler, an' he asked for a night's lodgin' an' breakfast at Pete McLean's. Pete, bein' keen for money I suppose, dickered with him for the price an' took him in—a mos' unheard-of thing for a farmer in them days to charge a stranger for a night's roostin' an' a slab o' sowbelly in the mornin'. But I dessay that stranger wouldn't eat pork an' had ter have fresh eggs, an' that may be why Pete charged him, after all.

"Well, Sol Nitler was around this neighborhood for three or four days, sellin' jewelry."

"Selling jewelry?" exclaimed the K.C., in the incredulous tone of a barrister cross-examining a hostile witness.

"Yes, jewelry, that's what I said," went on "Bush." "P'rhaps you don't know, Mr. Ketch, that you can sell luxuries where you can't git the price fer necessaries. But that's not in yer law books, it's jest a law of human nature. Sol Nitler drove a thrivin' trade, an' every night, reg'lar as the hens went to roost, he returned to Pete McLean's an' paid for his bed an' breakfast. These fac's I wasn't seized of at the time, bein' as I was down here on the shoal, like most o' the men folk. Pete McLean—he wasn't fishin' much that fall.

"Sol Nitler engaged with Jim Gregory, who was goin' ter drive to the railway, twenty miles away, ter call fer him at McLean's an' take him along. Pete didn't know of this, and when Jim Gregory drives inter his place in the mornin' bright an' early an' asks fer the Jew, Pete vows Sol ain't there—that he'd never came back the night before. Jim says that's strange. Pete allows it is strange, an' talks kind o' confused like as if Jim's suspicionin' him of some wrong-doing. Of course Jim ain't doin' anything of the kind, and drives off to the railway, thinkin' most likely Sol had took some other chance.

"Nex' night, as I was sleepin' here in a makeshift balsam an' bark wigwam, I woke up all of a start round about midnight, and pretty soon I thinks I hears the 'tuck-tuck, tuck-tuck' of steady rowin' out on the lake. 'Queer time o' night,' thinks I, 'fer anyone to be out in a boat. Mischief's abroad, someone liftin' nets.' So I gets up an' creeps out to the beach. It wasn't very dark. There was a moon, but it was behind a bank of cloud. I could see a boat out about quarter of a mile from shore, and, by jiminy! come to look, my boat was gone from the beach. My first idea was ter holler at the thieves, but on second thought I knowed it was better to sit tight and wait developments.

"The boat was manoeuverin' round out there fer some time, an' then it puts in fer shore again. As it draws near I crouches down in the underbrush, and pretty soon I sees there's two men in the boat, an' hanged if they don't look like—well, never mind who they looked like; that's part of my story. They pushes in, very quiet-like, and before the boat can scrape her snout on the stones, out they steps as noiseless as jackrabbits an' lifts her bodily—she was just a little duck-boat—up the beach. 'They've got no fish, that's sure,' says I to myself. Then they dives through the bush, quick-footed as red Injins, takin' the direction of the settlement, an' leavin' me crouchin' here like a fool, too surprised ter tell my own name if I'd 'a' been asked sudden.

"I confides in the boys nex' day as to what I'd seen, an' the yarn spreads round and people is sayin' pretty soon that so-an'-so is mean enough an' graspin' enough ter lift nets, but they're glad he got nothin' fer his pains. But I knows in my heart it was no netliftin' business, fer the only net in that direction was mine, an' nex' mornin' it was fuller o' fish than I'd ever seen a net before. But I keeps my counsel on that p'int.

"Soon Jim Gregory comes back from the railway an' brings word that Sol Nitler's not there nor been there, an' Jim tells somebody what passed at McLean's that mornin' he drove off, an' the story spreads, an' everybody matches my story with Jim's an' makes a piece o' them, an' the fat's in the fire. The men of the settlement meet at the blacksmith shop an' discuss the hull thing, pro an' con, an' a deputation is sent up to Pete McLean's, with me as spokesman.

"We call's Pete out o' the barn an' I tells him, straight up and down, that we don't want to make no charge nor no trouble, but we think circumstances calls fer explanation, and if he knows anything of the whereabouts of Sol Nitler he'd better say where or suffer the consequences. Peter McLean turns red an' then white, an' swears an' curses, tellin' us he don't know nothin' o' the Jew, an' we can go to all kinds o' places, if we like, for any further information; an' he winds up by sayin' my yarn about the boat is a infernal lie, which he'd make me prove it. An' he calls on his son Martin to back him up.

"I keeps my head an' says that's all very well, but 'Meantime, Mr. McLean,' I says, 'we're goin' ter search the woods an' fields round your house to the last rod, an' we're goin' ter drag the lake, and to-morrow we'll send ter town fer a law-officer to further investigate.' Peter McLean rushes into the house an' comes tearin' out with a shotgun, and vows a bloody oath that the first man who moves another foot on his land except in the direction of the gate will die in his tracks.

"That settled it. Not bein' armed, we retreated in good order. But that very night we sent Bill Dougall to town on horseback for the Crown Attorney. We also started ter drag the lake, but we couldn't find nothin', an' never did find nothin'. An' nex' day, when the law-officer arrived, what do you think?—Pete an' Martin had vanished clean as a half-hooked eel. No trace of either o' them was ever found, nor any of the Jew, though diligent search an' enquiry was made. Now, did Pete an' Martin kill the Jew or didn't they? In other words, is it true, as Spokeshave says, that murder will out?"

This gruesome yarn, with its singularly inconclusive ending, was surely a somewhat heavy and indigestible repast to retire on, and it would have been no matter for wonder had there been troubled dreams that night under the hospitable roof of "Bush" Gallagher. But exercise and fresh air are valiant enemies of the whole genus nightmare, and "Bush's" guests slept sweetly and arose early for their last day's sport.

Now it so happened that about noon Dr. Killem and "the Kid" pulled ashore for lunch at a point where a gray-bearded old man had his boat drawn up also. The three drifted into conversation, and the old man mentioned that his name was Bill Dougall. Then the doctor, still full of "Bush's" story, laid open his knowledge of the strange occurrence of October, 1869. Bill Dougall seemed mildly surprised and asked what the doctor was driving at, and when "Bush" Gallagher's whole story had been repeated, the old fellow lay back and shook with laughter like the proverbial "bowl full of jelly."

Might be Worse.

One day, Mackintosh, having vexed him by calling O'Coigly "a rascal," Parr immediately rejoined, "Yes, Jamie, he was a bad man, but he might have been worse; he was an Irishman, but he might have been a Scotchman; he was a priest, but he might have been a lawyer; he was a republican, but he might have been an apostate."

Dooley on Athletics For Women.

MR. HENNESSY having ventured to say that athletic exercise is a splendid thing for women, "Is it, faith?" said Mr. Dooley. "Well, it may be, but it's no good f'r th' women f'r th' men. Th' on'y spoorts she isn't good at is cookin' an' washin'. This large lady, a little peevish because she's off her dhrive, meets me at th' dure an' begins issuin' ordhers before I have me shoes off. 'Tis jut th' same as if I was back on th' hoist. She doesn't argy, she doesn't weep. She jus' says, 'Say, you,' an' I'm off on th' bound. I look her over, an' say I to meself, 'What's th' good? I cudden't cross that guard,' an' me reign is ended. I'm back to th' ranks iv th' prolitory.

"It won't do, Hinnissy. It's a blow at good govermint. 'Twill disrupt th' home. Our fathers was r-right. They didn't risk their lives an' limbs be marryin' these female Sharkeys."

Dressing-up For the Coronation.

(Paris Correspondent of London "Truth.")

THE Earl-Marshal's notification to the peers and peeresses of Great Britain is thought vastly amusing. It strikes us here as might an attempt to go back with pride to the ancestral missing link, whose skeleton it appears has been found in the farthest East. There was something grand and handsome in the distinctive costumes that Louis the Fourteenth invented. The tabouret and the pliant, or folding seat, had their manifest raison d'etre in the crowded saloons and galleries at Versailles. But the notification of the Earl-Marshal strikes us as the triumph of smallness, the exaltation of pettiness. Could Swift have been thinking of a similar notification in his time when he wrote about the war between the Big-Endians and the Little-Endians? A consequence of the notification will be to make American heiresses scorn offers of marriage from noblemen less high than dukes. They will know now that dukes only have strawberry leaves on their coronets and four rows of black snips of fur on their miniver capes. Barons who can only wear two rows of the black snips will be held of small account in the heiress preserves of the United States, and so, we may expect, will be earls who have half a row less than the marquis, and a whole row less than a duke. What American lady could bear to appear as a baron's wife in a mantle with a train three feet on the ground when the viscountess immediately preceding her had one a quarter of a yard longer, the countess preceding her half a yard, the marchioness three-quarters of a yard, and the duchess a whole yard? The English easily grasp the inferiority of their "proper stations" in or out of the Peerage. But the Americans do not. Their motto is "tout ou rien." They must have a front seat, or they leave the room. Mr. Jesse Grant, though not of the ornamental sex, declined to dine at Windsor with the lords' gentlemen-in-waiting. "If I do not dine with father (the ex-President of the United States) and mother at the Queen's table I go home." A court official with fear and trembling conveyed this intimation to her late Majesty, who reluctantly yielded, for Big-Endian and Little-Endian questions came within the compass of her brain, and she attached great importance to them. Mr. Jesse Grant did not know that the smallest of the court officials with whom he scorned to dine took precedence of the grand old Gladstone, and that without shocking any Englishman. The aristocratic nobody who waited on the Queen was supposed to absorb some of her sacred virtue. So far as precedence went, the Prime Minister, who was the representative of the nation, was of inferior standing. But I dare say this did not matter to the Grand Old Man.

I had some years ago one of her Majesty's judges (Sir Henry Keating) dining with me. Another guest was an English Honorable, who might have been, in regard to age, his son. It seemed to me absurd that the place of honor should not be given to the judge. To make things pleasant to him, I consulted him before the dinner came off on the subject of precedence. "If," he said, "it is a Franco-English dinner, adopt French rules, since you are in France; if it is an English one, adopt English, in which case I go behind the Honorable. Any earl's son old enough to wear a swallow-tailed coat and a white cravat is entitled to take the pas of me. I know that an American judge, accustomed to be looked up to, would not like to walk behind a young sprig of nobility. I remember Evarts, the great American lawyer who pleaded on the side of the United States at the Geneva Arbitral Court, being visibly annoyed at an earl's son who had just left Eton being placed above him, at dinner."

"One of 'Bush' Gallagher's yarns, eh?" he exclaimed. "Well, when ye've known 'Bush' as long as I have ye'll put as much dependence in his murder stories as in his fish yarns, an' that's not sayin' much."

Of course "Bush" was taxed with deception at the evening camp-fire. Not the ghost of a smile or of a blush haunted his countenance. "You suspicioned my veracity when I was tellin' gospel truth, an' yet you wanted entertainment, an' you got it, didn't you?" This was the only explanation he deigned.

"Right you are, 'Bush,'" said Mr. Ketch, K.C. "Still, you might have added, as a sort of postscript, you know, that there never was a Sol Nitler; that Peter McLean died here in bed ten years ago; that his son (still residing in this township) is called McAlpine, not Martin; that there was no railway in this section of the country in 1869, and finally that you were not here then yourself — all which I myself have quietly gathered from your own lips to-day, independently of the discovery of the Doctor and 'the Kid.'"

"Had you been educated at college, 'Bush,' you'd be one of the distinguished historical novelists of the day," added "the Kid."

"Or, if you'd been trained in my profession," said the Doctor, "you'd be the right kind of man to give expert medical testimony in the courts."

"Gentlemen," said Mr. Ketch, K.C., "if 'Bush' had been brought up to the law, I will not venture to say what would have happened. But anyway, here's looking at you, 'Bush.' May you live long and 'lie' in peace. Everybody drink hearty, for this is our last night, for a year at least, on Wintergreen Shoal."

The Bird—Gee, you oughter known better than to swallow a porcupine.

Queer Facts About Orchids.

THE life of an orchid hunter combines in itself all the most sensational features of exploration in untrodden districts, often infested by ferocious beasts and by even more savage natives, and in many cases highly malarious and disease laden. The rarer orchids are generally found in the most inaccessible spots, and in the densest and most marshy jungles. Even the natives avoid the districts into which the intrepid orchid hunter penetrates in search of his floral quarry.

A few years ago eight orchid hunters met at Tamatave, and then separated in search of specimens. Within a year only one of them survived, and he had spent months in the most pestilential swamps, from which he emerged with his health permanently impaired. One of the others had been captured by native priests, who drenched him with oil and burned him to death on their altar.

The expense of collecting the orchids and getting them at last into the saleroom is very great. For example, a fine orchid is found in a very out of the way part of Colombia. After being gathered the plants are wired to sticks and nailed inside boxes. These boxes are conveyed on a journey of several days to Bogota, whence another six days' journey takes them to Honda, where they are placed on rafts and conveyed down the Magdalena River to Savanilla—a fortnight's journey — where the steamer is awaited.

When at last, after a heavy outlay, the consignment reaches England, quite half the specimens will be dead, and in many cases the whole of them will be too far gone for recovery. The orchid importer has always to be prepared for heavy losses.

Twenty-seven thousand valuable plants were sent home on one occasion from Colombia by Mr. Roezl, and of these only two survived the voyage. They were sold for 40 guineas each—not a high price when one considers what they had cost.

Until the plant flowers its value is purely speculative. Its species is in most cases readily determined, but it may present some variation which will greatly enhance its value. For example, a certain orchid with a purple bloom may be worth about five shillings, but an example of the same species with white flowers will realise £100 at auction. The value of a plant depends upon its rarity and novelty even more than upon its beauty.

Many years ago an orchid, of quite new and unknown species, arrived in the packing in which some foreign plants were sent home. No one knew where it came from, and for a long while it continued unique. Orchid hunters sought everywhere for it, but not till seventy years later was it found.

Another orchid arrived in 1854 without any known place of origin, and, notwithstanding persistent search, its native habitation has not been found yet.

Some years ago two orchids were found in the Zoological Gardens on a heap of rubbish. They came in the packing with some South American monkeys, but their place of origin has not yet been discovered.—"Harmsworth Magazine."

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best!"

Our New Book on Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

DEPUTATION TO OTTAWA.

HON. MR. BLAIR, MULOCK, AND SUTHERLAND INTERVIEWED

The Minister of Railways and Canals is Giving the Question of Conserving Water for the Trent Valley System His Earnest Attention

The deputation of representative men from the Peterborough and Trenton Councils, the Board of Trade, the Trent Waters Conservation Association, and others interested in preserving a high minimum flow of water in the lakes and rivers forming a part of the Trent Valley Canal system, secured an interview with the Hon. A. G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals, at Ottawa, on Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues, Hon. Mr. Mulock and Hon. Mr. Sutherland, gave the deputation a very patient hearing, and readily recognised the advantages that would be derived from having all dams on the waters in question under the control of the Dominion Government, with a responsible man in charge to keep in reserve a sufficiency of water from the spring freshets to supply the requirements of navigation during the dry months of August and September.

MR. D. W. DUMBLE

explained to the hon. gentlemen the object of the deputation, and reviewed the rapid increase of industries and commerce in Peterborough during the past few years. He dwelt at length upon the importance of the Trent water system as a generator of power at reasonable rates, and gave figures to show the enormous increase in revenue to the Dominion government from the post office and customs house, which will be considerably augmented when the new industrial concerns commence operations. These are your returns, continued Mr. Dumble, from Peterborough's progressiveness, and we now urge the Dominion government to secure to us a continuous and steady flow of water from the Kawartha lakes. There are 30 or 40 dams, many of which are only used by lumbermen, and these men do not take the trouble to put in the stop logs when necessary. The speaker suggested that the Dominion government assume, if possible, absolute control of these dams, some of which are now owned by private parties and others governed by the Ontario Legislature. In this way, one intelligent engineer could control the of water as to assure a reserve until the dry months of August and September, when the lakes and rivers are too shallow for all requirements. Our destiny, concluded the speaker, is much with the Trent system, as a navigable and manufacturing power.

MAYOR DENNE

corroborated Mr. Dumble's remarks and drew attention to the act of one person last January, who, by putting in the stop logs, had nearly subjected Peterborough to a water famine. Had this act occurred a little later in the year, when a big fire broke out in town, the results would have been disastrous.

J. H. McCLELLAN

addressed the members at some length, and said that in July and August, the water, from Peterborough to Rice Lake fell to three feet. Under such condition, when the Trent Valley Canal is completed this stretch of water will have to be dredged at an enormous expense. He understood that the Ontario government, is willing to hand over the control of the dams in question to the Dominion government, and in building your canal, he said, you are taking our water from us, in which case it is only reasonable to expect this loss being made good to us. Power is of vital interest to Peterborough, and its generation by coal costs from $45 to $50 per horse power, as against $15 per horse power by water.

MR. GERMAN

spoke at some length, but as his remarks were chiefly confined to the condition and use of fine dams constructed and maintained by the Gilmour Lumber Co., together with an assumption that they should be taken over by the government at a price commensurate with the permanent improvements made thereon, they apparently did not have much weight with the ministers.

MR. R. R. HALL

restricted his remarks pretty well to the effect upon power of a conservation of the waters, which elicited from the Hon. Mr. Mulock the question, "If the government go to the expense asked of them, are the manufacturers, as direct beneficiaries, willing to pay for the same?" Mr. Hall was not prepared to reply to this. The Hon. Mr. Blair said that the government could only take control of the dams and appoint a commissioner, as suggested by Mr. Hall, with a view to navigation only, and the power companies should contribute to this expense. Mr. Hall suggested that both governments confer together on the matter.

JAMES KENDRY, M.P.,

secured a very attentive hearing. He spoke wholly on the claims of navigation for an even flow of water and suggested that as a preliminary step in the matter, the Dominion government take over the dams on Eels and Jacks Lakes, and conserve therein during the spring freshets, a sufficiency of water for use during the dry summer months. The dams could be purchased for $1500, and he urged that both governments work together in harmony with a view to meet the wishes of the deputation.

MR. BLAIR'S REPLY.

Mr. Blair replied that the matter had been receiving the consideration of the federal government for some time, and that he and his colleagues had been in communication with the Ontario government with regard to it. A satisfactory arrangement had not yet been arrived at, however, but the delegation might rest assured that the government would endeavor to effect a settlement that would be fair to all parties concerned. He considered that the more important grievance was the interference with navigation on account of low water. The navigation question was that which was receiving the attention of the two governments. That the low water interfered with the power was not nearly so important in his eyes. Mr. Blair promised to take the matter into his consideration and to give a definite answer as soon as possible.

LIST OF DELEGATES.

The delegation was composed of Mayor Denne, Ald. Bush, Ald. Clinkscale, Ald. Batten, Ald. Corbery, Ald. Edgcumbe, Ald. Shortly, Messrs. R. R. Hall, W. O. Ferguson, A. H. Stratton, and Mr. Felix Brownscombe, of Peterborough; Mr. David Gilmour, of Trenton, President of the Trent Conservation Association, and Mr. A. Stevenson, secretary; Mayor Funnell, Coun. Dickie and Coun. Matthews, of Trenton; Mr. J. Ferris, of Campbellford; Mr. J. H. McClellan, Mr. W. A. Sanderson, Mr. D. W. Dumble, president of the Peterborough Board of Trade, and Mr. G. O. Stuck, of Peterborough; Mr. W. Steers and Mr. W. F. Bolger, of Lindsay.

Mayor Denne, Aldermen Clinkscale, Ferguson and Batten remained in Ottawa yesterday, in order to secure an interview with Dr. Borden regarding an appropriation for the proposed new drill shed. Jas. Kendry, M.P., is also interesting himself in the matter.

STICK TO IT

Until Coffee Hits You Hard

It is about as well to advise people to stick to coffee until they get hit hard enough, so that they will never forget their experience, although it is rather unpleasant to have to look back to a half dozen years of invalidism, money and opportunity thrown away, which is really the terrible price paid for the weakest kind of a "mess of pottage."

A woman writes and her letter is condensed to give the facts in a short space. "I was a coffee slave and stuck to it like a toper to his 'cups,' notwithstanding I had headaches every day, and frequently severe attacks of sick headaches, then I used more coffee to relieve the headaches, and this was well enough until the coffee stimulant wore off, then I would have sick spells. Finally my digestion was ruined. Severe attacks of rheumatism began to appear, and ultimately the whole nervous system began to break down and I was fast becoming a wreck.

At this time I was induced to quit Coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee. This was half a year ago. The result has been most satisfactory. The rheumatism is gone entirely, blood is pure, nerves practically well and steady, digestion almost perfect, never have any more sick headaches and am gaining steadily in weight and strength." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE FIRST GAME OF THE FINALS TO-NIGHT

U. C. C. Defeats Stratford in a Closely Contested Game

FENELON FALLS TEAM WIN OUT

The public of Peterborough will have the opportunity to-night of witnessing one of the hardest fought battles and speediest games of hockey ever played in the Charlotte street rink when that husky aggregation from Galt known as "Dutchy" Morrison's Seven" will clash with the Peterborough intermediates.

The Galt team arrived on the midnight last night, and brought a number of "rooters" with them. They are a fine looking lot of fellows, and will certainly give the locals a hard run. It is their avowed intention (and they are not slow in making it public) to "put it over" the Peterborough's to such an extent that they will have to take a back seat.

The Peterborough seven who have been under the supervision of that excellent trainer "King" Dillon are in almost perfect shape and although doing little talk will go on the ice prepared to play the game of their lives and will no doubt surprise their opponents.

This game is the first game of the finals and the last to be played in Peterborough. The return match will be played in Galt the first of the week.

The number of goals count on the round.

The game is called for at 8.15 sharp.

In the Trent Valley League finals last night the Fenelon Falls team defeated Norwood at the latter place by a score of 8 to 6.

In the finals for the junior championship U.C.C. defeated Stratford by a score of 7 to 6 on the Mutual St. Rink.

The Stratford team gave U.C.C. a big surprise. At half-time the score stood 3 to 1 in favor of Stratford and at full time the game was a tie. They played ten minutes longer, neither team scoring. In the next 5 minutes U.C.C scored 3 and Stratford 2. Making score 7 to 6 in favor of U.C.C.

THE Federal Life

ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The twentieth annual meeting of the shareholders of this company was held at the head office in Hamilton, Tuesday, the 4th inst. Lieut.-Colonel Kerns, Vice-President, was appointed Chairman and David Dexter Secretary.

REPORT OF DIRECTORS.

The directors presented their annual report, as follows:

Your directors have the honor to present the report and financial statement of the Company for the year which closed on December 31, 1901, duly vouched for by the auditors.

The new business of the year consisted of 1,793 applications for insurance, aggregating $2,479,500, of which 1,704 applications, for $2,385,768.50, were accepted; applications for $93,731.50 were rejected or held for further information.

As in previous years, the income of the company shows a gratifying increase, and the assets of the company have been increased by $178,584.06, and have now reached $1,449,925.58, exclusive of guarantee capital.

The security for policyholders, including guarantee capital, amounted at the close of the year to $2,319,925.58, and the liabilities for reserves and all outstanding claims, $1,290,849.94, showing a surplus of $1,029,075.64. Exclusive of uncalled guarantee capital the surplus to policyholders was $159,075.64.

Policies on 56 lives became claims through death, to the amount of $126,745, of which $5,000 was reinsured in other companies, a rate of mortality considerably under that provided for.

Including cash dividends and dividends applied to the reduction of premiums $30,628.70, with annuities, the total payments to policyholders amounted to $182,925.67.

Careful attention has been given to the investment of the company's funds in first-class bonds, mortgage securities and loans on the company's policies amply secured by reserves. Our investments have yielded results better than the average results of insurance companies doing business in Canada.

Expenses have been confined to a reasonable limit, consistent with due efforts for new business.

The field officers and agents of the company are intelligent and loyal, and are entitled to much credit for their able representation of the company's interests. The members of the office staff have also proved faithful in the company's service.

The assurances carried by the company now amount to $13,058,777.61, upon which the company holds reserve to the full amount required by law, and, in addition thereto, a considerable surplus, as above shown.

The work of the current year, now well under way, has produced results even better than for the same period last year, leading to the belief that a like advantage may be maintained throughout the year.

DAVID DEXTER, Managing Director.
WM. KERNS, Vice-President.

AUDITORS' REPORT.

To the President and Directors of the Federal Life Assurance Company:

Gentlemen,—We have made a careful audit of the books of your company for the year ending December 31, 1901, and have certified to their correctness.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

FOREIGN TROOPS INCOMPETENT TO DEAL WITH CHINESE--GERMANY'S BIG FLEET

Real Object of Prince Henry's Visit Said to be the Obtaining of an Agreement with the United States to this Effect

London, March 7.—Dr. Morrison cables The Times from Pekin an account of an interview with the Viceroy of Yuan-Shai-Kai, regarding the withdrawal of the provisional government from Tien-Tsin. Yuan, Dr. Morrison says, has indisputable claims to British consideration, because as Governor of Shan-Tung he checked the Boxer insurrection and maintained order. The Viceroy urged the right of the Chinese Government to take over Tien-Tsin, as there is nothing in the settlement protocol to the contrary. Yuan declared he could preserve order in Tien-Tsin and Pe-Chi-Li Province, and would undertake to continue the river improvements already begun. He also promised to continue the annual payment from the native customs toward the indemnity. The Viceroy praised the conduct of the troops in Pe-Chi-Li, but argued that as they were ignorant of the condition and language of the country, they could not check Chinese brigandage so well as native troops.

CANNOT PREVENT SALE OF WEST INDIES.

London, March 7.—A despatch to The Times from Copenhagen says that in spite of the agitation, it is now impossible to prevent the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States. Ninety out of one hundred and fourteen members of the Lower House favor the sale, and it is doubtful if there is a majority against it in the Upper House.

M. LOUBET WILL VISIT RUSSIA.

London, March 7.—A despatch to The Times from Paris says that the Czar of Russia's invitation to President Loubet to visit Russia is couched in affectionate language. The Czar leaves the President to fix the date. The visit will probably be made before the end of May.

GERMANY WANTS A BIG FLEET IN THE CARIBBEAN WATERS.

New York, March 7.—A special cable to The Herald from Berlin says: "I am informed from a trustworthy source that the ultimate object of Prince Henry's visit to Washington is to bring about an agreement by which Germany will be permitted to maintain a large fleet in Caribbean waters to serve for the protection of German settlers and property rights imperilled by the frequent revolutions in South American Republics. In official correspondence the fleet of German warships assembled at La Guayra is styled as the 'American station.' Although the fleet sent to Venezuela for the enforcement of German rights already consists of five vessels, it is intended to steadily increase this number. The difficult issue is the acquisition of a repair dock and coaling station. Hope is entertained here that no objection will be made to the maintenance of the West Indies, because it is intended to be entirely for defensive purposes, and not to acquire territory. It is claimed that representations made by Prince Henry and Dr. Von Holleben, the German Ambassador at Washington, have convinced the officials in Washington that no covert designs are entertained, and that protection only is desired. I am also informed that the German financiers who constructed the Venezuelan railway, which is the subject of pending negotiations between Germany and President Castro's government, are anxious to dispose of their property to American investors. These financiers are represented in New York by Kuhn Loeb & Company. The claim is made that Germany is not in a position to offer adequate protection to German capital and investments in South America, and that the Great North Venezuelan Railway might fare better in the hands of United States capitalists."

PRINCE AT ALBANY.

Albany, N.Y., March 7.—Prince Henry arrived in Albany this morning at 6. The usual ceremonies are being gone through. The Prince is being greeted enthusiastically. He left for West Point at 10.30.

THE WAESLAND SANK IN LESS THAN AN HOUR

Passengers on the Ill-Fated Ship Lost All but the Clothing they Wore

Liverpool, March 8.—The British steamer Harmonides, from Brazilian ports, which was in collision with and sank the steamer Waesland Wednesday night about forty miles southwest of Holyhead and which was towed to this port only this morning has a great hole in her bow. One of the rescued passengers of the Waesland, who was on board the Harmonides, said the Waesland was run into amidships in a fog at midnight, and sank half an hour afterwards, her boilers bursting as she went down. The report that only two of the passengers of the Waesland, a man and a child, lost their lives appears to be confirmed. In addition, one woman was injured. Some of the Waesland's boats were in the water a couple of hours, before, owing to the fog, they could get alongside the Harmonides.

When the Harmonides arrived here her decks were crowded with half-clad passengers of the Waesland, whose pale and haggard faces told the story of their trying experiences. So hurried was the departure of the passengers from the sinking ship that in some cases they were only covered by blankets, and handkerchiefs were their only headgear.

When the disaster occurred on Wednesday night the two vessels were steaming slowly off the coast of the Island of Anglesea. The Harmonides crashed head on into the Waesland, and backed away, but once again struck the then sinking ship, making a great gap in her side.

The sea was perfectly smooth, but the denseness of the fog added to the terrors of the passengers of the Waesland. The women rushed on deck screaming, but were soon reassured by the officers. The boats were quickly lowered, but while this was being done the end of one of the lifeboats slipped from its davits and precipitated the occupants into the sea. A steerage passenger, Edward Dangerfield, of Kansas, struck his head against the boat's fittings and was instantly killed, and Miss Emmett, twelve years old, the daughter of the Rev. A. Emmett, was drowned. The other persons who had been in the boat were picked up.

The behavior of the passengers, many of whom were Scandinavian emigrants, was exemplary. Precedence was given to the women and children.

As the last boats were leaving the fast sinking ship, whose decks were already awash, her boilers burst, and forty minutes after the first impact the Waesland disappeared beneath the waves, sinking about midway between Holyhead and Tuskar Light. Nothing was saved except what the passengers and crew wore. The boats containing the passengers were for a time separated, owing to the fog, but eventually they all reached the sides of the Harmonides and the passengers were taken on board that vessel, where everything possible was done for their comfort.

A pilot boat met the Harmonides off the Island of Anglesea, and communicated the news of the disaster to persons ashore, with the result that tugs were despatched to search for the Harmonides, and accompanied the steamer to this port. Here the passengers were landed and comfortably housed. They will proceed to Philadelphia Wednesday on board the steamer Noordland. The surviving passengers, as a rule, escaped with only a few slight bruises. The Harmonides' stem and bow plates were so torn and twisted that it appeared marvelous that she escaped sinking. She also has a deep rent in her port side.

OFFICERS GRAPHIC STORY.

An officer of the Waesland gives a graphic description of the loss of the steamer. He said:

"I was late in turning in, as the night was foggy, and we were apprehensive. Practically all the passengers had retired. I was taking a last look at the weather, and peered over the ship's side, when, without the slightest warning there came a fearful crash which made the Waesland stagger from stern to stem.

"'My God, we are struck,' I shouted.

"Then there loomed right over our ship's bow the steamer which had run into us. The darkness at that time was almost impenetrable, but there was no mistaking the terrible consequences of such an impact. The nose of the Harmonides appeared to have eaten right into our side. We were going very slowly, with no more speed than was necessary to keep headway. We struck at right angles. A tremendous hole was made, and for a moment the stem of the Harmonides was likely inside our ship.

"A rush of excited people from all parts of the ship immediately ensued. The passengers tumbled up just as they had retired for the night. The men, women and children were in their night dresses. In a few instances the passengers had thrown a shawl or blanket over their shoulders. Terror and bewilderment reigned for a few moments.

"But the passengers gradually ranged themselves in groups about the decks, where they were best sheltered, and the crew worked like clockwork in getting out the boats. The only exception to the good behavior of the passengers was in the case of a saloon passenger who rushed hither and thither, calling in turns on Heaven and earth to rescue him. Fortunately the other passengers were not affected by this man's pitiable mental agony, but were quickly marshalled into the boats.

"The experience in the small boats was trying on account of the darkness and cold. We did not know exactly where we were, and for a long time could not discover the whereabouts of the Harmonides, though she was near by. The boats stood well away from the sinking Waesland, for fear of being sucked down, and we could hear the rending and tearing of her timbers, as she seemed to break in two. Then there was a terrible explosion, as the boilers blew up, and all was over.

"We drifted and rowed for, seemingly, two or three hours, when we finally got in touch with the Harmonides. We had no difficulty in getting on board. All our effects went to the bottom with the Waesland.

"The collision was terrible alike in the suddenness of the shock, and in the completeness of the steamers destruction, and we think we were most fortunate in escaping as we did."

ARABIA IN REVOLT AN APPEAL TO BRITAIN

Powerful Leader Rallies the Numerous Insurgent Tribes

PLOT TO OVERTHROW THE AMEER

Scion of a Redoubtable Dynasty Gains Many Victories—Conquers City of El Riad After Having Assassinated Governor.

(Special Telegram to The Times)

Cairo, Egypt, March 7 — Central Arabia is at present a hotbed of revolt and intertribal wars. Of the rebels Abdul Aziz Ebn Teyoul, a lineal descendant of the once powerful Wahabi ameers, is showing the greatest strength.

Abdul's army now numbers 4,000, and wherever he goes he terrorises the country and gains one victory after another. His latest success was the capture of the city of El Riad, in Central Arabia. This stronghold he entered by stratagem in the middle of the night with only fifty followers.

Abdul's men rode boldly to the palace, and killed the governor of the town and thirty of his retainers.

The garrison of El Riad surrendered and the abdul's army occupied the city.

The British authorities at Aden have received appeals from the governors of the various towns in peril asking for protection against Abdul and his hordes. It is believed that arrangements are now being made to check their progress.

The Wahabi dynasty has long looked for a chance to regain its supremacy. Abdul is taking advantage of the discontent of the inhabitants to overthrow the power of Ibn Rashid, the Ameer of Nejd, and conquer the latter city. Many tribes are flocking to the banner of the new leader.

SERIOUS STATE IN ALBANIA

Vienna, March 7—The Politische Correspondenz reports alarming conditions in Albania, European Turkey.

A formidable force of rebels is said to be besieging the seaport of Avlona, which is entirely cut off from the outside world.

According to the Politische Correspondenz twenty-six Albanian towns have resolved to demonstrate their independence of the rule of the Sultan of Turkey by refusing to pay any more taxes.

Anarchy prevails in the districts of El Bassan and Tirana, according to the reports, where the insurgents have compelled the authorities to open the jails and release the prisoners.

The Women of Canada Are Becoming Proficient in the Work Of Mat and Rug Making

The City and Town Fairs and Exhibitions held last autumn in the various provinces of our Dominion have fully demonstrated the fact that the women of Canada are rapidly becoming proficient in the art of making mats and rugs.

In the sections of Canada's fairs devoted to women's work, the display of mats and rugs made from the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns was most varied and attractive, and claimed the attention of tens of thousands. The prize winners (who used the Diamond Dyes to color their rags and other materials from which the rugs were made) all agreed that the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns were the best and easiest to work up.

If you would like to make up a choice mat or rug, send your address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., and you will receive full range of new designs.

Thinner Than a Rail

Spending every day as much energy as you make, and if the balance goes a little further, well, you get thinner. Not wise to go that way longer. Better use Ferrozone, you will digest more—a little gain the first week, but the gain keeps growing. Not quite so thin! Keep right on, only don't take Ferrozone too long or you will get too fat. Then your blood will be rich, your heart strong, you won't puff so much, you won't get tired quickly. Fat, blood, strength, you have them all with Ferrozone. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

Items of Interest

Copenhagen, March 7. — The Mormon missionaries propaganda here has become so active that they are distributing literature even within the Danish churches, urging young girls to attend Mormon meetings. Statistics show that one out of every twenty two Danish emigrants to the United States becomes a Mormon. The clergy in connection with the Government are continuing their plans to put an end to the proselytizing.

OUTBREAK OF CHOLERA

Constantinople, March 8.—Cholera has broken out among the pilgrims at Medina. One hundred and ten deaths from the disease have occurred.

London, March 7.—King Edward, accompanied by Queen Alexandra, laid the foundation stone of the new Royal Naval College for cadets at Dartmouth to-day, and thereby, figuratively speaking, scuttled the old training ship Britannia, the alma mater of all the present generation of British naval officers. The royal party travelled from London by the train built at a cost of £40,000 for Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee, and covered the whole distance, 235 miles, without a stoppage. On their arrival at Dartmouth their Majesties were met by the Lords of the Admiralty, and drove through the decorated town to the college grounds, where they were received by a guard of honor of cadets. The laying of the foundation stone was accompanied by the usual ceremonial, papers and coins were deposited in a casket made of oak from the Britannia which was placed beneath the stone.

Emperor William of Germany was represented by the German schoolship Moltke, whose cadets were drawn up on the grounds and inspected by the King. Their Majesties afterwards proceeded to Plymouth, where Queen Alexandra tomorrow will christen the British first-class battleship Queen.

An unsophisticated person who happened to drop into pugilistic circles these days might easily guess that there were more prize-fights being held in and around New York than ever before. Tickets for such events can be obtained for almost any night in the week at the usual places. Few of these events, however, violate the law. They are merely fake fights that are part of a swindling scheme. The tip is circulated that there is to be a fight and that tickets are on sale. Everyone purchasing a ticket is pledged to secrecy and impressed with the consequences if the police should discover it. When the crowd is assembled and the fighters just ready to enter the ring, someone shouts "fire!" or "Police!" and a stampede follows which leaves behind only the fighters and their confederates. True sportsmen unless the scheme is checked soon some interesting developments are promised.

Shanghai, March 7.—The foreign residents of Kobe, Japan, at a mass meeting recently held decided to refuse payment of the new taxation on property as a violation of treaties until the question is definitely settled between the powers and Japan.

MAY TIE UP NAVIGATION.

Chicago March 7.—Upon the result of a series of conferences now being held in Chicago, apparently depends the inauguration of a lockout which may result in tieing up navigation on the Great Lakes. This lock-out if inaugurated will affect the 2,000 members of the Licensed Tugmen's Protective Association, composed of the captains and engineers of the tugs running out of twenty-eight harbors along the lakes. The difficulty is over an alleged attempt on the part of the Great Lakes Towing Company otherwise known as the Tug Trust, to lengthen working hours.

London, March 7.—No further news has been received here regarding the Cunard Line steamer Etruria from New York, February 22, for Queenstown and Liverpool, which is in tow, disabled, on her way to the Azores Islands. The officials of the Cunard Line declare there is no cause for alarm.

LORD PAUNCEFOTE'S SUCCESSOR

London, March 7. — The Yorkshire Post to-day says it learns that Hon. Alfred Lyttelton is likely to succeed Lord Pauncefote as British Ambassador at Washington.

London, March 7.—There was a striking scene in the City Temple yesterday, when during the course of his sermon, the Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D., the minister, administered a pointed rebuke to King Edward, which was loudly applauded by the congregation. Having alluded to public-houses as "trap-doors of hell," Dr. Parker referred to the King's recent brewing of beer while visiting Lord Burton.

"Pray for me," said the divine, "that I may speak delicately loyally. If the King brews beer, what can be wrong in the subject drinking it? What the King does is likely to be imitated by others. His Majesty is more than a man, and must regard all questions from a kindly view point. If the King goes to a Sunday concert, as he did recently, he deals a deadly blow to the Englishmen's Sunday. The King cannot attend a nonconformist place of worship, but he can go to a Sunday concert."

"If the King, who is the head of the Church, and defender of the faith, can violate the English Sunday, what can the people do but follow in his steps? I would rather, give a great sum in gold than appear to be disloyal, but I cannot be disloyal to Christ, and it is better that these things should be said."

THE ONTARIO ACCIDENT COMPANY

It is with very great pleasure we call the attention of our readers to the splendid report of the above Company published in this issue.

Perhaps there are few accident insurance Companys better known in this locality than the "Ontario," not only because of the large number of policy holders resident here, but because of the number of claims that have been satisfactorily—not to say generously—settled by the company.

We notice that no less than 1175 claims were presented and settled during the year. What that means in comfort and happiness to those injured, no one can tell. Accident and Sickness insurance has come very rapidly to the front of late years, as this Company evidences and very few of our citizens are without this safe, sure and steady provision against accidental injury.

Although the company is only in its seventh year, it has obtained a wide popularity and a large income, amounting to $125,000 last year. This speaks volumes, not only for the attractive plans of the company, but for the confidence and esteem of the efforts of the field staff.

We heartily congratulate the Vice President, Mr. A. L. Eastmure, and the local general agent, Mr. George K. Martin, on the fine showing made by the report, and confidently look forward to even better things in future.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR'S APPALING COST

The War Will be One of the Most Expensive in the World's History

SAYS THE NEW YORK WORLD

But That Paper Forgets to Tell Its Readers That the Philippine War has Cost [illegible] Nearly as Much.

New York, March 7.—The success of Lord Kitchener's block house policy in South Africa and the gradual wearing away of the Boer forces encourage London prophets once more to fix a period to the hostilities which they now hope to see ended in September. Meanwhile a London authority has estimated that the total cost of the war will be equivalent to the weight in gold of all the Boer armies or to $20 for every acre of the crushed Republic.

If all Great Britain's conquests had been as dearly bought her 11,167,304 square miles of colonies would have cost $112,941,491,200, a sum four times as great as the combined public debt of all the nations of the world to-day, and fifty-four times as large as the debt of the United States in 1865. Add the cost in blood and suffering, the loss of prestige and the alienation of traditional allies, and the price paid for wiping out the Boers is indeed one that "staggers humanity."

THE PHILIPPINE WAR

The war in the Philippine Islands, which is being waged by the United States, has cost the latter country about $750,000,000, directly and indirectly. This is a statement recently made on the floor of the House of Representatives. That Uncle Sam will have quite as large a bill to pay as Great Britain, many believe. The strain is beginning to be felt. When the pension lists are completed, in connection with the war, the figures will be appalling.

Are You Deaf?

All deafness is not curable, but doctors state that ninety per cent. of impaired hearing is due to inflammation of the Eustachian tubes and can be treated with certainty of success by Catarrhozone, which gives instant relief to Catarrh in any part of the system. POST-MORTEM EXAMINATION

On Death of David Valentine Held at St. Thomas on Thursday

The post mortem examination ordered by the Attorney General's Department, on the body of David Valentine who was frozen to death near Burleigh, was held in the city of St. Thomas on Thursday morning. Drs. Gustin and Lawrence performed the examination and removed the stomach which was put in a bottle containing alcohol, in case it was found necessary to send it to Toronto. The result of the examination is that the doctors are of the opinion that deceased was not foully dealt with. The remains were re-interred in St. Thomas by undertaker P. Williams.

The writ for the coroners inquest has been withdrawn since the coroner received the above report.

A MARVELLOUS SPRING HEALTH GIVER AND INVIGORATOR

Paine's Celery Compound Purifies the Blood as Nothing Else Can Do

IT NOURISHES THE TIRED BRAIN AND BRACES THE WEAK NERVES

Paine's Celery Compound purifies the blood as nothing else can do; it is nature's brain food; it builds up weak and shattered nerves; it is the world's best and surest health-giver.

Paine's Celery Compound taken during the opening of spring, has a remarkable efficacy in making sick people well and strong. It makes short work of debility and nervous exhaustion. It quickly drives out neuralgia, rheumatism, sleeplessness and dyspepsia from the system. Its virtues promptly banish kidney disease and liver troubles. It enables all weak and rundown men and women to cast off their besetting troubles and gives them a happy and vigorous life. Mr. Charles E. Beck, Goderich, Ont., whose life was directly saved by use of Paine's Celery Compound after other medicines had failed to do any good work, writes as follows:

"I am a tanner by trade, and about thirteen years ago had an attack of rheumatic fever. While recovering I took a cold and had a relapse which ended in inflammatory rheumatism, and I was laid up for years. I was also afflicted with sleeplessness, and my doctor said I would not live to see my thirtieth year. While almost giving up in despair your Paine's Celery Compound was recommended. I bought a bottle and used it, and to my surprise it gave me natural sleep and rest. After using six bottles I was entirely cured. My wife also used your medicine for insomnia, and before she used one whole bottle was entirely cured."

Mr. Jas. Wilson, a prominent Goderich druggist, says, "I know Mr. Beck intimately, and can vouch for what he says about Paine's Celery Compound."

THE WARLIKE ATTITUDE OF GERMANY AND BRITAIN

A Deep Seated Feeling of Hatred in Germany Against Everything British

A WAR THAT IS SURE TO COME, IN THE FUTURE

Germany Sees in Britains World Empire the Chief Bar to its Own Dream of Colonial Expansion

New York, March 8—The Sun, in a thoughtful article says: "While sensible Americans see in Prince Henry's visit only an occasion for the interchange of international courtesies, a much more serious view of the incident is taken by some English observers. They imagine that they discern in it the latest, and, possibly, the most successful move in a long series of demonstrations inimical to England; demonstrations in which the German people and the German Government have combined with unusual unanimity. They assert that in Germany the utterances of the press, of military societies, of the navy league and of commercial associations, and even the very schoolbooks, are tainted with anglophobia, and that, if the whole German nation has not yet been wrought up to the point of picking a quarrel with Great Britain, it is because the fomenters of race hatred are aware that the German fleet is, as yet unequal even to the defence of German commerce. As Prof. Delbruck lately pointed out in the Preussische Jahrbucher, it is to-day utterly impossible for German policy to place itself on a hostile footing toward England. He added, however, that, even though the Boers should now succumb temporarily, they will be by no means dead and done with, and the day will come when a Germany, mighty on the sea, will stand by the Afrikanders.

Quite a long list of grievances is put forward by those Englishmen who insist that the popular hatred of their country exhibited in Germany is reflected in the deliberate policy of the Berlin Government. We are reminded that, when a dispute arose between France and Great Britain on the subject of Siam, the Berlin Government threw the weight of its influence on the side of France, and that, when a British Foreign Secretary strove to stop the massacres of Christians in Armenia, the Sultan was upheld by Germany against the well-meant efforts of Great Britain. It is further asserted that President Kruger was largely brought to the pitch of resistance to the British demand for concessions to the Uitlanders by the knowledge that the Berlin Government had entered into secret negotiations with a foreign power for the purpose of enabling German marines to march to Pretoria. Germany is also charged with exerting her influence as the friend and ally of Italy to persuade that power to place her subjects in the Transvaal under the Kaiser's protection.

As for the famous telegram sent by William II to President Kruger on the morrow of the Jameson Raid, the fact is recalled that the despatch was explained to the German Parliament by the Kaiser's official spokesman as a feeler put out toward the other European powers for the purpose of ascertaining whether they would combine with Germany in favor of the Boers. The latest outcome of German anglophobia, according to the English onlookers who take a dismal view of the situation, is a well-laid plan to isolate or weaken Great Britain by estranging from her the United States. The first step in this direction, they say, was taken when the Berlin government without consulting the British Foreign Office, published the text of the threatening note which, on April 14, 1898, the British Embassador at Washington proposed to send to President McKinley on the part of the great European powers. The next step, we are told, was the visit of Prince Henry to President Roosevelt.

Americans, themselves, have long since recognized that the German people, which once was friendly, has gradually become unfriendly, if not positively hostile, to Great Britain; and that the Berlin Government must needs see in England's world's empire the chief bar to the fulfilment of its own dream of colonial expansion. We have also been inclined to believe that if the immense additions to the German navy, which are now under way, have any specific purpose, they are aimed at England's outlying possessions than at the United States. Between an exchange of hospitalities and an entangling alliance stretches a gulf that we shall never cross.

INQUEST AT THE GAOL

An Old Inmate Died on Thursday—Inquest Held Yesterday

Isaac Covert an aged indigent, who for some years past has been an inmate of the County Gaol, died in that place on Thursday morning and an inquest was held yesterday before Coroner Grey. The jury was empannelled as follows: Messrs. W. A. Fife, Wm. Montgomery, Thos. Rainer, Geo. Rose, Thos. Lytle, R. H. Smith, Alex McGregor, C. Brooks, H. Dooman, R. Tice, M. Dunn, M. James, E. Waterson and J. Cunningham.

After reviewing the remains and hearing the report of the gaol physician and gaol officers the verdict returned was that "the late Isaac Covert came to his death from Cholera, old age, and infirmity."

Deceased was born in Belmont and was about 70 years of age. He was well known around town a few years ago, but of late has been very helpless and was cared for in the gaol.

MAY LEAVE TOWN

The Lamp Department of the C. G. E. Co. Likely to Go to Toronto

There is some talk of a change being made in the Electric Works. The lamp department which gives employment to about one hundred hands is likely to be transferred to Toronto. This, branch of the works is a very important one, and one in which good wages are paid. It is to be hoped that the Manufacturers Committee of the Council, and the Board of Trade will take this matter up, and, if possible induce the company to let that branch of the works remain in Peterborough. A move must be made at once and all the influence that can be brought to bear on the company should be used.

This town is rapidly becoming a large manufacturing centre and we must keep what we have if possible.

A FINE TEAM

Father Phelan, of Young's Point Has a Nobby Pair of Greys

Rev. Father Phelan, the popular Parish Priest of St. Paul's Church, Young's Point, recently purchased as fine a pair of young driving horses as are to be found in the district. They were secured down east and were driven to the Point by Mr. B. Phelan, of town. Father Phelan has also secured a new outfit of cutter, carriage and handsome robes.

The Times has a sort of a hazy idea that while Father "Joe" no doubt will give his church work every attention, he may perhaps find time to drive into town occasionally, especially when a good lacrosse match is to be played.

A SPLENDID PROGRAM

Will be Presented at the Closing Exercises of the Y.M.C.A. Gymnasium

The physical director and a committee of the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium are making preparations for grand closing exercises on the 4th of April. This event will mark the close of the gymnasium for the season. The entertainment promises to be very interesting and will consist of dumb bell and wand drills, fancy and military marching, sword exercises, fencing etc. An admission fee will be charged, the proceeds to go in aid of the gymnasium fund.

Weather Notes

Probs.—Mostly fair, not much change in temperature.

The weather is mild in the Lake Region, and moderately cold elsewhere in Canada and these conditions are unlikely to change much during to-day and on Saturday.

To be Rebuilt

The Crystal Block which was destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, is to be rebuilt and over hauled. Instead of two stores on the ground floor, the building will be divided into three or four. The work will be commenced in the course of a few days.

MANY DON'T KNOW

Lack of Right Food is the Cause of Sickness

It is hardly fair to blame the doctor for not curing the patient when the patient attempts to live on food that furnishes the wrong kind of nourishment. When sickness comes on it is a pretty good sign that the food is not keeping the body up. There are thousands of cases where a change in food alone has brought the sick one out into a prime condition of health.

As an illustration. A lady in Riverside, Calif., says, "After ten years of service as a teacher, during which time I suffered three or four attacks of la grippe, I finally found myself a physical wreck. Medical treatment would help my strength and vitality temporarily but I would always go back.

Husband and I moved to California in the hopes that this genial climate would restore me. I got better for a while but in a few months became so weak and debilitated that we were in despair.

Finally through the influence of a friend I changed my diet and began using Grape-Nuts and Postum Coffee. I used Grape-Nuts at two of my meals each day and have gained 16 pounds in weight and the increase in strength is really wonderful.

I am back to the healthy, good feelings of my girlhood days. I enjoy Postum better than any beverage I have ever used. My friends remark on my improved condition and I am impelled to write this letter with profound gratitude, hoping that many others may be induced to go and do likewise. I have proved that health is the natural consequence of properly selected food. Please do not use my name but I will be glad to reply to any inquiries." PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 8, 1902

BRITAIN AND CANADA

It is just as well to look facts in the face, and ask ourselves where we should be if the improbable were to happen and the British navy were annihilated. The supremacy of the British navy is our best guarantee for peaceable progress in the development of our gigantic country. Are we paying the equivalent of a handsome premium upon this valuable insurance policy? What promise have we for the future if the John Bull Insurance Company fail?

The form which our contribution shall take is a reasonable matter for political, even for party discussion. Probably most men would agree that any scheme should provide that the ship, or ships, built with Canadian money should be largely officered and manned by Canadians, at all events as soon as their technical training in the use of the mighty engines of modern naval warfare was sufficiently advanced. These, however, are all minor considerations to the initial fact that, in some shape or form, Canada should contribute to the support of the flag which protects her and which ensures respect of her citizens without their incurring anything like the burthen of cost per capita which falls upon the citizens of the motherland.

We should be glad to hear suggestions as to what form our contribution should take.

Pill-Dosed with nauseous, big purgers, prejudice people against pills generally. Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills are revolutionizing the pill demand—they're so pleasant and easy to take—the doses are small and so is the price, 10 cents for 40 doses. Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation dispelled. Works like a charm.—33

WEST PETERBOROUGH

By reference to a notice in another column it will be seen that a mass meeting of the supporters of the Ross Government will be held in Bradburn's Opera House on Saturday for the purpose of selecting a candidate to contest West Peterborough at the coming general elections. The nomination meeting has been called, and we suppose will have to go through the form of "constitutionally" nominating a candidate. It goes without saying, though nobody in West Peterborough has any right to assume that he is "the only pebble on the beach," that Hon. J. R. Stratton will be nominated, and it equally goes without saying that he will be elected, for it does not seem that any opposition, in sight, or concealed, for the matter of that, stands a ghost of a show of dislodging the member for West Peterborough from the position of popularity and prominence he seems to have earned through his many years' able representation of the riding. Though The Times has not always seen eye to eye with Mr. Stratton, nor approved of his course in every respect, but we have watched his career and believe that he is the man best qualified to give West Peterborough and especially the town the effective service which will contribute to her best interests. The Times thinks that Mr. Stratton, since he became Provincial Secretary, has used the greater influence a cabinet position naturally gives a member of the riding, to give the town and county an excellent service, and The Times will give him a chance as far as its support goes to show what he can do, and we believe he can and will do a great deal to help advance the welfare and progress of the town and county.

There are many good points about Mr. Stratton but one thing that gives him his strength in the riding is that he makes no enemies, and many friends, for if he can do a constituent or anybody else a favor or good turn he will do it, and it is well known that he never spares effort in any direction that can benefit the town and county of Peterborough.

The Times believes that Hon. Mr. Stratton will make the best representative this riding can have, and if he should be nominated, next Saturday, as he is almost dead sure to be, we will give him our support.

Bright's Disease — Insidious! deceptive! relentless! has foiled hundreds of trials by medical science to stem the tide of its ravages—and not until South American Kidney Cure proved beyond a doubt its power to turn back the tide, was there a glimmer of anything but despair for the victims of this dread form of kidney [illegible]—39

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

And here are two miscellaneous notes:

"Miss B.—Please let Willie home at 2 o'clock. I take him out for a little pleasure to see his grandfather's grave."

"Dear Teacher—Please excuse Fritz for staying home—he had the meesells—to oblige his father."—Tit-Bits.

A celebrated quack was once visited by an old acquaintance from the country, who addressed him as "Zam."

"I'm glad to see thee'st get on so vinely, Zam," said the rustic. "But how is't, man? Thee know'st thee never had no more brains nor a pumpkin."

Taking him to a window, the quack bade him count the passers-by.

"How many have passed?" asked the quack, after a few minutes.

"Nointy or a hundred."

"And how many wise men do you suppose were among this hundred?"

"Mayhap one."

"Well, all the rest are mine."

A teacher in a Texas public school received the following letter the other day:—

"Sir,—Will you in the future give my son easier sums to do at nites? This is what he brought hoam two or three nites back: 'If fore gallins of bere will fill thirty to pint bottles, how many pints and half bottles will nine gallins of bere fil?' Well, we tried and could make nothin' of it at all, and my boy cried and laughed and sed he didn't dare to go bak in the mornin' without doin' it. So I had to go and buy a nine-gallin keg of bere, which I could ill afford to do, and then he went and borrowed a lot of wine and brandy bottles. We fil them, and my boy put the number down for an answer. I don't know whether it is right or not, as we spilt some while doin' it. P.S.—Please let the next sums be in water, as I am not able to buy more bere."

Horse Sense.

"Any fool can take a horse to water, but it takes a wise man to make him drink," says the proverb. The horse eats when hungry and drinks when thirsty. A man eats and drinks by the clock, without regard to the needs of nature. Because of careless eating and drinking "stomach trouble" is one of commonest of diseases. Sour and bitter risings, belchings, unnatural fulness after eating, dizziness, headache, and many other symptoms mark the beginning and progress of disease of the stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures through the stomach diseases of other organs which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach, and allied organs of digestion and nutrition. It strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, cures obstinate cough and heals weak lungs.

"I was taken with Grippe, which resulted in heart and stomach trouble," writes Mr. T. R. Caudill, Montland, Alleghany Co., N. C. "I was unable to do anything a good part of the time. I wrote to Dr. Pierce about my condition, having full confidence in his medicine. He advised me to take his 'Golden Medical Discovery,' which I did. Before I had finished the second bottle I began to feel better. I have used nearly six bottles. I feel thankful to God for the benefit I have received from Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I can highly recommend it to all persons as a good and safe medicine."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets keep the bowels healthy.

SCIENTIFIC PALMIST.

Owing to numerous people being unable to consult Prof. O'Brien during his first visit in Peterborough a few weeks ago, he has been prevailed upon to pay the town a return visit on his way east, and can now be consulted at his former private office, 263 Hunter Steet Terrace, from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. As Professor O'Brien will only remain in town for a very short season, people wishing to consult him should call at once as this is their last chance. A photo read free to patrons.

Prof. O'Brien has just concluded two most successful seasons in Lindsay and Cannington and is urgently requested to pay both towns a return visit at an early date.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the Company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil seepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

Progress of Marconi.

There is a good deal of inspiration in the steady progress of Marconi, five years ago an utterly unknown man, with his faith in himself as his chief asset, to his present position of world-wide fame. The record is brief and marked by stages so well defined as to lend themselves easily to succinct statement:—

1896—In July Mr. G. Marconi, then 22 years of age, arrived in England from Italy, bringing with him a method of sending messages across space without intervening wires. The first trials in England were made between a room in the General Postoffice, London, and an impromptu station on the roof some 100 yards distant.

1897—On Salisbury Plain—2 miles.

1897—Across Bristol Channel—8 miles.

1897—At Spezia, Italy, between a warship and the shore—12 miles.

1897—Between Salisbury and Bath—34 miles.

1899 (April 27)—Between England and France—32 miles.

1899—At the naval manoeuvres—60 miles.

1900—Between Belgium and England—90—100 miles.

1900—Between war vessels of the British navy up to 150 miles.

1901 (August 16)—Between Lucania and Nantucket lightship—287 miles.

1901 (December 12)—Between Cornwall and Newfoundland—2,000 miles.

Popular Literature.

The popularity test of literature is so rapidly becoming, in the general estimate, the all-important test that the consideration of the reasons why people buy certain popular books is one of the interesting commercial as well as literary problems of the day. It is a curious fact that no theatrical manager can tell whether a play will fail or succeed, nor can the shrewdest publisher predict the fate of a book. "The public simply takes the bit in its teeth now and then," says the organ of one of the big New York publishing houses, "and runs away with the play or book—why, nobody knows. Last fall the public was running away with a novel called "The Right of Way"; and in order, if possible, to ascertain why, the publishers printed several advertisements in the daily press of the country asking readers to kindly say why they read this book. The replies were curious. From all over America and Canada came letters—1,486 in all. These were carefully tabulated with this result:—

711	said they had heard it favorably spoken of by friends who had either read it serially or in book form.
468	had seen it advertised or both advertised and reviewed.
114	had read reviews of it.
86	had read something the author had written previously and liked his style.
84	had read the serial themselves, and wanted the book in consequence.
23	replies gave frivolous reasons—"because they had the price," because "a fool and his money are soon parted," because "they were dull and wanted something exciting," because "they wanted something to talk about," because "they read all the new books," "they wanted to be up-to-date," etc., etc.

All this leaves the publisher pretty much where he started. But one thing is clear. While readers, in the long run, are the best advertisers, it is the review, and in some cases, as in this one, the serial publication at the outset, that sets them talking. In other words, the first vogue of the popular novel is due apparently to the man who reviews it."

Cause of Kingly Ills.

The pessimistic anticipations which are expressed from time to time with regard to the health of the King seem to have ceased for the time, but the undercurrent of alarm remains as strong, almost, as ever. Sensational reports are still going about, and find their chief sanction in the fact that the King has lost within a comparatively short space of time a brother and a sister from the fell disease which, according to popular rumor, he believes to be threatening his own life. Three of Queen Victoria's children, it will be remembered, died during her lifetime, and one other, the late Queen's eldest daughter, widow of the late German Emperor Frederick, has died only a few months after the death of her mother.

A recent article in The Dublin Freeman's Journal, perhaps of Ireland, which has attracted Justin McCarthy's favorable comment, insists that one main cause of illnesses which at present affect so many royal houses in Europe is to be found in the fact that "the sovereigns of Europe have disregarded the great law of nature which discountenances the marriage of near blood relations." The article goes on to say that while "there are in Europe over a score of Emperors, Kings and minor reigning sovereigns. . . . all but two are the descendants of James I. of England, the only child of the marriage of Darnley and Mary Queen of Scots."

The King of Sweden is the descendant of Marshal Bernadotte, one of the soldiers whom the great Napoleon raised from the ranks and set upon a throne, and the Prince of Montenegro, who became a sovereign ruler within the recollection of us all, are almost the only two exceptions. The result of this condition of things naturally is that European Princes and Princesses are compelled to marry "in and in"—in other words, their marriage consorts have to be found in families more or less nearly related to their own.

At present there is hardly a European imperial or royal family which is not oppressed by serious and boding illness of some kind, and it is only reasonable to say that some explanation of this fact may be found in this system of intermarriage. It is certainly a curious historical fact that the dynasty of the Stuarts, in many ways, the worst dynasty that ever ruled over England, should have so many descendants among the reigning houses of Europe.

"You are indeed my treasure,"
I gently said to her;
She blushed and said with pleasure:
"Then be my treasurer!"

Curious Bits of News.

A Boston woman will agitate for a law prohibiting the boiling or roasting of chestnuts, on the ground that it involves painful death of worms "whose right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness is no less than that of the most highly dowered man."

Last summer Doctor Berson, the German aeronaut, accompanied by Doctor Suering, made a balloon ascent from Berlin, and attained the enormous altitude of about 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles. Then they lost consciousness, so that, although they descended safely, they have no record to show what the maximum height attained may have been.

The laurels have been stripped from Byron's brow and also from Leander's by two plucky women who have just succeeded in swimming across the Hellespont at its widest part—which is about two miles. They are Miss Wood, daughter of Vice-Admiral Wood of the English navy, and the wife of the German military attache at Constantinople.

One New York hotel that suffered severely from the souvenir spoon and salt-cellar mania adopted the plan of notifying guests that each waiter was responsible individually for all articles on his table, and would have to make good any loss. This reduced the taking of spoons to a robbery of the waiter instead of the hotel, and even the souvenir hunter has some conscience about such a theft.

The postal savings bank building in Amsterdam, Holland, is being constructed by the "Monier system," a new method of construction. A steel framework, like a bird-cage in appearance, is enveloped in Portland cement, which prevents the steel from rusting, while the cement itself is rendered elastic. This construction is said to be strong, fireproof and waterproof, and to be growing in favor in Europe for government buildings and factories.

The moment a man ceases to grow he begins to diminish. Such is the conclusion at which a German physician has arrived, after several months' careful study of the subject of human height. Men, so it is asserted, begin to grow smaller in their thirty-fifth year, and women a little before they are forty. Men, however, stop growing when they are thirty, and for five or six years their stature remains stationary. Then it decreases, at first very slowly, but afterwards more rapidly.

The Presidents that Ohio has given to the United States have been pursued by a curious and most lamentable fatality. Of the four, only President Hayes survived office. Garfield and McKinley were assassinated, and William Henry Harrison served but one month of his term. Ohio men have been elected to five terms in office, but succeeded in serving only nine years and one month of the twenty years—Harrison one month, Garfield six months, Hayes four years, and McKinley four years and six months.

Had not King Edward issued a decree to the effect that widows of peers who have contracted marriages with commoners had forfeited thereby their prerogatives as peeresses of the realm, there might have appeared among the latter at Westminster Abbey on the day of the coronation a coal black negress of the Hottentot type, arrayed in the ermine trimmed red velvet robes and the gold coronet of her rank as a countess. For the dusky widow of the late Earl of Stamford has since his death married a Boer named Pieter Pieterse, and has made her home in South Africa since her unsuccessful attempt to prove the rights of her son to his father's earldom.

Dr. Drummond's Chinese Dinner.

DR. W. H. DRUMMOND, the author of those fascinating delineations of the habitants' life, underwent a novel experience at Vancouver the other day when he was entertained to dinner in Chinatown. Dr. Drummond, it appears, is intensely interested in the conditions surrounding the life of the Chinese, and it was with a view to aiding him in his observations that the Chinese dinner was arranged for him by a few friends. It was held at the Quang Fong Low restaurant, in Dupont street. The front of the restaurant was gaily lit with lanterns in honor of the distinguished guest. Eight others sat down with Dr. Drummond at the round table, which had been decorated in customary Chinese fashion. The array of preliminary sweetmeats having been sampled, the dinner proper began. The time of the commencement was 10 o'clock and the meal lasted until 2 in the morning; no time was wasted, however, as the bill of fare was a formidable one, consisting of no less than 15 courses. They were as follows: 1. Stewed shark fins. 2. Pigeon with mushrooms. 3. Birdsnest soup. 4. Stewed chicken. 5. Boiled fish tripe. 6. Duck and tomato sauce. 7. Hairy mushrooms. 8. Duck and shellfish sauce. 9. Chicken with green peppers. 10. Sliced chicken. 11. Shrimps. 12. Pigeons. 13. Duck cooked in melon. 14. Sliced chicken and pineapple. 15. Ground almond gruel.

There were one or two extras, as to the composition of which the bravest did not dare enquire. The viands were handled more or less clumsily with ivory chopsticks and were washed down with many a "yum poy" of orange wine and the inevitable tea. After the usual toasts the doctor thanked his entertainers in a characteristic speech, stating that the evening had been one of the most enjoyable in his experience, and one of which he would ever retain a happy remembrance. All one can say is that the doctor must have a peculiarly good digestion.

A Prophecy.

Some eight or nine months ago a self-appointed prophet, residing, as his fellows generally do, on the Continent, predicted that in about two centuries the lunatic asylums all over the world would be empty. Last, however, the actual generations should rejoice in anticipation of the happy condition of their posterity, he proceeded to explain, and the explanation, though short, was to the point, and did not lack a substratum of far-seeing philosophy. The madhouses would be untenanted not because there would not be any demented people, but because there would not be a sufficient number of sane folk to conduct them [illegible] to [illegible].

Information For the Farmer.

Fifty Fowls Enough.

On nearly all farms, except where special attention is given to poultry culture, I would say, keep fifty fowls of one variety, and no more. See that these are good ones, and try each year to improve on them by bringing in some fresh blood from a good strain, and by keeping over only the best of what you have raised yourself. After following this plan for a few years, I am sure you will not return to the old way of over-stocking the place with scrub fowls. The same careful attention should be given to the feeding and care of the poultry as to other stock on the farm, and to insure such attention and make this branch a success, some one of the family should take the matter in hand and see to it that the poultry-house is kept clean, the hens fed regularly, and as far as possible all the waste of the family table, the dairy and the field is turned into eggs and meat.—Poultry Monthly.

Do Poultry Spread Diphtheria?

Do poultry spread diphtheria? is a question which has been raised in one of the Provincial papers, says The Sanitary Record. The possibility of infection from this source, when the filthy conditions under which fowls are often kept are considered, is by no means remote. As every poultry-keeper knows, fowls are peculiarly subject to a disease which is analogous to diphtheria in man, known as diphtheritic croup or "canker." This is produced by filthy surroundings, and is so infectious that, once it gets thoroughly hold of a pen of birds, it kills them off in scores, and there is the utmost difficulty in stamping it out. Children, as we know, are particularly fond of playing in the vicinity of poultry runs, and it is to be feared that poultry-keepers are not as careful as they might be in isolating birds that are sick. It has been suggested that fowl-runs should be placed under sanitary control, and that when disease breaks out the authorities should be notified; but the necessity for going as far as this might, we think, be obviated if the poultry papers would only impress upon their readers the necessity for observing better sanitary conditions and isolation in all cases of sickness.

Breeds Which do not Make Headway

There are a few most excellent breeds which never seem to make any headway in this country, for the simple reason that their good qualities, sometimes even their very name, are unknown to the great majority of poultry-breeders; and that they are, and generally have been, in the hands of only a few breeders in this country. A notable example of this kind is the Creve Coeur. Now, there is nothing really against the Creve at all. At one time it was supposed to be a soft fowl, but as a breed this was not correct. It, indeed, possesses sufficient hardness to lay very well in winter, and any breed which can number this among its characteristics is not entitled to be called soft. As a matter of fact, Creves are very good layers, and they produce extra large eggs, too, quite as large as any that may be generally found. They are non-sitters also; very rarely does any specimen show signs of broodiness. They are large, square built birds, short in leg and neck, lustrous black in plumage and crest, dark legs, long, deep breast bones, and quality and quantity of flesh of extra high order. A well fed Creve makes a most substantial as well as a dainty dish on the table. Few breeds possess whiter flesh, or that of more deliciously juicy quality.

For crossing purposes I like Creves specially well. If it is table birds you want, then mate up with Dorking, Buff Orpington, or Indian Game hens, or half-bred hens of these varieties. Even barn-door mongrels of no particular parentage, if short on leg, square-bodied and long-keeled, will make very good all-round crosses with Creve Coeurs. Good all-round birds are produced when crossed with Langshan, Wyandotte, or Scotch Grey hens. The Creve is really worthy of a better cultivation.—R. G., in Farmer and Stockbreeder.

Sheep Scab.

Among the acts of the last session of the Indiana Legislature was one making it compulsory to dip all scabby sheep. The object is to stamp out this expensive but unnecessary disease.

Scab is produced by an itch mite, that causes itching, rubbing, pulling and shedding the wool, causing a bare and scabby skin. The parasite cannot live for any great length of time off the skin, and does not thrive on any other animal. It is therefore possible to stamp out the disease by killing all mites by dipping. Solutions of tobacco, lime and sulphur and arsenic are effective for this purpose. The tobacco solutions have preference. They may be made by taking from twenty to twenty-five pounds of tobacco leaves and stems and soaking for one day in sufficient water to cover. Then boil for an hour and draw off after six hours. Dilute to one hundred gallons. Add twenty pounds of sulphur and use while warm. The lime and sulphur dip may be made by slacking eight pounds of lime in some water, adding twenty-four pounds of sulphur and diluting to one hundred gallons. It is troublesome to prepare the tobacco solution, and is about as cheap to buy the extract ready for use. The lime and sulphur dip is injurious to the wool. It requires on an average one and a half gallons of dip solution per head for more than twenty-five head. The second dipping is necessary at the tenth day, so that the cost for material must be reckoned at about five cents to seven cents per head. The coal tar or creolin dips are excellent for ticks, but not as effective as they should be for scab.—New England Farmer.

One of the London, England, dailies had a French despatch the other day which may have an interest for financiers at the City Hall. Under date line of Dunkirk, Jan. 12, it read:—

At the meeting of the Municipal Council on Friday the accounts for the fetes in connection with the Czar's recent visit to Dunkirk were submitted.

A provisional credit of £2,000 had been unanimously voted; but the amount expended was £5,000, and it was announced that the State has refused to allow anything towards these expenses.

There remained, therefore, nothing but to vote the balance of £3,000, the Secretary of the council remarking that in the interests of the finances of the town it was to be hoped that the Czar would not come to Dunkirk again.

Might be Worse.

One day, Mackintosh, having vexed him by calling O'Quigly "a rascal," Parr immediately rejoined, "Yes, Jamie, he was a bad man, but he might have been worse; he was an Irishman, but he might have been a Scotchman; he was a priest, but he might have been a lawyer; he was a republican, but he might have been an apostate."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in affecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

From The Child of the Year to the Man or Woman of Fourscore

Malt Breakfast Food provides in a way that no other can do for the health and vigor of young and old—from the child of a year to the man or woman of fourscore years. It is the food triumph of the age for the bestowal of physical strength and general good health.

Malt Breakfast Food is easily recognized by its delicious taste, its appetising and satisfying qualities and its energy producing powers. Ordinary grain foods have many poor points. Malt Breakfast Food has not a single bad point that can be named by food critics. It is free from all starchy substances, it is partially cooked and predigested, easy to digest, most nutritious and healthy. Malt Breakfast Food is the only grain food that furnishes the benefits and virtues of pure health-giving Malt that enriches the blood and builds up the system. Get a package from your grocer; it will please you.

THE ONTARIO Accident Insurance Company

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT

Submitted to the Shareholders at the Annual General Meeting held at the Company's Offices, 3 Toronto Street, Toronto, on Monday, the Seventeenth day of February, 1902.

The directors present herewith their report for the year 1901, being the sixth in the company's history, together with the customary financial statements, and are pleased to point to a considerable advance in its transactions, which continue to yield satisfactory results.

The net income from premiums, after deducting $4,061.87 for reinsurances, was $101,962.90.

The amount derived as income from investments was $1,630.75.

One thousand one hundred and seventy-five claims were paid during the year, amounting, after deducting $4,181.27, received from reinsuring companies, to $52,056.07.

The revenue account submitted herewith, after debiting all charges and expenses, shows a balance of $9,084.78. This has been applied as follows: $1,500.00 to Reserve, $5,000.00 to Contingency account, $1,720.00 in payment of Dividend No. 4, $864.78 unappropriated. The reserve fund now stands at $22,500.00, and the contingency fund at $5,000.00.

The Company's paid-up capital is at this date $43,000.00, and the securities deposited with the Receiver-General at Ottawa amount to $35,231.90.

The premium income shows an increase of $30,894.14 over that of 1900.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

LARRATT W. SMITH, President.

CLARKSON & CROSS, Auditors.

Toronto, 28th January, 1902.

Proceedings of the Sixth Annual General Meeting.

The sixth annual general meeting of the shareholders was held at the company's offices, No. 3 Toronto street, Toronto, on Monday, the 17th February, 1902, at 2 o'clock p.m.

The following shareholders were present: W. H. Pearson, A. W. Thomas, Dr. Larratt W. Smith, A. L. Eastmure, R. Shaw Wood (London), F. J. Lightbourn, J. F. Smith, K.C., George W. Monk, R. Grass, J. Herbert Mason, Dr. William Oldright, John Greer, G. A. Stimson, and 53 shareholders represented by proxy.

The chair was occupied by the President, Dr. Larratt W. Smith, and Mr. J. F. Lightbourn, the Secretary, acted as secretary of the meeting.

The notice calling the meeting having been read by the secretary, the President submitted the report, together with the financial statements, and said:

Gentlemen,—In submitting for your approval the sixth annual report of the company's affairs, I am able to follow a precedent established in previous years, and to point again to a very considerable increase in the volume of its transactions.

The gross premiums on policies issued and renewed during 1901, particulars of which are more fully given in the statements laid before you, amounted to $105,634.77, as against $85,405.33 in 1900, and $71,857.36 in 1899, results which indicate, in no uncertain way, that the company's popularity has been well maintained, and that its methods and plans continue to satisfy almost every modern requirement in casualty underwriting. The beneficiaries under the company's policies during the year, numbered 1,175, and their claims, representing $52,056.07, were promptly adjusted and paid. The total income from premiums since the company began business has now reached, in the aggregate, the sum of $371,329, whilst $166,223.90 has been disbursed in benefits, distributed, in all, among 3,681 persons, and creating an average loss ratio upon the entire transactions to date of 43 3-5ths per cent.

The reserve, which may be regarded as fairly indicating the progress made, now stands at $22,500, as against $21,000 in 1900, $20,000 in 1899, $16,200 in 1898, $11,000 in 1897 and $6,822.01 in 1896, showing, it will be observed, steady and substantial growth, whilst as a contingency fund, to cover supposed or possible losses, the sum of $5,000 has also been provided.

In all branches of liability underwriting there has been a marked increase in the risk; and while the advance in rates, noticed at our last annual meeting, has continued, the altered conditions created by the ever-changing decisions of the courts, on the subject of factory and other accidents, will doubtless necessitate further revision and the adoption of rates and methods better calculated to meet what are now fully recognized to be growing hazards.

During the year the board, in common with a large circle of relatives and friends, had reason to lament the sudden demise, under peculiarly painful circumstances, of their late fellow-director, Mr. Edward L. Bond of Montreal. A resolution expressing the Directors' sense of the loss sustained was duly inscribed on the minutes of the board, and a copy thereof forwarded to his sorrowing family. The directors, acting in accordance with the provision of the by-laws in that respect, unanimously elected Mr. Thomas Fyshe, General Manager of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, Montreal, and one of the company's earliest shareholders, to fill the vacancy thus created, whose acceptance of the seat will not only add strength to the board, but will be productive of increased success to the company's business in Eastern Canada.

It would be remiss on my part were I not to do justice to the continued zeal and efficiency displayed by the Company's General and District Agents, distributed as they are over every part of this wide Dominion. To the Vice-President and Managing Director, the Secretary and the Head Office staff we are especially indebted for the sound judgment they have invariably brought to bear upon every department of their important work, without which success would be difficult of attainment. Aided by these gentlemen, the directors' task has been a comparatively easy one, and I venture to hope that, pursuing the same conservative policy which has always been a leading feature of this company, and with an established reserve, commensurate with every requirement, we shall be enabled, as time goes on and our success continues, to fulfil the best expectations of the shareholders and of all associated in the company's work. I will now formally move, seconded by the Vice-President,

"That the Sixth Annual Report, now submitted, be adopted, and that the same, together with the Financial Statements, read therewith, be printed, and a copy thereof forwarded to each of the Shareholders." But before asking your vote I shall be happy to give you any information that may be required upon the statements laid before you.

Mr. A. L. Eastmure, the Vice-President, in seconding the motion for the adoption of the report, remarked:

That Accident Insurance in Canada had become an important and growing business. In former years, the aggregate transactions were small, and in the absence of rates based on Canadian experience, the practice had been to rely largely on foreign manuals; but, with the ever-increasing industrial activity prevailing throughout the Dominion, Accident Insurance was rapidly advancing, and had now come to the front. The movement had been sudden, and much of the business, being new, was still in a transition state, and rates had not been upon as firm or certain a basis as was desirable. Companies had seemed anxious to take advantage of the improved trade conditions, and to secure volume rather than to consider the sufficiency of the rate, feeling possibly that the time had not yet come when this could be determined with sufficient accuracy. It was a question whether, in the eagerness to obtain a present income, the limits of prudence were not frequently overstepped. He believed that the time was not far distant when Head Office methods would be modified, and instead of every energy being devoted to securing risks, attention would have to be given to framing and enforcing a proper tariff, particularly for Workmen's Protective, Liability and Sickness lines. The movement in that direction mentioned at our previous meetings, had made some progress, but was retarded owing to the difficulty in securing uniform action by all the companies.

The "Ontario Accident" had made substantial gains during the year, due, he believed, to the efficiency of its field representation, the variety and flexibility of its systems, and also to its excellent financial position. The Company issued 4,511 policies in 1901 for $11,282,233, as against 4,068, for $11,216,850 in 1900, whilst the premium income had increased to the extent of $30,894.14, over that of the preceding year. The customary provision had been made for any unreported or possible losses, and, after paying the Shareholders' Dividend, a substantial addition had been made to the Reserve. A further increase in the Company's transactions might be expected during the coming year, the results from which would, he hoped, prove satisfactory.

In closing, Mr. Eastmure drew the attention of the meeting to a finely executed oil portrait of the Company's President, Dr. Larratt W. Smith, which had just been hung upon the Board Room wall, and, at the same time, thanked him for his kindly reference to the work performed by the Head Office and Agency Staffs.

The Report was adopted unanimously, after which it was moved by Mr. W. H. Pearson, seconded by Mr. J. F. Smith, and carried:

"That the thanks of the Shareholders are justly due to the Company's General and District Agents in the several provinces for the zeal and efficiency displayed by them in their several departments during the year."

On motion, Messrs Clarkson & Cross were reappointed auditors for the ensuing year.

Mr. A. W. Thomas and Mr. John Greer, having been appointed scrutineers, reported the following gentlemen elected as Directors: Larratt W. Smith, A. L. Eastmure, W. H. Pearson, J. Herbert Mason, R. Shaw Wood, (London), Lieut.-Col. R. R. C. Jarvis, G. N. Shepstone, Thomas Fyshe (Montreal) and J. H. Brock, (Winnipeg).

After the usual vote of thanks to the President, Vice-President, Directors, Secretary and Officials in the Office, the meeting adjourned.

At a meeting of the Directors, held immediately after the Annual Meeting, Dr. Larratt W. Smith was re-elected President, and Mr. A. L. Eastmure Vice-President of the Company.

Executive Committee—Messrs. Larratt W. Smith, A. L. Eastmure and W. H. Pearson.

PETERBOROUGH WINS FROM GALT BY 4-3

In as Most Exciting Game of Hockey Last Night

LARGE CROWD WITNESS GAME

Return Game Likely to be Played Monday Night in Galt — Both Teams Dine at McCallum's After the Game

Peterborough won the first game of the finals from Galt last night at the Charlotte street rink by a score of 4-3. The game was one of the most keenly contested and exciting, from start to finish, that has ever been played in Peterborough, and one of the most enthusiastic crowds that have ever decked the galleries of the rink, cheered themselves hoarse at the many brilliant plays made by the local septette. Then everything would be silent as the Galt forwards would make a rush up the ice and make things look rather blue at the Peterborough goal, but then the small boy would get in his fine work, and the hall would be broken by the shrill cry:—

We beat New Market, and we're after the cup
Bay Armstrong make a rush with the puck.

And then the danger disappeared. It must have been from the inspiration from the small boy on the fence. Then it was time for Peterborough to score. And then the crowd went wild with excitement; everybody yelled; ladies threw their bonnets in the air, and the old sports took a shake with themselves—they had money on the game.

The ice was covered with about a quarter of an inch of water, and this interfered considerably with the shooting of players on both teams. Peterborough scored the first and second goals and the crowd went wild with excitement, but Galt spruced up, and succeeded in tallying two before half time, thus making the score 2-all.

In the last half the game was much faster, and Peterborough went in to win, keeping the rubber almost continually in Galt territory. Peterborough scored again, making the score 3-2 for Peterborough; then Galt tallied again, making the score 3-all, with but a few minutes to play. The locals then started in at a very fast clip, and managed to get another past Morrison, making the score 4-3 in favor of Peterborough, with about one minute to play. Despite the strenuous efforts of the Galt men, they were unable to score again before time was called.

Both teams played good clean hockey and very little rough play was indulged in. The Galt team are heavier than the locals, but lack speed, and if when the return game is played in Galt, the ice is in good shape, Peterborough ought to be able to pull out with a larger score than the one at home. The return game will probably be played on Monday night, and a large crowd of Peterborough backers will accompany the boys to cheer them on to victory.

The teams lined up as follows:

Peterborough		Galt.
Wasson	Goal	Morrison
Glover	Point	Lane
H. Armstrong	Cover	Twaite
Graham	Forwards	P. Dietrich
R. Armstrong		C. Dietrich
Morgan		Hay.
Whitecroft		Deacon

J. McCabe—Goal umpires—F. Aitkin
Time-keeper—J. F. McGregor.

Mr. Roy Schooley acted as referee to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

Both teams dined at McCallum's restaurant after the game, and enjoyed a few hours in pleasant social intercourse.

SEVEN MAIN QUESTIONS

THAT ARE USUALLY ASKED BY MEN WHO ARE TEMPTED TO LOOK INTO A MINING PROPOSITION

1st. What is the characteristic ore showing of the property being presented?

2nd. Where is it located and is it in the vicinity of other mines that are being worked?

3rd. Is there a good title to the mines or are they merely held on bond and lease, or on an option?

4th. What sort of a corporation has been formed to take title to the property and under what state laws; also the charter life of the company?

5th. Is it safe to trust the men who are at the helm?

6th. Will money put in be used to open up the mines or will it be pocketed by the managers?

7th. Will one stand a good chance to get a fair slice of profits against what is put in?

In answer to the above questions, a prospectus, or statement will be sent upon postal card request addressed to

CANADIAN SCOUTS MAKE A HAUL--BOER MAGAZINE CONTAINING 310,000 ROUNDS AMMUNITION, FOUND

Lord Kitchener Reports a Big Find of Ammunition, Shells, Helios and Field Telegraphs

With a Maxim Gun, and Thirty-five Boers

The Canadian Scouts were Commanded by Colonel Ross—Compulsory Military Service in Natal

London, March 10.—Lord Kitchener, in a despatch from Pretoria dated to-day, reports the discovery of a Boer magazine in a cave northeastward of Rietz (Orange River Colony), containing 310,000 rounds of rifle ammunition, hundreds of shells and fuses, 300 pounds of powder, a Maxim gun, helios, field telegraphs and quantities of stores. Thirty-five Boers have been captured in the same neighborhood since March 4. The magazine was discovered by Canadian Scouts, commanded by Colonel Ross.

CECIL RHODES' ILLNESS DENIED.

London, March 8.—While private telegrams from Cape Town to-day report that Cecil Rhodes is in a critical condition, the officials here of the British Chartered South African Company say Mr. Rhodes is conducting his business correspondence as usual. In two cable despatches received from Mr. Rhodes this morning his illness was not mentioned.

Pietermaritzburg, March 8.—The Natal Legislature has adopted a resolution in favor of compulsory military service.

QUAKER CITY'S WELCOME

Prince Henry Will Visit Philadelphia To-Day and Return to New York

Philadelphia, Pa., March 10.—Prince Henry will spend five hours in Philadelphia to-day, and during that time will be kept busy following out the programme prepared for his entertainment by the local committee. From the time he enters the Broad street station until his return to New York he will receive a continuous ovation. The royal party will arrive shortly after ten o'clock in the morning. When the train steams into the station there will be a deafening welcome from locomotive whistles and cheers from thousands of spectators. The train will be boarded by Dr. Ritschl, the German Consul, and Mayor Ashbridge. The Prince will be greeted by Dr. Ritschl, who will introduce the Mayor. After the exchange of a few words between them, Mayor Ashbridge will escort the Prince from the train through double lines formed by the members of the reception committee and police officers to the waiting room of the station. The party will then proceed to the Mayor's office in the city hall, where the Prince will be presented with the freedom of the city. An interesting feature of the ceremonies will be the presence of three grizzled veterans of the Franco-Prussian war, who fought under Emperor William I, grandfather of the Prince, and who are now residents of Philadelphia.

After the formal presentation of the engrossed resolutions extending the municipal welcome and tendering the freedom of the city, the Prince and suite and citizens' committee will be driven down Broad street to Chestnut street, to Independence Hall, where a brief stop will be made. The honorary escort will consist of mounted police and the First and Second Troops, Philadelphia City Cavalry. Leaving Independence Hall, the procession will move up Fifth street to Market, and then by way of Broad street and Gerrard avenue to Cramps' shipyard. Representatives of the great shipbuilding firm will greet the distinguished visitors and the Russian battleship Retzivan will fire an admiral's salute of seventeen guns. A visit of inspection to every part of the mammoth plant will be made. Leaving the shipyards the party will proceed to the Union League Club, where an elaborate luncheon will be served. At 3.30 the royal party will leave over the Pennsylvania Railroad for New York.

A PROSPEROUS INSTITUTION

Thirtieth Annual Report of the Hamilton Provident and Loan Society

We are favored with a copy of the last annual report of this company, particulars of which appear elsewhere.

The company and management are to be congratulated upon the business of the year. The gross profits amount to $188,000, and the actual amount paid in for interest foots up $191,000, showing remarkably good mortgage accounts. The farmers in Ontario, as is very well known, have done well of late, while the crops in Manitoba have been such as to satisfy the expectations of the most sanguine. The product of two and a half million acres in Manitoba and the North-West reached sixty million bushels, and there is yet of similar land ready for the plough 200,000,000 acres which should be an enormous field for the employment of capital for many years to come. It is in the promotion and development of such progress in our new and fertile regions in the North-West, as well as throughout the Dominion, that companies like the Hamilton Provident & Loan Society find a large proportion of their usefulness.

King Edward VII

Wedding Anniversary of the King and Queen

London, March 10.—To-day was the thirty-ninth anniversary of the wedding of the King and Queen their marriage having taken place March 10, 1863. Queen Alexandra is making preparations for her customary spring visit to Copenhagen, where she will be joined by the King early in April on the occasion of the family gathering for celebrating the birthday of the venerable King Christian.

JAPANESE TO RATIFY ALLIANCE

Celebrations to be Held Throughout the Empire

Tokio, Japan, March 8.—via Victoria, B. C., — Japan has gone wild with delight over the conclusion of the Anglo Japanese alliance, and is only considering how best to celebrate. Until the ratification everything is in embryo, but some of the communities will not be denied. There has been an elaborate torchlight procession at Tokio, besides the formal interchange of congratulations at a joint meeting held by the two Houses of the Diet, at which Sir Claude MacDonald, the British Minister, was present.

At various towns in Japan special celebrations have already been held or are in contemplation. The vernacular press is brimming over with cheerful forecasts of the result of the "diplomatic union," flags are flying and altogether young Japan is patting itself on the back.

Ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs Kato touched the keynote of popular sentiment the other day when, in a speech on the proper methods of receiving the news of the alliance, he said that Japan should accept her position with all dignity. There should be no question of using the opportunity for asking England to aid in the introduction of foreign capital into Japan. Such a course would be like a bridegroom asking his father-in-law for money on the day of the wedding.

KING EDWARD'S CORONATION

"It would be fitting," said Mr. Kato, "that Japan should signalize the occasion by sending over to the naval review to be held at Spithead during King Edward's coronation some representative warship, which would be more effective than oratory or cheap champagne in a dark corner of the Empire."

This idea of Mr. Kato has taken hold, and to-day it is reported that Premier Katsura has obtained the sanction of the Emperor to send a first class battleship and a cruiser to take part in the Spithead naval demonstration.

The Chambers of Commerce throughout the country are preparing to send two representative merchants to attend the coronation ceremonies. Another feature this spring will be the joint naval manoeuvres by the British and Japanese fleets in the China sea, in honor of the conclusion of the alliance. The British were going to hold manoeuvres there, and it is now proposed that their squadron will be reinforced from the Japanese fleet. As it happens, Russia is preparing to hold naval manoeuvres in the same region about the same time, and the coincidence has been noted.

Marquis Ito, ex-Premier, who has been on a triumphal tour of the world, is expected to arrive at Nagasaki, Japan, on the 26th inst. His return will be made the signal for a marked demonstration of welcome.

Although Marquis Ito was not in London when the treaty was signed, and it is more than rumored that he was half inclined to treat with Russia for an alliance, still popular sentiment ascribes to him the great credit for the conclusion of the convention.

CHANDOS

—The rain on Friday and Saturday took nearly all the snow.

—Messrs. Maurice and Patrock Holbins and Michael O'Brian have returned from Mr. A. McDonald's camp.

—Mr. John O'Brien had his foot hurt the other day by getting it jammed between two logs.

—Mr. Stephen Scott, tax collector, is busy now.

—Miss Nellie O'Brien has returned home from visiting her friends in town.

—Miss Lizzy Scott has returned from Young's Point.

—Mr. Dennis O'Brien and James Menague were forced to walk home from Apsley, after taking a horse and cutter.

—The Coe Hill and Apsley stage did not get through to Apsley on Saturday, on account of the bad roads.

Weather Notes

Fresh,—Fair and mild.

A CAR FAMINE

The Supply Becoming Scarcer and is Causing Anxiety

In railroad circles there is a growing anxiety about the supply of cars in the early spring. One official said to The Times one Saturday that the opening of navigation would bring them face to face with the worst car famine in this history. He said with little ore moving now and coal traffic light the railroads were unable to supply enough cars to carry coke to the furnaces. Later on, when ore and coal movements will be heavier, the situation will be anything but encouraging. It is estimated that at the present time seven of the largest railroads in Canada and the United States have at least 160,000 freight cars in use, and are building daily extra batches. So far as locomotives are concerned the roads are in a better position than usual, but they do not hesitate to say they will have trouble to furnish cars to handle freight.

Items of Interest

London, March 6.—The second levee held by King Edward since his accession to the throne, occurred at St. James Palace to-day. It was not so largely attended as the first of the King's levees, but it was surrounded by the same elaborate ceremonial. A dense fog marred the function from a spectacular point of view, both within and without the palace. No Americans were presented, but the members of the United States Embassy attended the ceremony.

OSMAN PASHA MUST DIE.

Constantinople, Tuesday, March 5. — Osman Pasha, a son of the famous Kurdish Chief, Bedrahan Pasha, whose trial on the charge of high treason began here February 24, behind closed doors has been sentenced to death, but the sentence will be commuted to perpetual imprisonment. General Nazmi Pasha, a son-in-law of the former Grand Vizier, Ali Pasha, has been arrested.

INTERESTING EXPLORER DEAD

London, March 7.—The death of Commander John Powles Cheyne, R.N., removes an old Arctic explorer who must always be remembered as having been the first to seriously suggest the use of a balloon, in the navigation of which he was an expert, in the search for the North Pole, a suggestion which the ill-fated Andree accepted and—as is less usual nowadays—acknowledged.

Commander Cheyne served in no fewer than three Arctic expeditions in search of Sir John Franklin, his first voyage being in the Enterprise (1848-9), under the command of Sir James Clarke Ross.

His next Arctic voyage was as mate in the Resolute, under Captain Austin (1850-1), and his third was in the Assistance, led by Captain Sir Edward Belcher.

Commander Cheyne retired in 1870. In 1880 his scheme for exploring the Arctic Ocean and penetrating to the North Pole was brought before the Royal Geographical Society, but without result.

The commander's plan was to winter between St. Patrick's Bay and Discovery Bay, near an exposed seam of coal, which he relied on for the manufacture of hydrogen for his two balloons, together with natives and dogs from West Greenland, comprised the main features of his plan.

The famous marches of Schwatka, who during a year's absence from his base travelled 1,251 miles, inspired Cheyne, who in his turn, encouraged Andree to make his hapless attempt from Spitsbergen.

Commander Cheyne wrote the only history published of the Enterprise expedition, and Cheyne Islands and Cheyne Point remain in the Far North to testify to this officer's connection with the ever-alluring Arctic regions.

Jerusalem, March 7.—The steamer Celtic having on board 800 American tourists destined for this city, arrived at Jaffa yesterday afternoon. One hundred Freemasons, representing every Grand Lodge in North America, will hold a Masonic meeting at King Solomon's quarries under the auspices of the Royal Solomon Mother Lodge of Jerusalem.

JAMES DICK DEAD.

London, March 7.—James Dick, the largest English importer of gutta percha manufacturer of submarine cables, and philanthropist, died to-day at his home in Glasgow.

Chinese Officials are Skeptical as to Sincerity of Germany Recognizes Her Duplicity in the Far East

Protectionists Have Organized in Australia

Johannesberg Mines Need Laborers—Arrangements are Now Working very Smoothly.

London, March 10.—In spite of the speech of Count Von Bulow, The Times publishes a despatch from Dr. Morrison from Pekin, in which he asserts that the Chinese authorities refuse to believe that Germany favors the policy of the open door. He says the Chinese clearly recognize the meaning of Germany's isolated action in opposing the restitution of Tien-Tsin. The present German policy, Dr. Morrison says, repeats the methods of Germany in the case of the withdrawal of the Pekin legation guards. Germany was then the last power to remove her guards, declining to withdraw until she had forced China to agree to the Chin-Kiang Railway concession. The British Minister at Tien-Tsin intimated to the Chinese authorities that Britain was prepared to hand over the control of Tien-Tsin to them on May first, provided that other powers also withdrew. Dr. Morrison says the powers are known to agree to the British proposition, but that Germany dissents, awaiting a favorable issue of the attempt to bargain for the concessions demanded in Shan Tung.

FREE TRADE IN AUSTRALIA

London, March 8.—A despatch to The Times from Melbourne says that the protectionists intend to ask protected manufacturers to contribute funds to enable the party to win seats from free trades, chiefly in New South Wales. The free traders in Parliament continue to succeed in reducing the duties. The tariff on Oregon timber and on boots has been reduced by one-half.

MINES NEED LABORERS.

London, March 8.—A despatch to The Times from Johannesburg says that thirteen hundred stamps are in operation at the gold mines, compared with six thousand before the war began. The only remaining obstacle to mining is the difficulty of procuring native labor, as the Northern Transvaal was closed as a source of supply. The result of the first month's operations on the East Coast, under an agreement with Portugal to assist in obtaining a supply of natives, was eighteen hundred natives. Arrangements are now working smoothly, and it is expected that enough natives will soon be arriving to operate a hundred additional stamps each week.

A PLEASING INCIDENT

Hon. A. T. Wood, of Hamilton, Presented With a Portrait

The many friends of Hon. A. T. Wood, throughout this district, will read the following, which we take from the Hamilton Times, with a great deal of pleasure:

At the annual meeting of the Hamilton Provident and Loan Society a very fine portrait in oils of the President, Hon. A. T. Wood, was exhibited and in presenting it Mr. Alexander Turner made the following remarks which fully explain the proceedings:

The shareholders will recollect that at our last annual meeting a year ago, they authorized and requested the Board to procure a portrait of our President and have it hung up in this room. Gentlemen, I direct your attention to the centre portrait on the wall in front of you, to show how the Board have discharged the mission with which you entrusted them. I am sure you will all agree with me that the painting is a vivid likeness of our worthy President, and also a very fine work of art, highly creditable to our Gifted Canadian painter, Mr. E. Wyly Grier.

It is a fact, gentlemen, a melancholy fact in some respects, that thirty years have passed away since my friend, the President, and I took our seats as directors at the first meeting of the Hamilton Provident Board. Of the present board, we two only remain of the original stock of directors. It is needless for me to point out to you that whether as represented by the painting, or as he exhibits himself in the flesh, before your eyes, our President looks as vigorous, fresh and fit as he did thirty years ago. He is a grand living example of the harmless effects of passing years upon the man who leads an industrious, sober and upright life. I do not care to remark upon my own physical condition or to draw an analogy or make any comparison between it and that of my old friend, except that I feel as if I were fairly well preserved. This observation I make as a tribute to the old stock to which I referred.

Gentlemen, in congratulating you upon this latest artistic addition to the portrait gallery of the society's Presidents, I express my own sincere hope, and yours I am quite sure, that the Honorable A. T. Wood may long be spared to discharge the duties of the high office in the society, which he now so ably and worthily fills.

You Feel all Used Up

You're discouraged and disgusted—not enough energy to think, less to go to work upon. The reason? You are run down, your blood is poor, your nerves are like India rubber, not like steel as they ought to be. Use Ferrozone and the tired feeling will go, for it makes plenty of rich, red blood that feeds the brain and nerves. The desire to labor comes back and you enjoy it. You don't get tired, because you have used Ferrozone. Neglect not a day longer. Ferrozone will cure you. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

HOCKEY.

Quite a number of followers leave with the hockey seven this morning for Galt, to witness the final game there to-night in the intermediate championship of Ontario. The prevailing opinion seems to be that should the weather remain sharp throughout the day, and a good hard sheet furnished, our boys have a good chance of again defeating Galt. The composition of the team is the same as that which has won out in past games, viz.: Wasson, Glover, H. Armstrong, R. Armstrong, H. Morgan, F. Whitecroft and C. Graham. The results of the game will be announced at the Charlotte street rink, during the ladies' hockey match. The Times has made arrangements to secure a full report of the game, and this will appear in Tuesday morning's issue.

—The ladies' hockey team from Cobourg, play a return match with the Peterborough seven in the Charlotte street rink to-night. As the Cobourg game was very close, the odds are about even on the respective teams. This match promises to be very exciting, and should be largely attended.

THE TURF.

Joseph Seagram, of Waterloo, Canada's great racehorseman, has seven horses in training at New York. They are all green, and will make their debut at the Woodbine in Toronto, this spring.

LACROSSE.

The C. L. A. yesterday received a grant of $150 from Toronto City Council.

Orillia Lacrosse Club will organize tonight for the season. They expect to have a very strong team this year.

There will be a meeting of local lacrosse enthusiasts in the T.A.B. hall on Friday night to make arrangements for organizing a team.

THE RING.

At Louisville last night, Choynski won from Hanrahan in the fifth round.

Joe Walcott has signed articles to box Young Peter Jackson at Baltimore on March 13. Walcott contracts to stop Jackson in 10 rounds.

Martin Duffy, lightweight champion of the west, has signed articles to box Matty Matthews. They will meet in the main event of the American Club's entertainment in Chicago to-night. The match is at catchweights.

"Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien and Tommy Ryan will probably be matched to fight for the middleweight championship during the first week in May. Ryan insists that the weight must be at or under the 158-pound limit, while O'Brien says that he wants to weigh 160 pounds at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the fight. O'Brien, if he should carry his point, would weigh probably 165 getting into the ring, while Ryan would be at perhaps 160.

Philadelphia, Pa., March 10.—The six-round bout between "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien and Charley McKeever, which is slated for the Washington Sporting club, has created much interest in the fistic world. Both the men are Philadelphians, and some weeks ago met for the championship of England before the National Sporting club in London. McKeever lost on a foul, and followed O'Brien to this country to force him to another match.

FOR POOL CHAMPIONSHIP.

New York, March 10.—The pool tournament which is to decide the world's championship begins to-night in the Montauk academy hall, Brooklyn. Ten of the most expert players in the country are entered and the battle promises to be lively. Each one of the ten has a chance to win the title and the major portion of the prize money that will go with it. Arrangements for the event have been completed, and from the interest that has been manifested in the matter, there is little doubt that the hall will be crowded nightly for the next two weeks. The entries are: William H. Clearwater, Ellwood, Pa.; Jerome K. Keough, Buffalo, N.Y.; W. E. McCune, Boston; H. P. Stofft, Cleveland; Charles Weston, Texas; William Daly, Chicago; Patrick H. Walsh, Grant Eby, Irving Long, and William Wenrick, New York.

BIG COCKING MAIN.

Saratoga Lake, N.Y., March 10.—Arrangements have been made to pull off a big cocking main here to-night by birds which are entered from New York, Troy, Albany and other places in the state. The fight is for $1,000 a side, $500 on the odd battle, and $100 on each battle.

BIG LABOR MOVEMENT.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., March 10.—As a result of the call recently sent out from Scranton a convention will open here to-day for the purpose of forming a state federation of labor. While Pennsylvania always has been a strong hold of organized labor, there has existed heretofore no regularly organized state federation. The convention will be attended by representative labor leaders from Pittsburg, Lancaster, Scranton, Philadelphia and other cities of the state. Among other things, the federation purposes to give its early attention to the questions of child labor and sweat shops.

SCHLEY VISITS PHILADELPHIA.

Philadelphia, Pa., March 10.—Admiral and Mrs. Schley will come to Philadelphia to-day as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander K. McClure. This evening a big reception in honor of the Admiral will be given at the Penn Club.

BRITISH BATTLESHIP LAUNCHED.

London, March 8.—Queen Alexandra performed the christening ceremony to-day at the launching of the battleship Queen at Devonport. King Edward accompanied the Queen to Devonport, and their visit was made the occasion for a gala demonstration in their honor. The city of Plymouth was crowded with visitors as seldom before in its history. Flags and bunting were displayed everywhere, a large sum having been appropriated for the decorations by the town council. The mallet and chisel used in severing the launching cord were contained in a handsomely carved oak casket with golden key, all of which were presented to Her Majesty after the ceremony. The "Queen" is a battleship of the first class, and is designed to be one of the most formidable fighting machines afloat.

MASTER PLUMBERS MEET.

Elmira, N.Y., March 10.—The state convention of master plumbers will be in session here to-day with about 300 members in attendance. The work before the body is mostly routine in character.

DENSE FOGS IN THE CHANNEL.

London, March 6.—Dense fogs in the channels are causing numerous minor mishaps to shipping. A Holyhead steamer grounded to-day and her passengers were landed in the vessel's boats. Railroad and street traffic is impeded.

Cure for Consumption

Denver, March 10.—The News prints the following from its Albuquerque correspondent:

"You may quote me as saying that we can cure consumption in every stage," said Major Appel, chief surgeon at Fort Bayard. "I have never before made that statement, but we have succeeded in demonstrating it beyond a doubt."

Gen. McArthur, who has been accompanied by Major Appel from the fort, indorsed his statement, and declared he had never been so much astonished and pleased with anything in his life as the result of careful investigation of the work at the Government Soldiers' Sanitarium at Fort Bayard. The main features of the treatment that has proved so successful in the pure air of the elevated region are life out of doors, the most carefully selected, nutritious diet, and absolute rest in the case of reduced patients.

A LAWYER'S STORY

A Local Disciple of Blackstone Tells a Good Joke on Himself

The other night a number of gentlemen were seated in the back parlor of the Snowdon House, when some stories and reminiscences were told, one of which was as follows:

"I had a personal experience that I will never forget," said a well-known Peterborough barrister. "A boy about 14 years old had been put on the stand, and I was examining him. After the usual preliminary questions as to the witness' age, residence, and the like, I proceeded:

"Have you any occupation?"

"No."

"Don't you do any work of any kind?"

"No."

"Just loaf around home?"

"That's about all."

"What does your father do?"

"Nothin' much."

"Doesn't he do anything to support the family?"

"He does odd jobs once in a while when he can get them."

"As a matter of fact, isn't your father a pretty worthless fellow, a dead beat and a loafer?"

"I don't know sir, you'd better ask him. He's sitting over there on the jury."

A YANKEE FIRE-EATER ON CONQUERING CANADA

If Britain Is Right in Conquering the Boers, the United States Ought to Annex Canada

FOOLISH WORDS OF JOHN LENTZ, OF OHIO.

His Addess at a Meeting of Irish Nationalists Held in Memory of Robert Emmett,

Chicago, March 10.—The woes of Ireland and the wrongs of the Boers were kindred subjects at a meeting of the Irish Nationalists. The meeting was primarily held to pay tribute to the memory of Robert Emmet, but the South African war occupied almost an equal space with the Irish patriot in the addresses that were made. The chief address of the evening was made by former Congressman John J. Lentz, of Ohio, who spoke as follows:

The issue of the day and the hour is the attitude of the national Government at Washington on the question of the survival or the destruction of our sister republics in South Africa.

There are some who seem to believe that England is making war on the Boers for the sole purpose of securing possession of their gold fields. The commercial greed of England and the class dominated by it are undoubtedly in favor of this war for this selfish and sinister reason, but in this year 1902 England is threatening to annihilate the Boer republics for two reasons; one because the wealth of England is greedy for the gold of the Transvaal and the other because the Government of England is jealous of free institutions in South Africa in 1902 just as it was jealous of the independent character and the independent purpose of our own colonial ancestors in 1776.

THE ANNEXATION OF CANADA.

If it is good policy, if it is correct morality, for Great Britain to prevent the development, and growth of republican governments in South Africa then the time is ripe for the United States to prevent the growth and development of monarchial institutions in North America. If England can justify the barbarous war she is making against the Boers on the ground that she cannot afford to allow a republic to be established across the Vaal river, then the people of the United States cannot afford to allow a monarchial institution to strengthen itself across the Detroit and St Lawrence rivers.

If England is right in South Africa, and if the Government at Washington is right in its policy in the Philippine Islands, then much more justifiable will the people of the United States be in insisting immediately upon the annexation of Canada. Mark you, I say "If"—and I say it with an "If" at least seven feet high—if Jefferson was right in the theory that we could not afford to allow a foreign Government to establish itself across the Mississippi river; if Great Britain cannot afford to allow a republic to establish itself across the Vaal river, then ten-fold stronger are the reasons and the arguments why the United States cannot afford to allow the development of Canada in any other capacity than as a part of the United States of America.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. NEXT.

If our people in their new theory and new ambition as a world power are to accept and adopt the British policy in South Africa as the criterion of American conduct and American civilization, then there is no reason for any delay, except a favorable pretext, for the annexation of Canada. And it seems to me that the most substantial and effective forms in which we as American citizens can express our sympathy with the South Africans is to say to the world that we are in favor of another U.S.A.—United States of Africa as well as the United States of America — and in connection with that declaration let us announce to the world that inasmuch as England, Imperial England proclaimed to the world her fear of the development of a little republic of a few thousand inhabitants across the Vaal River, so much the more should we regard the six million British subjects across the Detroit and St. Lawrence Rivers as a menace to our peace and perpetuity as a republic.

There is no good reason why Congress should not take action and prevent the people of this country from supplying the British with horses and mules in South Africa, which, the Boers say, are among the most effective equipment and the most dangerous instruments of the British against them. Nor is there any good reason, nor even a good excuse, for the President of the United States neglecting the duty of neutrality imposed by article 6 of the treaty of Washington.

We were exceedingly active and aggressive in the demands made upon Great Britain for damages or injuries done at sea by the Alabama and other vessels, and I fail to see why we should not be liable, morally at least, if not financially, not alone to the people of South Africa, but the liberty-loving people of the whole world, for lending substantial support to Great Britain in her unwarranted war on the Transvaal republic and the Orange Free State. We are permitting Great Britain to make use of New Orleans for the purpose of renewal and augmentation of military supplies. We are not exercising due diligence as to all persons within our jurisdiction to prevent violation of our obligations and duties.

A GOOD POKER STORY

How a Jack Pot was Raised and Boosted by Four Pat Hands

At one of the local hotels, there is an occasional "game" on, in which some Knights of the Grip occasionally sit in. The other night, at one of these gatherings a jack pot was declared. The player next to the dealer opened, the next man raised, as did the third and fourth players. When it came round to the opener, he "saw" all the other bets and raised to the limit. He was imitated by the other three. Again he boosted, only to be boosted in turn by the other players. The other two men had abandoned their hands and looked on with absorbing interest as the stack of disks in the centre of the table took prodigious shape.

Finally the opener only "saw" the other three raises, and his decision was followed by the players beyond him. The dealer gathered up the remainder of the pack, and the quartet began calling for cards. Each one of them took one. Then there followed a moment of silence, as the players thoughtfully attempted to size up the various hands, and weigh the value of their own as against what might be out. The first player bet one white chip. It was called by No. 2, raised by No. 3, and No. 4 made it two blue chips for No. 1 to see his hand. The two first players called and the contest was eventually between Nos. 3 and 4, and here it was continued for some time until No. 3 deemed it advisable to stop.

On calling the last bet he was shown four kings, as against four tens, while No. 1 had abandoned four trays and No. 2 four sevens. It is believed that this is the first time, on a square deal, that four sets of fours have been held out on a single deal.

A Lake Captain's Experience

Capt. McDonald, one of Kingston's most prominent mariners, writes: "For years I have battled with the agonies of bronchitic asthma, oftentimes so bad that I could not sleep for nights at a time. I spent hundreds of dollars on doctors and quacks without getting relief, but one dollar's worth of Catarrhozone perfectly cured me." The above testimonial was given two years ago, and as the Captain lately stated he was still quite free from bronchitis, it proves Catarrhozone a veritable specific. Catarrhozone two months' treatment, guaranteed to cure bronchitis, price $1, small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co.

The Farmyard in Spring.

How it usually looks after the long winter of the north country! Bits of board, scraps of bone, perhaps brought there by the dog, or, what is worse, thrown out there after dinner; wisps of straw, scraps of paper, and all manner of debris scattered there during the cold days of winter, come to light, now that the snow has vanished.

What about it? It ought to be cleared up. You know it. Then why not do it? We live in this world only once. Life is precious to most of us. Pity the man of whom this is not true. More than we know or realize our health and length of life depend upon our farm surroundings. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the light which comes in through our windows all have much to do with the length of our days and the joy of living. All the waste material left by the winter days will surely decay if left where it is, and decay means malaria, which is simply the latter day big word for bad air. The washing from this decaying matter floats along the surface of the ground until it finds its way into the well, bringing back to us impurities which pass into the food we eat and the water we drink. The house drains get stopped and need opening.

But, putting aside all considerations of health, look at the matter from an aesthetic standpoint. How much better it looks to pass a farmhouse the grounds of which are well kept! You have noticed this. You cannot help it. About houses owned by those who "have no time for such things" you have seen indisputable proofs of the fact that the man who lives there thinks that all there is of farming is the money he can get out of the place. Nine times out of ten, if you really knew the family sheltered by that house, you would find them ill-natured, hard worked, and generally unhappy. Life has little meaning to its members. Everything about the farm corresponds to the appearance of the grounds around the house. No doubt the boys and girls are just aching to get away from the home to the city. The rundown and slipshod way of keeping the house yard may be taken as a sure index of all the other methods of the farmer.

"It is doubtful what is meant by a blizzard."—Daily paper.

I want to know what is a blizzard,
It rhymes well, I know, with a wizard,
Also with a Surrey fowl's gizzard.
But still, what on earth is a blizzard?
It's synchronic, too, with a lizard
And a Spanish chamois called an izard.
May my locks be abundantly scissored
If I know what's meant by a blizzard.
Some say 'tis a storm that can fizz hard,
And people with livers has friz hard.
If it means that I get
Both frozen and wet,
Then back to the States go, O blizzard!

WEST PETERBORO NOMINATION

Mass Meeting to Select a Candidate on March 22nd

A mass meeting of supporters of the Ross Government of West Peterborough will be held in Bradburn's Opera House, Peterborough, on Saturday March 22nd, at 1.30 p.m., for the purpose of nominating a candidate to contest the representation of the West Riding in the next Local Legislature. Addresses will be delivered on the occasion by Hon. J. R. Stratton, Hon. Senator Cox, Hon. Senator McHugh, Mr. John Lang, M.P., and Mr. Thomas Blezard, M.P.P. It is requested that all supporters of the Government who can do so will attend. All are interested in the nomination to be made and all are invited. There being several speakers it will be necessary to begin the proceedings of the Convention promptly on time, 1.30 o'clock, p.m., Saturday March 22nd.

The Lion of the Place.

Of the many artists who have depicted on canvas the tawny royalty of the king of beasts, few indeed have omitted the precaution of maintaining strong bars between themselves and their models—unless, indeed, the models were no longer living. The story is often told of the dinner-party given by Sir Edwin Landseer, at which the guests were startled by the entry of a stolid butler, who enquired respectfully, in a perfectly matter-of-fact tone:

"Beg pardon, but did you order a lion, sir? There's one down-stairs, just come, sir."

There was, indeed, but it was safely dead, and the body had been sent around from the Zoo as a complimentary offering from the authorities to Sir Edwin.

It remained for a woman artist, Rosa Bonheur, to own her own lions, make friends with them, and caress and handle them with absolute fearlessness and impunity. Indeed, at one time she accorded her great pets the freedom of her house and garden at By exactly as if they had been dogs: but this liberty she was later obliged to curtail out of deference to other people's nerves, although the lions never abused it or manifested the least ferocity.

It was certainly hard for the casual caller to arrive expectantly at the gates of the chateau and behold, as soon as the latch clicked, a huge yellow lion rear itself upon the terrace, stretching in a sleepy and amiable yawn a pair of jaws that could easily bite a man's head off.

"Oh, it is only one of Mademoiselle Rosa's lions," a neighbor—with intent rather to tease than to reassure—was once heard saying to an alarmed visitor who still hesitated on the safe side of the fence. "Monsieur need only be careful not to step on its tail; the tip is black, and one does not readily observe it. It is a friendly animal—quite friendly, I assure monsieur—though I do not know how it would behave if stepped on. One might do well to go tiptoe."

On another occasion a note from an admirer of the artist's work, a distinguished man not known to her personally, was delivered at the chateau.

"Mademoiselle," it ran, "I had promised myself in passing through By the pleasure of seeing the lion of the place, mademoiselle, and I therefore offer upon paper the tribute of my profound regard to the lion of the place I no longer expect to see."

Getting Your Own Jehu.

Much clamor and confusion have been done away with at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York by the installation of an illuminated carriage call system, which signals to waiting coachmen a half-mile distant. The proper numbers are flashed from a conspicuous place commanding the stretches of pavement where the carriages, cabs and automobiles formerly crowded and jammed the crossings after opera hours. Operators stationed at the entrances are given numbered checks, and, without the aid of the man with the fog-horn voice, calling one's vehicle is now only a matter of switching a series of levers, arranged somewhat like a typewriter board. The figures from 0 to 9 can be shown in each of the three large apertures, so that carriage calls may be numbered up in the hundreds and changed every two seconds. The principle of the device is similar to that of the shifting advertising legends written in colored incandescent lights. This innovation does away with all shouting for carriages, and gives the coachmen no excuse for delay and confusion, as they are able to read their numbers against the sky a half-dozen blocks away.

The Committee on Pulpit Supply had considered the applicant's taste in neckties and his wife's social antecedents, and found them satisfactory.

There remained only the question of his theology.

"In theology," reported the sub-committee appointed to look into this matter, "the applicant occupies safe middle ground. While he does not, on the one hand, hold that it is as hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven as it is for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle, he does not rush to the opposite extreme and teach that it is as easy for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven as it is for him to keep out of jail."

The main question being put, it was voted to extend a call.—N. Y. "Life."

Anecdotal.

In "Lives of the 'Lustrious," a biographical dictionary just issued in England, it is said that when Hall Caine, whose resemblance to Shakespeare is well known, landed in New York on a trip to America, he was accosted by the late Ignatius Donnelly, a stranger to him, with the words: "Lord Bacon, I presume."

Some of the late Lord Randolph Churchill's friends once tried to have Lord Salisbury reinstate his erratic lieutenant. Salisbury listened to them patiently, and then asked: "Have any of you ever had a carbuncle on the back of your neck?" "No," was the reply. "Well, I have," retorted his lordship, "and I don't want another."

At a dinner-table in London the conversation turned on speaking. Curran stated that he could never speak in public for a quarter of an hour without moistening his lips. "I have the advantage of you then, Curran," said Sir Thomas Turton, a pompous and pretentious member of Parliament. "I spoke the other night in the House of Commons for five hours on the Nabob of Oude, and never felt in the least thirsty." "That is very remarkable, indeed," replied Curran, "for everyone agrees that it was the driest speech of the session."

Dr. Gordon, who was the first minister of the church in Jamaica Plain, about the year 1771, was a Scotchman, very stern and arbitrary in his manners, and precise and orderly in his own habits. The following anecdote of him is recorded in the family journal of one of his old parishioners: One Sunday, while preaching, he had begun to develop his theme with the usual "firstly," and got through that and "secondly." Then, turning the leaves of his manuscripts he said: "Thirdly," a second time "Thirdly," and again in great embarrassment, "Thirdly!" Just then a little girl in one of the front pews stood up and said: "Please, sir, thirdly flew out of the window some time ago."

John Townsend Trowbridge, one of the few surviving intimates of Walt Whitman, relates these anecdotes in his "Reminiscences" of the "good, gray poet" in the "Atlantic Monthly": "When, at dinner, preparing my dish of salad, I remarked that I was employed as his critics would be when his new edition was out, he queried, 'Devouring Leaves of Grass?' 'No,' I said, 'cutting up Leaves of Grass'—which amused him more, I fancy, than the cutting up did which came later. As the afternoon waned, and he spoke of leaving us, somebody placed a book before the face of the clock. I said: 'Put Leaves of Grass there. Nobody can see through that.' 'Not even the author?' he said, with a whimsical lifting of the brows.

Recently an American cyclist wheeled through La Mancha, in Spain, and in all that bleak region found no one who had ever heard of "Don Quixote," much less of Cervantes.

Dogs are to be used as river police on the Seine. At Gibraltar, curiously enough, dogs are mainly used for smuggling across the frontier, while on the St. Bernard they have once more been established as "first aids" to the frozen. Burnham, the famous scout, found that on the Klondike trail every kind of dog could be taught to draw sledges. The decoy dog and the blind man's dog share with the sheepdog the honor of earning their own living in recognised walks of industry.

Goubet, the French inventor of submarine boats, has devised a model of a boat intended to run under water and to convey passengers between France and England by means of a cable stretched across the Channel. Perhaps his strongest argument for an underwater passage is that the steadiness of motion would prevent seasickness, the traditional terror of the English Channel. The submarine boat "Fulton" lately lay undisturbed on the bottom off the Long Island coast while a tempest overhead sent many vessels to destruction.

The keepers of the big cobras in the Central Park Menagerie and the New York Zoological Garden do not find it easy to supply their venomous charges with the kind of food that they specially prefer. In their native land cobras live chiefly on smaller and less dangerous and objectionable snakes, but although every effort is made to collect harmless snakes to satisfy the appetite of the imprisoned cobras, at some seasons they have to be content with rats and mice, which they do not particularly like. Other varieties of captive snakes are fed mainly on toads, mice, rabbits and English sparrows.

Smoking in church is a Dutch custom. Dutchmen are such inveterate smokers that one of them is rarely seen without his pipe. He finds himself unable to deprive himself of the indulgence, even for the short period of a church service. A similar practice exists in several churches in South America. Smoking in churches in Great Britain is said to have been prevalent at the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth century. At one time smoking was carried to such an excess in Seville Cathedral that the chapter applied to the Pope for power to repress the abuse. Urban VIII., yielding to their wish, issued a bull, which was promulgated January 30, 1642. In Wales smoking in church was indulged in as late as 1850. In one church the communion-table stood in the aisle, and the farmers were in the habit of putting their hats upon it, and when the service began they lighted their pipes and smoked, without any thought of irreverence in the act.

THE POISE

Of a woman in perfect health attracts the eye at once. Such a woman is all too rarely seen. The most of women bear scars of suffering on their faces which no smiles can hide, and often in their very carriage betray the womanly weakness which oppresses them.

There can be no perfect health for the woman who suffers from disease of the delicate womanly organism. Her general health is so intimately related to the local health of the womanly organs that these must be cured before the general health can be established.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well. It cures womanly disorders and diseases; brightens the dull eye, rounds out the hollow cheek and gives strength for wifely duties and maternal cares.

"My health is the best now that it has been for four years," writes Mrs. Phebe Morris, of Ira, Cayuga Co., N. Y., Box 52. "I have taken but two bottles of your medicine, 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' These medicines have done me more good than all that I have ever taken before. I couldn't do my work only about half the time, and now I can work all the time for a family of four. Before I took your medicines I was sick in bed nearly half the time. My advice to all who are troubled with female weakness is to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery'—the most wonderful medicines in the world."

Ducks Against Mites.

One of my neighbors told me a few years ago that ducks would rid our premises of mites. As we had old buildings infested with mites, which kept me overworked in summer in order to raise any poultry at all, I concluded to try the plan. Accordingly I bought 170 duck eggs, hatched 147 of them and raised 140 ducks, which I drove into the henhouse every night as soon as they were well feathered, and I never saw a mite that year. The following year I raised thirty-five and housed them the same way until they were ready to pick, and I did not have any mites until late in the fall. As soon as I discovered some I drove the ducks into the poultry house to sleep, and in a short time I could not find a mite.

I often caught some of the ducks in the morning to examine them, and found their beautiful white feathers covered with the little pests of all sizes and colors, which made me feel guilty of cruelty to animals at first, but when I looked deeper into the thick, creamy down not one of the insects could be seen near the body, and when they came up at night with no mites to be seen I was convinced that the down and feathers were too thick and oily for mites to penetrate, and that they were very soon bathed off the outer plumage.

I am so pleased with my success that I expect to try ducks again, for I found a few mites last summer, and it requires no more labor to raise them than to battle against the mites, and it certainly is much pleasanter and is profitable. I am not prepared to keep them through the winter, so I buy eggs of neighbors and get them off early enough to pick them twice and sell them in full feather the last of October. The first year I sold them for five times the amount I paid for both eggs and feed, but did not do so well the next year because the eggs were higher and did not hatch so well.—Mrs. Shannon Staten, in Poultry Farmer.

Clean Sleeping Places.

At this season of the year the swine need careful watching that their sleeping quarters are in good condition. It will not do to turn the herd to straw stacks, thinking that by so doing they will be comfortably and properly provided by a bed that will keep them warm and comfortable, with no bad results following.

The main feature in the hog bedding is to have it dry and free from manure or heating filth. The hog nest or sleeping apartment should be free from draughts or currents of air. There should be no air blowing in on the hogs while sleeping. This does not imply that the sleeping apartments should be close, low from roof to roof or poorly ventilated; on the contrary, they should be airy, plenty of space for circulation of fresh air. It is a bad plan to have hogs sleep in low, close quarters, where there is a tendency to create a steam or dampness that will settle over the hogs. A clean hog-house, with tight walls, moderate ventilation above to carry off the damp air is the basis of good sleeping accommodation for the swine.

The kind of bedding is a matter that may admit of some difference of opinion. The swine should not be left to the bare floor, without any warm, soft material for bedding. The hog, while indifferent in many ways about its comfort, enjoys a good, soft bed. The hog is also very sensitive to cold, and will always busy itself in carrying straw, leaves and soft materials to make a big, soft bed to sleep in, if left to its own inclinations. This manifestation of instinct should teach every hog-owner the need of supplying the hog with plenty of good, dry material for its nest.

Corn stalks are considered one of the very best bedding materials. Wheat straw is also good, but requires more frequent changing. Give the hogs good, clean bedding, change the bedding frequently and keep the hogs clean and comfortable through the cold season. It will pay. Hogs are worth too much money to handle carelessly in these times of high prices.—Nebraska Farmer.

MIDY

A story of a "joke" played in Vienna on Mascagni, the composer, who is soon to visit the United States, is going the round of the newspapers in Italy, where it has created an extremely bad impression. The distinguished Italian was the guest of honor at a soiree given by the theatrical artists of the Austrian capital, and expressed regret that he was unable either to speak or understand German, whereupon an actor of comic parts arose and addressed him very solemnly, saying: "Most illustrious maestro, you have given to the world 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' which is a musical freak." At this point Mascagni also rose, and warmly shook the orator's hand. "You have no other talent than that of self-advertisement." Another effusion on the part of the composer. "In a word, you are merely a genial usage." Prolonged applause, at which Mascagni could scarcely master his emotion.

Adelina Patti is, as all the world knows, one of the most charitable women in the world, and nothing pleases her more than to do a good turn "on the quiet," as she herself laughingly puts it. Last winter she was staying for a few days in an isolated village at the extreme end of Yorkshire. To kill the monotony of the place, the great singer went one night to a concert got up in aid of a certain village institution. Not half the performers turned up. Seeing the difficulty in which the chairman and committee were placed, Madame Patti (incognito, of course) offered to oblige them with a song or two if they cared about it. After she had rendered, in her own glorious way, three of her sweetest ballads, the chairman approached her, and, in solemn tones, thanked her: "Well, Miss, you've done uncommon well; and, although 'Arry 'Ock, the juggler, who thinks nowt of takin' 'old of 'ot pokers and a-swallowin' needles, couldn't turn up, yet you've pleased us very considerable, Miss!"

Colonel Osio was the present King of Italy's "governor" for very many years, when, as Prince of Naples, his charge was a delicate lad. Colonel Osio's strict regime has been very severely criticised, but that the King remembers him with respect, if not with affection, is proved by his having conferred the hereditary title of count upon him on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Yolanda. One day a request came from a well-known personage for the young prince's autograph, to be added to a collection containing that of his grandfather and his father. The prince was about to comply, when the colonel said, sharply: "Certainly not; what value has the signature of an insignificant boy who does not even know how to write properly?" For some act of disobedience a little later the prince was brought before his "governor," who exclaimed: "If I were the King I would cut off your head." "And I will cut off yours when I am king," defiantly replied the lad. His punishment is unrecorded, but, instead of cutting off his tyrant's head when that day came, he has ennobled him.

During the famous Douglas and Lincoln debate and subsequent campaigns the point was frequently brought out by the supporters of "the Little Giant" that Mr. Lincoln had served only a single term in Congress, but that Senator Douglas had enjoyed for years a national reputation. This point, says a writer in "Lippincott's," was urged in a heated discussion between an ardent supporter of Douglas and a German voter who favored Lincoln. Finally the former, thinking to overwhelm his opponent, said: "Who is this Lincoln, anyhow? Nobody ever heard of him until Senator Douglas brought him into notice by holding a joint debate with him. Senator Douglas, on the other hand, is a great statesman. Why, he has had his eye on the Presidential chair for the last ten years!" "Vot is dot you say?" was the reply. "You say Meester Douglas have hat his eye on der Bresident chair for ten years?" "Yes, that is just what I said." "Veil, you shoost tell Meester Douglas if he vill keep his eye on dot chair shoost a leedle vile longer he vill see old Abe Lincoln sitting down in it." This closed the debate, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

His Impression.

"Do you believe that college-bred women make good wives?"

"I don't think going to college makes the slightest difference," answered Mr. Stockton. "You couldn't keep a woman from assuming a position of superior knowledge by merely not sending her to school."—Washington "Star."

The Definition.

Teacher—Johnny, can you tell me what is meant by "steward?" Johnny—A steward is a man who doesn't mind his own business. Teacher—Where did you get that idea? Johnny—Well, I looked it up in the dictionary, and it said, "A man who attends to the affairs of others."—Cape "Register."

HUMOR OF THE HOUR.

Bunko Steerer—This is Mr. Wayback, I believe.

Farmer Wayback (suspiciously)—Yes; you have the advantage of me, young man.

Bunko Steerer—Not yet, not yet. Of course, nobody knows what may happen later on.—Somerville (Mass.) Journal.

The amiable gentleman stepped on a banana peel, pirouetted and dropped.

A large number of people laughed.

"See all those people laughing," said the sympathetic friends.

"Yes," said the amiable gentleman, with a smile; "they seem to be enjoying themselves hugely."

"Doesn't their laughing make you angry?"

"Not at all. It doesn't hurt me in the slightest, either morally, physically or pecuniarly. And I rejoice in the fact that the average of human happiness has been elevated just that much.—Washington Star.

A Contrast.

IN an article in the "Arena" for February, Eltweed Pomeroy writes of English and French national traits as shown in their deliberative assemblies—the House of Commons and the Chamber of Deputies respectively. Describing a visit to the latter, Mr. Pomeroy writes:

"The hands of the two big clocks—there must be one on each side to balance—approach two. A minute later the ushers, in full dress, each with a metal chain around his neck, arrange themselves in a row; the head usher announces in a loud voice to the few Deputies already there: 'Monsieur le President!' and the elegant Paul Deschanel enters and ascends to his seat on the third platform. The hall fills with Deputies. The audience quiets down. Without any roll-call, reading of minutes, or other preliminary, the President announces that Deputy Berry will speak.

"A stocky, businesslike Frenchman ascends the tribune. At first he speaks calmly, but, soon warming up, he expostulates, implores, entreats, commands, exhorts. Gestures are frequent and emphatic. It is an oration. A sharp remark starts a question from one side. M. Berry answers it. Another and another follow in rapid succession. A member stops walking in front and begins an excited explanation. Twelve or fifteen Deputies are talking at once. M. Berry shrugs his shoulders with an eloquent gesture of despair—as only a Frenchman can shrug. The President raps hard on the table; he rings his bell again and again, rises, and calls out: 'Attention, gentlemen!' The hubbub subsides and then renews. The President pleads with them: 'It is Monsieur Berry who speaks, gentlemen! Hear him!' His hands are extended in entreaty. His voice has tears in it. He assumes the most graceful, nonchalant, and pleading attitude. The speaker below him has stopped with a most patient and resigned air. A stalwart usher comes to the front and shouts 'Silence!' In the lull that follows, M. Berry makes the mistake of saying he could sing something that would convince them. At once the shout, 'Chantant! Chantant!' ('Sing! Sing!') goes up all over the house. Nothing can be heard in the din till M. Berry begins to talk in stentorian tones and gesticulates wildly and ends in an eloquent climax, which brings silence out of mere curiosity to hear him. A vote is taken and his motion is carried. Despite the noise, oratory, and hubbub, the body moves and action is taken. An Englishman is bewildered and scandalized by the tumult. He does not understand the French love of a sensational effect and of display.

"President Duchanel has just been married. A little later, a witty Deputy in the course of his speech said, 'I am a benedick,' with a significant wave of his hand backward. At once a fusillade of questions were fired at him—why was he a benedick? how long would he stay a benedick? was it good to be a benedick? The President arose, explained, pleaded, expostulated in a most pathetic and heart-rending manner. The orator talked below. The witty questions, bon-mots, and laughter scintillated across the floor. The audience in the boxes applauded and watched the actors through their opera-glasses. Ushers came out and shouted, 'Silence! Silence!' but no one paid any attention to them. It was as good as a circus. They were all actors, and acting with a verve, grace, and effectiveness utterly alien to the Anglo-Saxon."

Turning to the British House of Commons, Mr. Pomeroy says that a policeman points the visitor through a magnificent hall into an equally magnificent octagonal lobby without any seats in it. Halls leading out of it have seats, but a policeman tells you visitors are not allowed to sit on them. Policemen are everywhere, and they act as if they were the chief ornaments of the building. Even a member of the House must get a special permit to take a lady with the visiting party into the House restaurant. "While we are discussing the Parliament-toasted buns and tea, we notice a sentry pacing up and down on the outside terrace. On enquiry we find he was put there years ago, when the dynamite outrages stirred parliamentary sloth. The idea was that dynamite might be thrown from a boat on the river and destroy the buildings. He still paces."

Illustrating this characteristic worship of precedent, the writer says that his friend, Mr. Corrie Grant, member for Leicester, cited a couple of interesting facts. On entering the chamber, every member bows three times. At first Mr. Grant thought they were bowing to the Speaker, as representing the dignity of the House. But one day he noticed the Speaker himself bowed three times on entering. He enquired, but no one seemed to know the reason for this rule. The English in him became aroused and he went digging to find out. After a good deal of antiquarian research, he found that centuries ago, in the time of Henry VIII., the House of Commons met in St. Stephen's chapel, which of course was Roman Catholic, as that was then the State and all-prevailing religion. At the upper end was an altar, and everyone coming in bowed three times to the Holy Trinity—to the Father, to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. They no longer meet in St. Stephen's chapel; the religion is gone; the altar is gone; the real reason for the rule is gone—but they still bow three times on entering.

Again, "in the House of Commons the members sit on benches without any desks. These benches run up and down the hall, and an aisle runs up the center. The Government members sit on one side and the Opposition on the other. They thus face each other. There are only enough seats for about a third of the members. That also is English. The arrangement of seats is awkward for speaking, but it is 'old.' Down each side of the aisle runs a narrow strip of red carpet. Should a member in talking overstep this red carpet, he is called to order and moves back. The two strips of red carpet are just a little farther apart than the length of a sword and the sword arm. They are a relic of the time when the armed knights sat on either side of the house and a member was forbidden to overstep this red carpet lest in the heat of debate he should draw his sword and injure or be injured. The swords have gone ages ago, and the violence of that mediaeval debate, but the red carpet and the rule without reason remains."

No laborer who puts thought into his work need have any fear of ever being displaced by a machine.

A train of twelve refrigerator cars, carrying nothing but eggs—about two millions of them—recently made the run from Newton, Kansas, to San Francisco.

One of the most remarkable clubs of modern times has its headquarters in Almeda, California. It is known as the "Old Men's Singing Club," no one being admitted to it who has not the gift of song and who has not passed at least his sixty-fifth birthday. The club has 101 members, with an aggregate age of 8,006 years.

The great Simplon tunnel under the Alps from the valley of the Rhone into Italy is about half finished, and it is now believed that it will be ready for traffic within two and a half years. Its cost will be $14,000,000, and this enormous expense has been incurred to shorten the road between Paris and Milan only 50 miles and to save grades of fifteen hundred feet. The length of the completed tunnel will exceed twelve miles.

An editorial writer with a taste for statistics has given to this waiting world a statement in which women may feel some interest. He declares that he recently stood in a crowded thoroughfare of a large city and listened to "scraps of conversation" of fifty women who passed him. Of these fifty women, four were talking about cooking and recipes; seven, about babies; twelve were discussing men and love affairs; and from the lips of twenty-seven rippled remarks about clothes.

Miss Ellene Jaqua, a well-known vocalist of Brooklyn, N.Y., is the first person to possess a glass gown which can actually be worn and not once only. It is of spun glass, made in Dresden, Germany, and was modelled and cut in Paris. At the Chicago Exposition in '93 there was a glass dress exhibited, which became the property of the Infanta Eulalie, but it was only for show and could not be worn. A full description of Miss Jaqua's glass gown is given in the "Strand Magazine" for February.

The Chicago "Tribune's" record of legal executions and lynchings in the United States in 1901 shows that 118 persons were executed and 135 were lynched. Of those executed 71 were negroes, and of those lynched, 107. The executions were one fewer than in 1900, and the lynchings were 20 more. It is noticeable that of the lynchings only 30 were for murder and 19 for criminal assault, leaving a remainder of 77 persons lynched for minor crimes. It is noticeable also that the number of lynchings in the Northern States increased from 8 in 1900 to 14 in 1901.

Chief Engineer Emil Prinwitz of the North German Lloyd steamship "Kronprinz Wilhelm," is experimenting with a new arrangement which he has placed in the ship for use in case of a collision. A small wheel abaft the pilot-house is turned, and instantly hydraulic pressure closes twenty water-tight doors in the lower part of the ship, making sixteen water-tight compartments. The fact that all the doors are closed is instantly shown on an electric dial, on which the numbers of the doors and their location are printed. The sixteen water-tight rooms are more than enough to float the vessel in case any part of her hull is punctured. The experiments show that not more than two minutes is required to render the "Kronprinz Wilhelm" unsinkable.

Anticipated the Permission.

MINISTERS have many interesting and amusing experiences.

A clergyman of Duluth, Minn., was engaged in conversation with a number of friends the other day, when each started telling stories of weddings he had performed. One of the party had this to offer:

Some time ago a great big fellow, roughly dressed, and a wee mite of a young woman came to him. They had no witnesses, and, in fact, did not care to have any. Nevertheless, a bridesmaid and groomsman were selected from the household and the ceremony began. They had promised to love and obey and all the rest of the service, when the preacher announced: "Kiss the bride."

The bridegroom, on bended knee, hesitated a little, tried to say something and couldn't.

"Kiss the bride," said the pastor.

"Why, parson, I did, afore I come here at all," replied the bridegroom, whose face had taken the color of a June rose.

The witnesses burst forth in laughter, while the minister had all he could do to retain the serious expression which he always wore when wedding people.

Old Age.

PROFESSOR JOWETT, the great master of Balliol College, had wise words to speak on the crucial topic of growing old. He wrote to a friend:

"The later years of life appear to me, from a certain point of view, to be the best. They are less disturbed by care and the world; we begin to understand that things really never did matter so much as we supposed, and we are able to see them more in their true proportion, instead of being overwhelmed by them. We are more resigned to the will of God, neither afraid to depart nor overanxious to stay. We cannot see into another life, but we believe, with an inextinguishable hope, that there is something still reserved for us."

It is worth while to remember his hints for old age, full, as they are, of a practical wisdom:

Beware of the coming on of age, for it will not be defied.

A man cannot become young by over-exerting himself.

A man of sixty should lead a quiet, open-air life.

He should collect the young about him.

He should set other men to work.

He ought, at sixty, to have acquired authority, reticence and freedom from personality.

He may truly think of the last years of life as being the best, and every year as better than the last, if he knows how to use it.

Mrs. McVicars—Aye, my Jeannie's wee Johnny went wi' the Sabbath-skill's picnic, and he got awa doon by the watter-side and fell in, and they haven't found his body yet. Mrs. Peterson—Oh, just aye! And he'd have his best claes on, too.—[illegible]

Anecdotal.

A country convert, full of zeal, offered himself for service in his first prayer-meeting remarks. "I'm ready to do anything the Lord asks of me," he said, "so long as it's honorable."

Some years ago at a Mardi Gras ball at the Hopkins Institute in San Francisco, a man, masked, approached a woman, masked, and asked her for a dance, as is considered right and proper at Mardi Gras. "But I don't know you, sir," said the lady in her most icy tone. "Well, I'm taking as big a risk as you are," retorted the man.

A tender-hearted youth was once present at an Oxford supper, where the fathers of those assembled were being roundly abused for their parsimony in supplying the demands of their sons. At last, after having long kept silence, he lifted up his voice in mild protest. "After all, gentlemen," he said, "let us remember that they are our fellow-creatures."

The Chatsworth (Ont.) "News" says: "A good joke is told on a Chatsworth young man who went to Owen Sound one day last week and dropped into Dr. Lang's office to be vaccinated. The doctor asked him if he had ever been vaccinated before and he replied: 'I've been vaccinated twice and baptized three times and neither one of them took.' The doctor hesitated, but finally concluded to vaccinate him, and judging from the way he holds his arm the third vaccination 'took,' even if the third baptism didn't."

Jacob A. Riis tells of an Irish teamster who went to the priest in a fright; he had seen a ghost on the church wall as he passed it in the night. "And what was it like?" asked the priest. "It was like nothing so much as a big ass," said Patrick, wild-eyed. "Go home, Pat! and be easy," replied the priest, soothingly; "you've only seen your own shadow."

Thomas Bailey Aldrich once received a pathetic letter in a feminine hand announcing the death of a little daughter and asking if he would not send in his own handwriting a verse or two from "Babie Bell" to assuage the grief of the household. Aldrich sent the whole poem, and not long after saw it displayed in the shop of an autograph dealer, with a good, round price attached thereto.

Senator Cullom of Illinois was asked by a correspondent why the Committee on Foreign Relations had enjoined secrecy on the text of the new treaty with Great Britain, when the text of the treaty was printed in all the morning papers. "Just so, just so," said the senator; "that's the reason the injunction of secrecy was placed upon the treaty. We knew that if we made it public at once not a paper in the country would print its full text."

During his visit to New York Thackeray was very much attracted by the beauty and brilliancy of a Miss B., and, in accordance with foreign custom, made a morning call, when she did not expect anyone. Hearing some talking in the lower hall, she leaned over the banisters and asked the servant who it was. "It's Mr. Thackeray, ma'am." "Oh, damn Thackeray!" replied Miss B. "No," said Thackeray, who could not but hear the remark, "it's not Misther O'Dam Thackeray, but Mr. Makepeace Thackeray." And, with a laugh, Miss B. came down.

The venerable Mr. —— believed unqualifiedly in Boston, as not the hub only, but the forward wheels also, of the universe. The excellent old gentleman, having confessed to L. G. that he had never found time, during his busy life, to read Shakespeare, was advised to do so during the winter then approaching. In the spring G. called on the estimable citizen, and casually asked if he had read any of the plays during the season just passed. "Yes," he replied, "he had read them all." "Do you like them?" ventured G., feeling his way cautiously to an opinion. "Like them!" replied the old man, with effusive ardor; "that is not the word, sir! They are glorious, sir; far beyond my expectation, sir! There are not twenty men in Boston, sir, who could have written those plays!"

Lord John (Russell) with a curious artlessness of disposition which made it impossible for him to feign a cordiality he did not feel, united an astonishing want of tact. Once, at a concert at Buckingham Palace, he was seen to get up suddenly, turn his back on the Duchess of Sutherland, by whom he had been sitting, walk to the remotest part of the room, and sit down by the Duchess of Inverness. When questioned afterwards as to the cause of his unceremonious move, which had the look of a quarrel, he said: "I could not have sat any longer by that great fire; I should have fainted." "Oh, that was a very good reason for moving; but I hope you told the Duchess of Sutherland why you left her." "Well—no. I don't think I did that. But I told the Duchess of Inverness why I came and sat by her."

The Use of the Word "Lady."

It is said that it is coming to be the fashion again to use the word "lady," and that the word "party" is also in better favor. For some years modish persons have called ladies "women," and parties "functions." There was some excuse for the former substitution because "lady" was worked to death, and so misused as to make it ridiculous. But vague as its meaning is, it has a meaning (or meanings), to the conveyance of which it is indispensable, and the folks who have dismissed it from their vocabularies have not been persons of much philological discernment.

The use of "function" for "party" has been a mere fad that must have started as a pleasantry and gradually became a habit. It makes it possible to speak of a row at a ball as a "functional disorder"; but even that doesn't warrant its vogue. It is a poor, borrowed, anglicised word, which the British-American language doesn't need.

Quite Too Romantic.

"I say, is this here the novel you advised me to read?" said the cabman to the librarian. "Yes," replied the librarian; "that's the one." "Well," said the cabman, "you can just take it back. There's nine people in the first four chapters who hired cabs, and each of 'em, when he got out, 'flung his purse to the driver.' Now, when I want that sort of literature, I'll go to Jules Verne and get it pure."

"No," said the landlady, "we cannot accommodate you. We only take in single gentlemen." "Goodness," replied Mr. Marryatt; "what makes you think I'm twins?"—Philadelphia "Record."

Might be Worse.

One day, Mackintosh, having vexed him by calling O'Quigly "a rascal," Parr immediately rejoined, "Yes, Jemmie, he was a bad man, but he might have been worse; he was an Irishman, but he might have been a Scotchman; he was a priest, but he might have been a lawyer; he was a republican, but he might have been an apostate."

Breaking the Bank at Monte Carlo.

SENATOR CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW recently visited Monte Carlo on his wedding journey, and watched Lord Rosslyn attempt to break the bank. "Everybody," he says, "is laughing at the earl's so-called system. He announced in England that he had an infallible system, and only needed $50,000 to make it go. People tumbled over each other to give him the money. He began playing with thousand-franc notes. When I left he was playing with five-franc pieces. I was told that all but about $5,000 of the $50,000 was gone. There is no such thing as breaking the bank at Monte Carlo. A man who has lived in the place merely as a resident for years told me the gambling-house paid returns as regular as dividends on the New York Central Railroad. I suppose there are ten roulette-tables, and each table is a bank with a capital of $120,000. If you win all its capital that particular table closes for the day to get a change of luck. That is all the bank-breaking there is. You would have to go through all the other tables—roulette, rouge-et-noir, and trente-et-quarante — before you close up the concern, and there are several of each. They are a dismal looking lot—the players. I never saw one of them smile, and the winners looked as miserable as the losers. Nobody gets away with any money, no matter how much he wins. At least it is very rare. I saw one man begin with a thousand-franc note—$200. He played and won—doubled his money; played, and won again, and again doubled. He kept on until he had won about $24,000. Then he started resolutely to go out. At the door he stopped, hesitated, and turned back. He sauntered over to the table, and looked on at the game for a while. Then he buttoned up his coat again, with great decision, and started out with a firm stride. But he could not — positively could not get through the door. The last I saw of him he was playing away again, and the $24,000 was going pell-mell back into the gambling-house coffers. I did see one man, however, win and go away with his money. He was a very rich man, as I happened to know, and just played for fun, not caring whether he won or not. He had astonishing luck. The same number came up five times in succession—an unusual thing. It made a great sensation in the room, and people gathered about. At the fifth turn of the number he swiped in everything from the table, and poked away the wads of French banknotes into his pockets right and left. He won about $6,000 in a very few moments."

Why Women Can't Throw Straight.

IT has often been a source of wonder to married men that their wives should invariably hit the cat, or some other inoffending object, when aiming bootjacks and other missiles in their direction. An explanation is now to hand, which, it is hoped, will add enlightenment, as well as consolation, to any benighted Benedict who has experienced this idiosyncrasy. It appears that the reason a woman cannot aim straight is on account of her collar-bone being too large to enable her to acquire a free swipe of the arm. This simply shows that when kind Providence sent woman into the void for man to lavish his affections and earnings upon, everything was beautifully and systematically thought out. Had woman been physically constructed so that her shying powers were equal to those of man, husbands would have had a mighty busy time of it dodging things generally. Thanks to that same Providence, however, woman can still throw her lily-white arms round our manly necks and hit the bull's-eye every time.

No matter what the world may say
About a woman throwing straight
Dame Nature built her just that way
That man might dodge her whoe trate.
Her collar-bone consoles her still
In formulating little plans
To "collar" and to "bone" at will
'Most everything of simple man's.

Civilization.

"I SEE the ships," said The Eavesdropper, as he stole round the world to me, "on a dozen sides of the world. I hear them fighting with the sea."

"And what do you see on the ships?" I said.

"Figures of men and women—thousands of figures of men and women."

"And what are they doing?"

"They are walking fiercely," he said —"some of them—walking fiercely up and down the decks before the sea."

"Why?" said I.

"Because they cannot stand still and look at it. Others are reading in chairs because they cannot sit still and look at it."

"And there are some," said The Eavesdropper, "with roofs of boards above their heads (to protect them from Wonder)—down in the hold—playing cards."

There was silence.

• • • • • • • •

"What are you seeing now?" I said.

"Trains," he said—"a globe full of trains. They are on a dozen sides of it. They are clinging to the crusts of it —mountains—rivers—prairies—some in the light and some in the dark—creeping through space."

"And what do you see in the trains?"

"Miles of faces."

"And the faces?"

"They are pushing on the trains."

• • • • • • • •

"What are you seeing now?" I said.

"Cities," he said—"streets of cities—miles of streets of cities."

"And what do you see in the streets of cities?"

"Men, women, and smoke."

"And what are the men and women doing?"

"Hurrying," said he.

"Where?" said I.

"God knows."—Gerald Stanley Lee in "Critic."

A Matter of Color.

Chromatopseudopsis is the medical term for color-blindness, and statistics show that men are much more chromatopseudopsically inclined than women. The man invariably succumbs to chromatopseudoptitude when he tries to match a ribbon.—"Judge."

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best!"

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

PROSPERITY MARKED YEAR

For Hamilton Provident and Loan Society.

INCREASE IN RESERVE.

Reports of Re-payments Most Gratifying—Contingent and Reserve Funds Strong—Business in Keeping with the Country's Growth.

The thirtieth annual meeting of the shareholders of the society was held at the society's head office at 11 o'clock this forenoon.

Among those present were the following: H. W. Clarkson, James W. Simpson, H. H. Miller (Hanover), John H. Coon, H. H. Anderson, Seneca Jones, W. F. Findlay, Maitland Young, E. G. Payne, J. T. Glassco, Hon. A. T. Wood, T. H. Macpherson, W. J. Reid, John Crerar, Judge Snider, Alex. Turner, R. R. Ferris, Geo. Rutherford, James Wilson, David Kidd, P. D. Crerar, Chas Judd, John R. Stone, John McCoy, Wm. Dixon, C. Ferrie, James Dixon, D. M. Cameron, Mr. Fisher (Winnipeg).

The President, Hon. A. T. Wood, was in the chair, and C. Ferrie, Treasurer, acted as secretary.

The secretary read the report and annual statements as follows:

Thirtieth Annual Report.

The Directors have much pleasure in submitting their report of the society's business for the year ending 31st December, 1901, with the usual financial statements, duly audited.

The net profits of the year, after paying and providing for all dues and accrued interest on borrowed capital, paying cost of management and other charges, amount to $87,987.21, out of which two half yearly dividends at the rate of six per cent. per annum were paid, together with taxes on capital and income, and the balance, $20,848.21, has been applied as follows:

Added to reserve fund	$20,000 00
Credited to contingent fund	848 21
	$20,848 21

After writing off all losses, providing for possible shrinkage in value of securities, also writing $3,000 off the society's building, there remains at the credit of the contingent fund $25,771.28.

The reserve fund now amounts to $340,000.00.

Repayments by borrowers have been very satisfactory.

Extensive alterations and improvements were made to the head office building during the year, adding much to the comfort of the tenants and giving us two additional offices for rental, which are now occupied.

In the month of August last one of the directors, accompanied by the treasurer and our general agent for Manitoba, made a tour of inspection of part of the farm lands of the northwest territories lying between the Manitoba boundary and as far west as Regina. After careful consideration of their report, and upon their recommendation, your directors decided to extend the society's field for loaning to that part of the Territories mentioned, which is within a reasonable distance from our Brandon office—the business to be under the personal supervision of Mr. Harcourt, our general agent in Manitoba. The necessary license has been secured, and a by-law authorising the society to extend its business to the territories has been passed by the directors, and will be submitted to the meeting for approval by the shareholders.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. T. WOOD, President.

WEDDING BELLS

Marriage of Mr. H. A. Aldrich and Miss E. L. Payne

On Wednesday last the Methodist church, Cobourg, was the scene of a pretty wedding, when Mr. Harry A. Aldrich, of the firm of McPherson and Aldrich, was united in matrimony to Miss Ethel L. Payne, of that town. The bride was tastefully attired in a suit of gray Venetian cloth, with silk blouse.

Mr. Clifford Payne acted as groomsman, and Miss Blanche Payne supported the bride. After the ceremony, dinner was served at the home of the bride's parents, and the young couple left for the west by the afternoon train. The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. A. extend congratulations.

OBITUARY

Mr. Thomas Brown Passed Away at His Home Last Evening

The death occurred last evening of Mr Thomas Brown, an aged and respected resident of the town. Mr. Brown had been in his usual health up to Friday of last week, and on that morning called on some friends. Later he was stricken with paralysis, and gradually sank until Sunday evening, when he passed calmly over the border.

Deceased was born at Cotehill, Ireland, in February 1820; in 1851 he married Miss Sarah Harrison, of Canningstown, a neighboring village. In 1855 he removed, with his wife to Canada, settling at Peterborough, and took part in the Fenian Raid in 1866, as a member of the 57th Ashburnham Rangers. In recognition of his services at this time he was presented with a medal, by the Hon. Dr. Borden, Minister of Militia.

Mr. Brown was an active member of the Royal Black Chapter of Knights of Ireland, and for over sixty years was connected with the Orange Order. He was a devout Presbyterian in faith, a member of St Paul's congregation, and in politics was a staunch Conservative. Strictly honest in his dealings with men, he was honored as such by all who knew him.

He leaves to mourn his demise a family of two sons and three daughters: Joseph Harrison, of Calgary; Robert K., of the Peterborough Hardware Co., Mrs. Wm. Dann, of Port Hope; and Misses Jennie and Sarah, of Peterborough. His wife predeceased him some fifteen years ago.

The funeral will leave his late residence, 547 Downie street, to-morrow afternoon at 2.30 o'clock to the Little Lake Cemetery. Service will be conducted at the house by Rev. Dr. Torrance, at 2 o'clock. The rites at the grave will be preformed by the local Orange Lodge No. 69, who have lost in Mr. Brown a valued and esteemed brother.

To the sorrowing relatives is extended the sincere sympathy of all in their great loss.

CHURCH NOTES

—Rev. J. G. Potter preached yesterday at Marmora, on the occasion of the opening of the new church there.

—Temperance sermons were delivered from several of the pulpits last night.

—Rev. Dr. Torrance conducted the service in St. Andrew's church yesterday morning, and in the evening the pulpit was filled by the Rev. Geo. Yule.

—At Murray street Baptist church, the pastor, Rev. J. Bastow, M.A., preached morning and evening. In the evening, the sermon was an earnest and eloquent appeal to the advocates of prohibition to stand by their cause in the coming struggle on the referendum.

—Rev. Geo. Yule preached a missionary sermon in St. Paul's church yesterday morning, from the words, "Thy Kingdom come." In the evening, Rev. Dr. Torrance took as his text the first clause of Isaiah 28—1, "Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkard of Ephraim. After a reference to the destruction of Samaria he drew a parallel of the sin of drink still in our midst notwithstanding the great advances we have since made in civilization. He dealt with the question from two standpoints, 1st, reason and common sense, 2nd, Holy Scripture, showing how excess of wine was injurious to a man physically mentally and morally. That scripture makes any distinction between wine fermented and unfermented the rev. gentleman refused to admit. Public opinion has fluctuated in the past 25 years, but the temperance cause had progressed. Referring conclusion to the referendum, Dr. Torrance said: "I have read the Bill carefully and it seems to be an honest attempt to fulfil the pledges made by the Government on this question in previous years. It may not satisfy extremists on either side, but to fair-minded men it is all that can be required. I do not hesitate to say that it is my firm conviction that the prohibitionists of this Province will do far better to accept the Bill and try to bring out voters for it, than to try to pick all the holes in it they possibly can."

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,080 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. M. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the Company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil seepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

GENERAL METHUEN WOUNDED AND CAPTURED TOGETHER WITH FOUR GUNS BY GENERAL DELAREY

Serious Disaster to British Troops--Forty One Killed ; Seventy-Seven Wounded

BAGGAGE OF METHUEN'S FORCE WAS CAPTURED

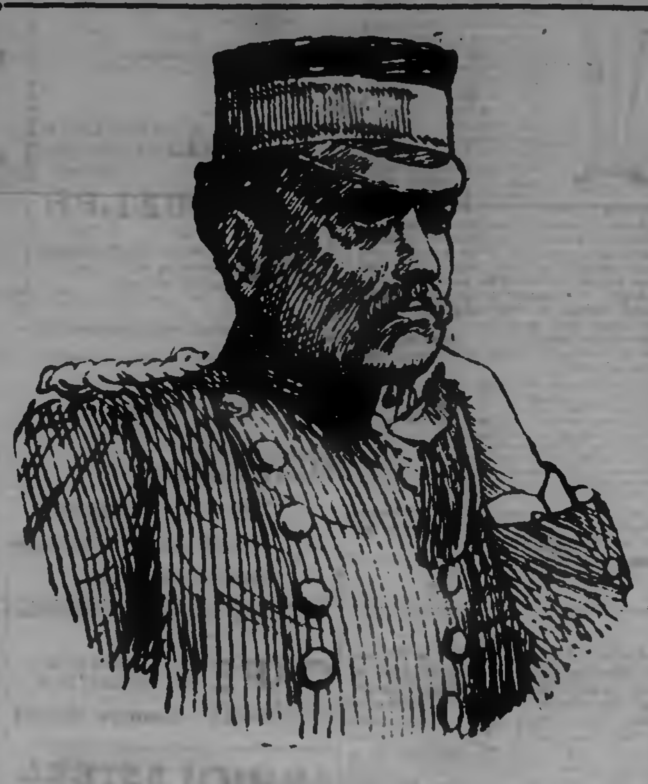
Catastrophe Took Place on March 7th Near Winburg in the Orange River Colony—First British General Taken

London, March 10.—At this late hour of the South African war the news of a disaster, which is entitled in magnitude to be placed almost ahead of Nicholson's Nek, Majuba's Pass and Stormberg, has come like a bolt from the blue upon the British people. Lord Methuen, with four guns, has fallen into the hands of the active and alert Delarey, the most persistent of the Boer generals, next to De Wet, who have taken the field. For the first time in the history of the war a British general officer has fallen into the hands of the enemy, and for this reason the catastrophe stands somewhat apart from the ones referred to above. General Delarey for months occupied the territory between Mafeking and Pretoria, and at one time besieged a portion of "C" Battery, of the Canadian contingent, in Rustenburg for six weeks, failing in his effort to capture the defenders owing to the vigilance of Baden-Powell, with whom the Canadians were then serving. Incidentally the news of the fight which has proved so fateful to British arms shows that Delarey has changed his sphere of operations, and has shifted his fighting ground to the Orange River Colony, having penetrated so far south as the neighborhood of Wynburg, which is not much more than 60 miles from Bloemfontein. It is evident that Delarey is making a diversion in favor of his friend De Wet, who is on the verge of being enclosed in the British cordon of blockhouses. Whether he has succeeded in his purpose or not remains to be seen. The fact remains, however, that British arms have suffered one of the most serious reverses since the war began. The despatch containing the direful news of disaster reads as follows:

General Methuen and four guns have been captured by General Delarey. General Methuen was wounded in the thigh. Three British officers and 38 men were killed. Five British officers and 72 men were wounded. One British officer and 200 men are missing.

The fight in which General Methuen was captured occurred before dawn March 7, between Winburg and Lichtenburg, Orange River Colony. The British force numbered 1,200 men. The Boers captured all the British baggage. General Methuen is retained as a prisoner.

The checkered and fitfully brilliant career of Lord Methuen has thus reached its climax. It is scarcely likely that he will be heard of again, as the fate of Gatacre will undoubtedly await him when free from the clutches of the Boers, who in his person hold the most important prisoner who has fallen into their hands over two years of warfare. Methuen's career is interesting. Starting out at the beginning of the war from De Aar Junction, he marched with the British army upon Kimberley, the relief of which he had high hopes of accomplishing. In six days he won three brilliant engagements, driving the enemy before him by frontal attacks, for which he was severely condemned, but which achieved the purpose. These actions were fought on Nov. 23rd, 25th, and 28th, 1899, and were known respectively, as Belmont, Graspan, and Modder River, the latter being the most deadly of the three. Having crossed the river, General Methuen's career of glory terminated abruptly. Held at bay by Cronje, before the grim heights of Magersfontein, he moved not an inch farther and made the vast mistake of sending General Wauchope with the flower of the highland regiments to a nocturnal hecatomb, a veritable, the like of which has seldom been equalled in warfare. Since this episode Methuen has filled minor commands in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies. It was he who, with a force of Yeomanry, won the victory near Boshof on April 5th, 1900, in which Count de Villebois-Mareuil, one of the most valuable foreign officers in the Boer service was killed. Since Magersfontein he has been apparently trying hard to retrieve his reputation, and seemed by hard, persistent work on the point of doing so when with the suddenness of an avalanche he came across Delarey and was dashed down the ladder of fame which he had a second time tried to climb.



LORD METHUEN.

Sanford Methuen, third Baron Methuen, is descended from John Methuen, Lord Chancellor of Ireland. He was born Sept. 1, 1845, and succeeded his father on the latter's death in 1891. He was educated at Eton, became a lieutenant in the Scots Guards in 1864. He served with distinction in Egypt and South Africa, and has been frequently decorated and mentioned in despatches for bravery.

WITH THE ODDFELLOWS

Notes of Matters and Things Pertaining to the Oddfellows

Pontypool Lodge, No. 298, I.O.O.F., held a very successful At Home last Friday evening in their handsome hall. Two candidates received the initiatory degree, after which an excellent program was rendered. Down stairs in the assembly hall, Bro. M. W. Matchett, D.D., G.M., gave an excellent address on "Oddfellowship," instructive not only to the Oddfellows but to many outsiders who were present. Games, etc., helped to pass away a few pleasant hours. Light refreshments were served, and all departed, well pleased with the evening's proceedings.

On Thursday evening next, March 13, at half past seven, an "Oddfellows' Rally" will be held in the lodge rooms, at Peterboro. Members are expected from all the surrounding lodges. The initiatory degree will be given at 7.30 sharp, followed by the other three degrees. The Oriental degree will be also conferred, followed by speeches, refreshments, etc. Grand Secretary King, of Toronto, has promised to be present. All Oddfellows are asked to be present, and an unusually pleasant time is assured.

Neuralgia Almost Drives People Mad

Only those who have suffered it, know of the darting, distracting pains that neuralgia inflicts. Ordinary remedies don't even relieve. It requires an extraordinarily strong, penetrating liniment to drive out the pain. To get relief rub Polson's Nerviline into the spot. Pain can't resist Nerviline, which has five times the strength of any other liniment. Drives out neuralgia in half an hour. Never fails! Never harms! Always successful. Try a large 25c. bottle.

Ashburnham Civic Association

The last meeting in February was well attended and quite profitable. The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, March 11, in the Council Chamber, at 8 o'clock. "House Numbering," "Fire Alarm System," "Sewerage System," "Beautifying Our Village,"—these are amongst the subjects to be considered.

THE BANK WILL OPEN ABOUT FIRST OF MAY

General Manager Stewart Makes an Announcement Regarding the Sovereign Bank

ALL THE STOCK IS SUBSCRIBED

Of the Total Stock About 2,000 Shares is Owned in the United States—A Few Small Blocks Held By Peterborough Investors

Montreal, March 11—"In certain sections of the United States a movement tending towards closer trade relations between that country and Canada is now under way, and from my observations in Chicago I would say that the matter will, ere long, come up before the House and Senate in Washington."

So remarked Mr. Duncan M. Stewart, general manager of the new Sovereign bank, who but recently returned from a business trip to the Illinois metropolis.

Mr. Stewart went on to state further that in Chicago there was not only a distinctly strong feeling toward reciprocity between the two countries, but a petition favoring it had been circulated there and very widely signed by bankers, merchants and railway men.

This petition, which is a huge affair, will in time find its way to the Senate and House at Washington. Everywhere in that city Mr. Stewart found prominent men strongly in favor of closer business relations, and he felt that in time this movement would have its effect upon the Washington representatives.

CANADA AND THE STATES.

He stated that the business men on the other side of the line are fast realising the importance of Canada. An immense amount of money is coming from the United States to this country, and it was well to anticipate a more rapid development than had taken place in the past. The business men of that country, were realising that there were larger profits for capital over here, and he expected that the Sovereign Bank would be the medium of transfer of considerable sums of United States money to the Dominion.

NEW BANK'S AFFAIRS.

Speaking of the affairs of the Sovereign Bank Mr. Stewart stated that the Montreal branch would be open for business on or about the first of May, and, as already announced, the executive offices will be located in this city. Among the other cities and towns where branches will be opened are Toronto (head office), St. Catharines, Stouffville, Perth and Amherstburg. Asked how the management came to select these cities and towns, Mr. Stewart said that with the exception of Montreal and Toronto they will not open at any point where the bank had not been petitioned to do so, and where at least $25,000 worth of stock had been placed. The fact of having shareholders in these different localities ensures to the bank a certain amount of local influence which, of course, would be beneficial.

Asked if the bank's stock had all been sold Mr. Stewart replied that the whole of the stock had been subscribed, but in comparatively large amounts. His idea was to reduce these, if possible, giving a preference to small holders. The more shareholders, the more friends. It was an old maxim and a good one. No public prospectus had been issued, though a private one had been prepared for the use of intending investors. The stock had not been offered to the public in the usual way, his idea being to select the shareholders with a view to placing the stock only in the hands of bona fide investors, or persons who might influence business towards the bank. He expected the stock books to close in about a month's time.

The plan of issuing stock at a premium, this premium to go to the reserve, had been very well received. Of course there had been some objections, but every financial man understood the benefits derived from such a plan.

2,000 SHARES OWNED IN U.S.

Regarding the United States connection with the Sovereign Bank, Mr. Stewart said that two thousand shares of the stock were owned on the other side of the line, and that the Morgans were their bankers in New York, London and Paris. It was a mistake to suppose that the Americans would control the bank, as some people thought. He hoped to do considerable business with them, and also with the Standard Trust Company of New York City, which corporation will act for the Sovereign Bank in the U. S. Metropolis. The United States interests in the bank will be looked after by Mr. Henry R. Wilson, of New York, who is on the Board.

The notes which have been made for the Sovereign Bank by the American Bank Note Co., at Ottawa, are of very handsome design, the special feature being a very fine vignette of King Edward. The picture is from a photo taken at the time of the opening of the present parliament in London. It shows His Majesty in a very happy pose, and this is probably the first reproduction from the photograph.

RUSSIA'S TIGHTENED GRIP WILL NEVER BE RELAXED

How the Wily Muscovite Secured a Foothold in Manchuria

WHICH THE NORTHERN POWER WILL HOLD

It is Believed That the Chinese Province will not be Given Up Without Participating the Calamity of War

London, March 11—Mr. L. Miner, a teacher in the North China College, Pekin, furnishes the London Post important news from Chinese sources. The writer tells a story of tireless intrigue, and of Russia's resolute pursuit of her own ends, by very questionable diplomatic methods, without the slightest regard to the wishes or the interests of the Chinese Empire on the one hand, or of the other powers with which she was allied on the other. The event which afforded a pretext to the Government of the Czar in its first move against Manchuria is thus referred to:

"The mad war with the world began. Far up in the north, where the great Amur flows, deluded Chinese bombarded the town of Blagovestchensk, killing three Russians. A tragedy followed. A picture will ever haunt the memory of those who read the story, a picture of the great river half choked with the bodies of thousands of men, women and children, of desolated homes, of barbarities to put a savage to the blush. Sir E. Ashmead Bartlett, speaking in the House of Commons, described the crimes committed by the Russians against the Chinese in Manchuria as far more atrocious than the revolting butcheries of Armenians by the Turks. They were stirred to this swift, terrible vengeance, you say, by Chinese treachery? Can the attack be called treachery, when for a month war had been raging in North China? Would the treachery of the Chinese soldiers give a Christian nation the right to dye a river with the blood of the wives and children of her foe? The Russian Government cannot wash its hands of this crime, for the War Office was in direct telegraphic communication with the Amur region, and there is evidence that General Gribsky was acting under explicit orders. General Orloff received similar orders, but telegraphed to St. Petersburg: 'I entreat to be allowed to spare the peaceful inhabitants.' It is a significant fact that General Orloff was subsequently degraded by the War Office, but the Czar commuted the punishment to that of an 'imperial reprimand.' That Russia will relinquish Manchuria without a struggle, is absurd. She is there to stay, unless driven out by force."

A. P. S. "AT HOME."

A Very Successful Entertainment in Ashburnham on Saturday Evening

A very successful At Home for the larger pupils of Ashburnham public school was held on Saturday evening, March 8, in the town hall. About an hour was spent in various games. This was followed by a short, pointed, and profitable address on "Self-respect," by Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, M.A., after which an excellent series of lantern views on "China" were presented. There were also several views of local interest. These were explained by Mr. R. B. Rogers, to whom the school is indebted for this series of interesting gatherings.

After the presentation of the views, which were remarkably clear and distinct, light refreshments were served.

It is probable there will be another At Home in a few weeks, at which it is hoped the parents will also be present in much larger numbers. The pupils in the second, third and fourth book classes are included in these gatherings.

The hearty thanks of all concerned are tendered to Mr. R. B. Rogers for his kindness thus manifested.

IRISH PRIEST SPEAKS ON BOER TREATMENT

A Page in the Boer War Which has Not Been Made Public

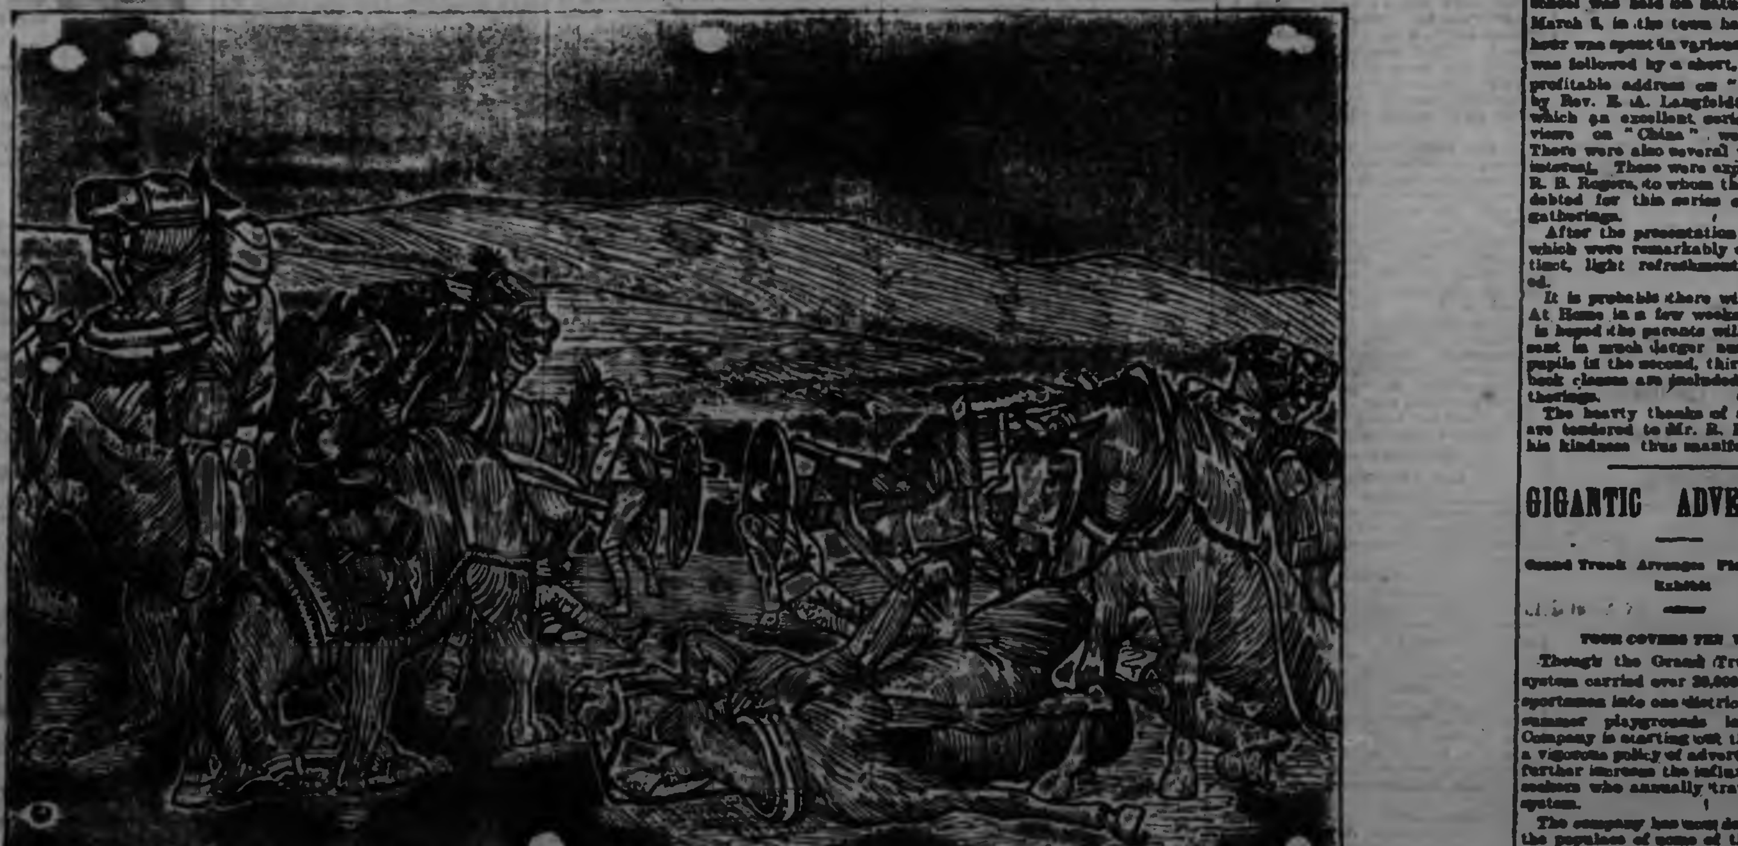
MOST FURIOUS BIGOT ON EARTH

How Kruger and His Gang Ran the Republic—The Catholic Churches and Convents Ruthlessly Plundered and Destroyed

London, March 11 — An interesting contribution to the war literature comes from an Irish Roman Catholic priest in South Africa, who writes to the Post as follows:

The Boers are furious bigots, hating everything Catholic. No Catholic had a vote, and was allowed to be a town councillor, policeman, or hold any Government situation. Catholics were subjected to penal laws under the Boer Government. Bishops, priests and nuns here are delighted that the tyrannical Boer Republics are overthrown and crushed. It was impossible for the Catholic church to get on well in South Africa under the Boer Government, but now under British rule they are paid by the State. Catholic magistrates are appointed already. It is disgusting to see Catholic papers and Irish M.P.'s sticking up for the cruel, brutal Boers, who subjected Catholics to every indignity here, and deprived them of their rights. The convents during the war the Boers plundered, and destroyed, and made stables of the churches. This was done in Newcastle, Natal, where Tim Healy, M.P., has a sister a nun, and in other cases as well.

The British have in every case treated the Boers well. The country could never prosper under the Boers, and no British people could live under their laws, which shut out all Britishers from the privileges of the country. It is 200 years behind the times; no advancement; everything very old-fashioned. The Boers treated the blacks most shamefully and cruelly, shot them down like dogs, and made slaves of them. The pious Boer says, "The British came and took our country from us." But the Boer does not say that they took it from the natives and robbed them and shot them down like dogs. The natives are a splendid type of men and women, intelligent and industrious, superior in every respect to the Boers. The poor blacks are well pleased at the overthrow of the Boers. The Boers are a canting, hypocritical race, Bible-reading, Psalm-singing bigots. A few years ago a Catholic priest would not get a night's lodging in a Boer house; the missionary priests had to sleep on the open plain. Then how stupid for Irishmen to be raving and sympathizing with the Boers, who despise the Irish, especially the Catholics. I wish the war was over. I am sick of the sad sights I daily see."



How General Methuen's Guns Were Captured by General Delarey on the 7th of March, 1902

London, March 10.—The text of Lord Kitchener's despatch announcing the capture of General Methuen is as follows:

Pretoria, March 8.—Saturday—I greatly regret to have to send you bad news of Methuen. He was moving with nine hundred mounted men, under Major Paris, and three hundred infantry, four guns and a pom-pom, from Wynburg to Lichtenburg, and was to meet Grenfel, with 1,300 mounted men, at Roviraines Fontein to-day.

"Yesterday morning he was attacked by Delarey's force between Tweboach and Palmietkuill. The Boers charged on three sides.

"Five hundred and fifty men have come in at Maribogo and Kraaipan. They were pursued by the Boers four miles from the scene of the action. They report that Methuen and Paris, with the guns, baggage, etc., were captured by the Boers. Methuen, when last seen was a prisoner. I have no details of the casualties, and suggest delaying publication till I can send definite news."

"I think this sudden revival of activity on the part of Delarey is to draw off the troops pressing DeWet."

In a second despatch, dated Sunday, March 9, Lord Kitchener says:—

"Paris has come in at Kraaipan with the rest of the men. He reports that the column was moving a two parties. One with the ox wagons left Tweboach at 3 a.m. The other, with the mule wagons, started an hour later. Just before dawn, the Boers attacked. Before reinforcements could reach them, the rear guard broke. In the meantime, a large number of Boers galloped up on both flanks. These at first were checked by the flank parties, but the panic and stampede of the mules had begun, and all the mule wagons with a terrible mixture of mounted men, rushed past the ox wagons. All efforts to check them were unavailing. Major Paris collected forty men and occupied a position a mile in front of the ox wagons, which were then halted. After a gallant but useless defence, the enemy rushed into the ox wagons, and Methuen was wounded in the thigh. Paris, being surrounded, surrendered at 10 a. m. Methuen is still in the Boer camp."

Then follows the number of the casualties, as already cabled. The killed include Lieuts. G. R. Venning and T. P. W. Nesham of the Royal Artillery who were both killed while serving their guns with case-shot.

As Lord Kitchener announced that Major Paris had surrendered, and also telegraphed that he had reached Kraaipan with the remainder of the men, it would seem that the Boers subsequently released the major and his companions.

Grand Trunk Arranges Plans for Picture Exhibit

TOUR COVERS TEN WEEKS

Though the Grand Trunk Railway system carried over 20,000 tourists and sportsmen into one district of Canada's summer playgrounds last year, the Company is starting out this year with a vigorous policy of advertising to still further increase the influx of pleasure-seekers who annually travel over this system.

The company has now decided to give the populace of some of the larger cities in the States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky and Pennsylvania an opportunity of seeing the series of photographic views it had on exhibition at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. There will be over 100 pictures in the collection, each measuring 3 feet 6 inches by 4 feet 2 inches, in addition to one of the finest collections of mounted fish that has ever been shown. The fish include specimens of black bass from the "Highlands of Ontario," dore and maskinonge from the St. Lawrence, land-locked salmon from their native waters, and other specimens of rare value. A representative of the Grand Trunk will accompany the exhibit and the art gallery will be installed in the business portion of the cities visited. Thousands of copies of literature, describing the several regions to be advertised, will be distributed. The exhibit will open at Saginaw, Mich., March 18, and goes from there to Grand Rapids, thence easily to central points in the other states.

The tour will occupy ten weeks, two days being allowed in each city.

THE ISSUE

The speech of Mr. Whitney leaves nothing to be desired in clearness and candour. He is opposed to Prohibition, and declares accordingly the policy of the Opposition. Mr. Ross is also opposed to it. He declined to make it an issue at the general election, has steadfastly declined to adopt it as a plank in his platform, has shelved it in an impossible referendum, and has attached the tag of compensation to it at that. The issue, therefore, is clearly before the people. Both leaders are against prohibition, and who is for it? The assertion is freely made that Prohibitionists are politicians first and prohibs afterwards. If this be so why bother us with a referendum? Let the delusion die, and if our friends let fall a tear when they remember the violence of their protestations and the suddenness of their death and burial, who will grudge them so cheap a salve to their consciences. Prohibition and Prohibitionists have been fairly laughed out of court. Now let us turn to the business of the country and breathe freely when we think of the past and its buried theories. The king himself has set the stamp of his approval on legitimate trade in beer by starting the Bass brew, and although the Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple of London has violently assailed him for it, it is likely that His Majesty will pull through. The story is told of a little girl who prayed that the lime would not catch the little birds, and then that God would not let the little birds get into the lime, and finally of her going out and kicking both traps and lime to pieces. Is no doubt a very edifying parallel, but anarchistic methods are not advisable at any time. Education is the best sort of prohibition. You put the bottle upon the table and then descant upon the danger of it, and if it be found after an hour's absence that the whiskey is still in the bottle the lecturer counts two, as Dooley says of golf, but if it isn't he loses the whiskey. It must be remembered also that men and women have an inherent right to drink, and when we give them the opportunity it is not for them to abuse it but to use it. The anti-prohibitionist says that so long as whiskey is made it will be drunk. That is what the prohibitionist says also. Between the two opinions lies safety. "Be moderate in all things" and drink Calcutts' ale.

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE

To Properly Estimate the Usefulness and Worth of Diamond Dyes

The Diamond Dyes now so universally used in city and country homes do a variety of useful work that no other home dyes can ever successfully undertake. Dresses, skirts, capes, jackets, blouses, stockings, ribbons, feathers, silks, and men's and boys' old and faded clothing can be redyed at small cost and made to look as good as new. Draperies, coverings, reps, damasks and curtains can be restored to new beauty and usefulness. Cotton warps, carpet rags, wool yarns, sheepskin mats, straw goods, grasses, everlasting flowers, hair, bone and wood can be dyed any desired shade.

Send your address on a postal card to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P. Q., and you will be furnished with sheets of new designs for making up pretty mats and rugs.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Bed-ridden 18 years.—"If anybody wants a written guarantee from me personally as to my wonderful cure from Rheumatism by South American Rheumatic Cure I will be the gladdest woman in the world to give it," says Mrs. John Beaumont, of Elora. "I had despaired of recovery up to the time of taking this wonderful remedy. It cured completely."—58

Her Ideal Man.

SHE was a lovely chocolate-cream-box sort of a girl, with a gushing tenderness suggestive of butter on a hot day, and she was confiding in her "ownliest own" girl friend:

"The man that aspires to the privilege of pressing his moustache upon my rosebud lips," she began, firmly, "must be tall and stalwart as a pine tree in its prime."

"There is a slump in pine trees just at present," murmured her friend, inaudibly, but the rapturous girl swept on.

"I can see him now with the perfect Greek features of the Belvedere Apollo, surmounting a frame that is suggestive of the Farnese Hercules in repose."

"I fancy that Ouida has been there before," murmured the friend once more, "but there is no additional charge for heroics; so proceed."

"His mouth must be firm but kind, and his soft hazel eyes will twinkle with a smile that is at once sweetly serious and saucily sedate."

"I fancied that I was rather a connoisseur in smiles myself," remarked her friend, "but I do not recall at this moment seeing one of the precise nature you describe. But I will endeavor to imagine it. Fill in your hero, please."

"He must be strong and resolute, yet generous and tender to a fault; his face will light up with the fire of a strenuous passion when his feelings are aroused, and yet he will have his whole nature in such perfect control that he will never lose that grip of himself which is the leading characteristic of the true aristocrat."

"True aristocrats have been a falling market for some time past," remarked the friend in another aside; "but there is nothing like putting one's trust in Providence."

"He must be both truly religious and honestly manly, with the creed of the man of the world elevated to the standard of the highest religious principle."

"Right, oh!" said her friend relapsing into slang. "Muscular Christianity, ritualism and rowing, golf and godliness, are all the go. There may be a chance for you yet."

And then a dreamy far-away look came into the melting maiden's eyes as she concluded:

"He must have no eyes for any other girl in the world, but must feel the god of love spring into birth in his heroic soul as his glance meets mine, and we realise that we were predestined for each other from the beginning of the world."

At this moment the door opened, and the neatly-attired parlormaid announced "Mr. Jimkins is waiting to see you downstairs in the drawing-room, miss."

"What! that little red-haired bounder with a squint," enquired the dear friend, "who used to be always spooning round after Maud and Blanche, until they at last succeeded in getting it into his wooden little copper-topped cocoanut that his room was decidedly preferable to his company! Why, he's the mangiest little toad that ever—"

But the whole of her remark was lost upon the chocolate-cream girl, whose dainty feet were tripping downstairs three steps at a time, and before the drawing-room door closed the dear friend heard her begin "Dear Mr. Jimkins, how sweet of you to come on a day like this!" And then the door closed, and the dear friend was left to her own cogitations on the eternal feminine.

Back at the Old Home.

IRVING BACHELLER, the author, tells a story of having gone back, after many years' absence, to his old country home in the New England States. On the ruined doorstep of the old house stood the seedy remnant of a once noble race. He wore, amongst other things, one suspender and a seedy pair of trousers. The conversation ran like this:

"Glad to see ye," sez he. "Thanks," says I. "We've heerd about you," sez he, "and they say you done noble." "Well, and how are you?" says I. "Porely," sez he. "How's that?" says I. "Jest makin' a bare livin'," sez he. "Why don't you go away?" says I. "Can't," sez he. "Why not?" says I. "Mortgaged," sez he. "That's too bad," says I. "'Tis," sez he. "You don't seem to have much to live for," says I. "Don't want to live," sez he. "You might die," says I. "Can't," sez he. "Why not?" says I. "Mortgaged," sez he.

At this point they were joined by another old acquaintance of Mr. Bacheller's—a man who for years had held a mortgage on every acre of the country-side. "So you're Paul Bacheller's boy?" he said, after scrutinizing the visitor closely. "The same," said Mr. Bacheller. "Well," said Mr. Wallace, reflectively, "if your father had kept you on the farm it would not have looked as it does now." Up to this point the unfortunate farmer who was mortgaged had taken no part in the conversation. Now, however, a strange grin came across his face.

"That's right, Mr. Wallace," sez he. "If he had been kept on the farm the farm would hev looked better, but he'd hev looked a damn sight worse."

Cause For Madness.

"By George," said a man who was riding to the city in an early train, "I detest people who are so positive about everything."

"It is a disagreeable habit," the passenger who sat next to him admitted, "and it always pleases me to see such people confronted with proofs that they are in the wrong."

"Yes, it does me, too. My wife's cousin has been visiting us for several days, and he's one of these know-it-all fellows. You can't tell him anything. Yesterday morning he was reading, and I gave him a hint on how to pronounce a French word that he used. But do you suppose he was willing to admit that I knew more about it than he did?"

"I suppose not."

"No; he sat there, right at my own table, and argued with me for twenty minutes trying to show that I didn't know what I was talking about. Such people make me weary."

"Why didn't you get a French dictionary and prove to him that he was wrong?"

"Oh, I looked it up yesterday and found that I was mistaken myself; but what makes me mad is the fact that he was so positive about it."

The dinner party consisted of fourteen stomachs and two very interesting brains.—N. Y. "Life."

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I go out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone" fifty times. On the other side was written "I have went home."

Mrs. Durand's Backrobe.

MY wife's brother, seven years old, was surely in France with his mother (said Mr. Leroy Durand of the St. Maurice Club), for we had received a cablegram on their arrival, but his voice seemed to be screaming on the shore of Lake Pashegouki, in the St. Maurice Wilderness of Quebec. That scream first reached our ears as we paddled around a bluff and lost hearing of the cascades. My wife, kneeling in the bow of our small canoe, stopped her paddle midway in the act of dipping it and turned her eyes about to me. They are always big, as you know, but they were twice as big then. That was the first time I had seen her look scared, and we had hunted together, east and west, north and south, for five years past. When we left New York two weeks earlier the voice of her little brother in a delirium of pain seemed still sounding in her ears, she told me, although he was so far convalescent as to have sailed on the "Etruria" a fortnight before we left for Quebec.

"Did you hear anything?" she asked me now.

"It was some tree creaking." I was trying to reassure her.

"Nonsense! There's no wind."

In fact, the lake was so calm that the up-side-down shores were as distinct as the right-side-up ones, except where trout wallowed in the mirror or a darting kingfisher touched it with spreading circles. White clouds were as fleecy in the lake as in the blue above us, and a perfect silence seemed to hold all the void between the counterparts, while our canoe ran on with a lessening gurgle as we listened for more than twenty seconds. Then the childlike, the almost infantile screams came again, seeming to reach from the far opposite shore by force of some poignant emotional quality of agonized weakness. They ended with a short note like a wail choked off by faintness or despair.

My wife knows the woods, and now she said, "It must be a young bear—a yearling—in a trap."

"Exactly. Chief Josef."

She took to paddling without a reply. She herself had given Chief Josef the order for a backrobe.

On we went at a faster stroke than she usually sets, straight for the bluff of the screams. For intervals of about a minute they lingered in our ears, and then spread through the blue.

"Come right along up and set him free," said my wife, as she landed.

"And what will his teeth and claws be doing while I'm springing the trap open?" I asked, when I had made the canoe secure.

"Then come and put him out of his pain."

"Certainly, my dear. I'll go. But you'll stay here in the canoe. It won't do you any good to see that bear."

"It might," she said, with self-reproach. "But, anyway, I'll never let a trap be set on my account again. Come!"

"But the old she bear may be up there, and you didn't bring your gun."

"Go up at once!" said my wife, who had never imagined that a man with a magazine rifle could get into serious trouble with bears.

So up I went; and as my wife always obeys my wishes when I'm not there, she got back into the canoe and pushed off a few yards to be ready, as I told her, in case I might "find bears too plenty on the hill."

But there was only the one, a young bear, as my wife had guessed—not a cub, not an infant, but a child—one of about seventeen or eighteen months. I wish I could quite forget that picture of despondency.

He was caught by the right fore-paw; he had dragged the trap till the clog caught between two small trees; then he had pulled the trap back and forth and round and round till the earth was worn bare of grass and twigs and the little bushes within his reach were stripped of bark. His mouth was down, biting gingerly at the twisted leg and muttering most piteously, as if that way of getting free were too unendurable. Then, as the crescendo of wailing screams began once more, his head was raised toward the sky as if the creature were veritably appealing to the Eternal Judge between man and beast.

At that instant I fired, and he sank down in death with a sense of relief, I do believe. He did not struggle in the least, so much had his strength been exhausted by the long ordeal. His trapped leg I found to be broken and twisted as a towel is twisted in wringing it; the edges of the bone had torn the muscles and tendons to a fibrous pulp.

I went back to the canoe, told my wife, "The bear was a yearling," and had no question from her.

On the way to camp we passed the Montagnais wigwams, and I stopped to tell Chief Josef of shooting his bear.

"Dass good t'ing," said Josef. "I glad you kill 'eem. He's not big 'nough for mek good robe for de lady sleigh, but he's good maybe two dollar. Me, I hain' had no lucky wit bear since de lady is tol' me for trap some good skin. Todder day, what you t'ink? I'll find in one udder trap great big paw what de moore bear he's twist off, or bite off, maybe—anyhow, he's got away. Here's dat paw, lady," and he took the hideous relic from behind one of his wigwam poles and offered it to my wife.

She turned away, hit hard, and so pale that I put my arm around her to help her down to the canoe. Without a word we started—there seemed nothing to say. But when we had paddled a mile she stopped the stroke and turned her head over her shoulder with, "Leroy, did you understand about trapping before?"

"I didn't realize what it meant to the animals."

"I'm glad you didn't—or I shouldn't like to think I'd married you," she said, in a conclusive tone.

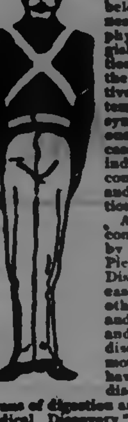
Anecdotal.

George Ade, the Chicago man who writes the "Fables in Slang," hails from Indiana, which he has said is a State which a man "should never go back on—or to." The other night he met an Indiana woman who asked him if he had ever noticed how many bright people come from Indiana. "Yes," he replied, "and the brighter they are the quicker they come."

ATTENTION



To physical warnings will often prevent a serious illness. When there are oppressive fullness after eating, bitter risings, belching, headache, dizziness, nervousness, with physical and mental sluggishness, prompt attention should be given to the condition of the digestive and nutritive systems. Not all these symptoms will occur at once or in any single case, but any one of them indicates a disordered condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition.

A prompt cure of these conditions will be effected by the timely use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It heals diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, perfectly and permanently. Many diseases, seemingly remote from the stomach, have their origin in a diseased condition of the organs of digestion and nutrition. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures through the stomach diseases which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and hence diseases of liver, lungs, heart and other organs are cured by use of the "Discovery." It contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, or other narcotic. It is a true temperance medicine.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing else "just as good."

"I was a total wreck—could not sleep or eat," writes Mr. J. O. Beers, of Berryman, Crawford Co., Mo. "For two years I tried medicine from doctors but received very little benefit. I lost flesh and strength, was not able to do a good day's work. I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and when I had taken one bottle I could sleep and my appetite was wonderfully improved. I have taken five bottles and am still improving."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation by curing the cause. They do not beget the pill habit.

A story of a "joke" played in Vienna on Mascagni, the composer, who is soon to visit the United States, is going the round of the newspapers in Italy, where it has created an extremely bad impression. The distinguished Italian was the guest of honor at a soiree given by the theatrical artists of the Austrian capital, and expressed regret that he was unable either to speak or understand German, whereupon an actor of comic parts arose and addressed him very solemnly, saying: "Most illustrious maestro, you have given to the world 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' which is a musical freak." At this point Mascagni also rose, and warmly shook the orator's hand. "You have no other talent than that of self-advertisement." Another effusion on the part of the composer. "In a word, you are merely a genial sausage." Prolonged applause, at which Mascagni could scarcely master his emotion.

Adelina Patti is, as all the world knows, one of the most charitable women in the world, and nothing pleases her more than to do a good turn "on the quiet," as she herself laughingly puts it. Last winter she was staying for a few days in an isolated village at the extreme end of Yorkshire. To kill the monotony of the place, the great singer went one night to a concert got up in aid of a certain village institution. Not half the performers turned up. Seeing the difficulty in which the chairman and committee were placed, Madame Patti (incognito, of course) offered to oblige them with a song or two if they cared about it. After she had rendered, in her own glorious way, three of her sweetest ballads, the chairman approached her, and, in solemn tones, thanked her: "Well, Miss, you've done uncommon well; and, although 'Arry 'Ock, the juggler, who thinks nowt of takin' 'old of 'ot pokers and a-swallowin' needles, couldn't turn up, yet you've pleased us very considerable, Miss!"

Colonel Osio was the present King of Italy's "governor" for very many years, when, as Prince of Naples, his charge was a delicate lad. Colonel Osio's strict regime has been very severely criticised, but that the King remembers him with respect, if not with affection, is proved by his having conferred the hereditary title of count upon him on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Yolanda. One day a request came from a well-known personage for the young prince's autograph, to be added to a collection containing that of his grandfather and his father. The prince was about to comply, when the colonel said, sharply: "Certainly not; what value has the signature of an insignificant boy who does not even know how to write properly?" For some act of disobedience a little later the prince was brought before his "governor," who exclaimed: "If I were the King I would cut off your head." "And I will cut off yours when I am king," defiantly replied the lad. His punishment is unrecorded, but, instead of cutting off his tyrant's head when that day came, he has ennobled him.

During the famous Douglas and Lincoln debate and subsequent campaigns the point was frequently brought out by the supporters of "the Little Giant" that Mr. Lincoln had served only a single term in Congress, but that Senator Douglas had enjoyed for years a national reputation. This point, says a writer in "Lippincott's," was urged in a heated discussion between an ardent supporter of Douglas and a German voter who favored Lincoln. Finally the former, thinking to overwhelm his opponent, said: "Who is this Lincoln, anyhow? Nobody ever heard of him until Senator Douglas brought him into notice by holding a joint debate with him. Senator Douglas, on the other hand, is a great statesman. Why, he has had his eye on the Presidential chair for the last ten years!" "Vot is dot you say?" was the reply. "You say Meester Douglas have hat his eye on der President chair for ten years?" "Yes, that is just what I said." "Vell, you shoost tell Meester Douglas if he vill keep his eye on dot chair shoost a liddle vile longer he vill see old Abe Lincoln sitting down in it." This closed the debate, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

His Impression.

"Do you believe that college-bred women make good wives?"

"I don't think going to college makes the slightest difference," answered Mr. Meekton. "You couldn't keep a woman from assuming a position of superior knowledge by merely not sending her to school."—Washington "Star."

One of his Majesty's inspectors stood before a class of seven-year-old boys. The subject of examination was Euclid. After failing several times to draw from the class the definition of parallel lines, he drew, by way of illustration, on the wall.

"Yes, sir," said the pick of the class.

"When?"

"If you draw them right around the room."—London Answers.

"I don't know," she replied.

The French were so much interested in Mr. Kipling's observations on sportsmen that the poem has been translated into French and published in some of the Paris newspapers. Le Temps renders the famous lines, "with the flannelled fools at the wicket or the muddied oafs at the goals," as follows:—

"A void les imbeciles en complete de flanelle qui jouent au cricket.

"Et les cretins souillies de boue qui jouent au football.

He was a stranger cycling through the highly intellectual City of Oxford. You could tell it from the cautious manner with which he picked his way down the principal street.

It was evening. A gentleman approached the cyclist.

"Sir," said he, "your beacon has ceased its functions."

"Sir?"

"Your illuminator, I say, is shrouded in unmitigated oblivion."

"Really, but I don't quite——"

"The effulgence of your radiator has evanesced."

"My dear fellow, I——"

"The transversal ether oscillations in your incandescer have been discontinued."

Just then an unsophisticated little country [illegible] shouted across the way:

"Hey, mister, yer lamp is out!"

Max O'Rell on "Discontent."

MAX O'RELL never neglects to say a good word for the ladies whenever opportunity serves. At the same time, he does not shut his eyes to their faults, but is only "a little blind," as witness what he says about "The Discontented Woman":

"We all know that woman, not unkind, not exactly sour, but sad, depressed and depressing, who is well off and might enjoy life, but who looks as if there was not one pleasure left in the world to make it worth living in.

"She may feel ever so well, she will never confess it. She hates to be told that she looks well. She thinks you are wanting in sympathy. She loves to be pitied, and has no objection to being called 'Poor Mrs. A.!' Yet she is very susceptible, and resents any attentions that are paid to other people in her presence. She was jealous of her sisters when a girl; now she is jealous of her children, jealous of the ladies who call, jealous of her husband's secretary or typewriter. She has no reason for being jealous, she knows it, but it is a habit, and she likes to keep her hand at it.

"She is fond of calling on sick people, and, as she has had every mortal disease or indisposition you care to name, she gives the people whom she visits her own experience of their disease, and they have to listen to all the minute details of the sufferings she had to go through. She hopes that you will get better.

"Meanwhile she tells you of all the people she knows who have died of the disease with which you are afflicted, but reassures you by stating that some people have been known to recover.

"She is the town-crier of bad news. If there is a sad event of which she hears early, she immediately orders a carriage and goes on a round of visits to announce it. When her friends see her arrive unexpectedly they look at each other and say, 'We shall hear some bad news.'

"She is a prophet of ill-omen. She loves the sad, and revels in it. It is her life. She has not a cheerful feature about her. She is a hair in your soup, a crumb in your bed, an unmitigated bore.

"She never enjoys what she has, but spends her life regretting what she does not or cannot have. If she lose a £4 bill and her husband says to her, 'Never mind; here's another,' she goes on sighing and whining, for she thinks that if she had not lost that £4 she would now have £8.

"There is no cheering her up, and when a real misfortune befalls her you feel inclined to exclaim: 'Good, serves her right, now she has something worth crying over.' But this seldom happens, if ever, for it is a remarkable fact that this kind of woman is the very one who never has real troubles—except those of her own manufacture."

Alleged Canadian Jests.

A WRITER in the "Pall Mall Gazette," who claims to have had much to do with colonial newspapers and colonial letters, has collected therefrom a number of what he chooses to call "Sea-borne Jests." Canada seems to supply him with the most material, but either he has evolved most of his Canadian jokes out of his own inner consciousness or else they have been curiously refracted in passing through the prism of an English mind. In any event some of these would never be looked upon as jokes in this country. For example: "Why does Dicky Ducky want to be M. P.?" asks the jester of a far Western paper. "Because he now has one P too many," is the answer, which, as the "Pall Mall" writer says, it is tolerably certain made dozens of big men in miners' boots laugh till they bent like jack-knives when that inscrutable conundrum was first let loose in British Columbia. Here are some better attempts—the alleged sayings of a ten-year-old boy, who is credited to Toronto:

I.—Teacher's question: "What is grass?" Boy's answer: "What you keep off."

II.—Question: "Who was the first man?" Answer: "Wolfe!" Reply: "Great Snakes! It was Adam!" Repartee: "Oh, well, if you count in foreigners!"

III.—Question: "What were the Greek marriage customs?" Answer: Ev'ry man had one wife, which they called monotony!"

Another story told by the "Pall Mall" writer is that of a little doctor's from a reserve in the North-West Territories. The doctor in question was a mooney (Anglice, "green") graduate from the East, and had just been appointed to look after the health of the Indians dwelling there or thereabouts. On his first visit to the reserve he found that everybody was suffering from a mysterious disease, the symptoms of which were very obscure. All the patients got a box of bread pills or a bottle of colored water—it is best to be on the safe side, and faith has cured many a mysterious epidemic among Indians—with the exception of the last comer. "This Indian," said he, laying his hand on his stomach, which was a chief's, "when he drink cold water feel cold pain here." Then the agent remembered that the doctor's predecessor had prescribed a bottle of good port in the hard case of an old squaw suffering from "the grippe," complicated with no-four-for-six-months. We confess we fail to see much of a joke lurking in this story.

Too Bad.

"YES, I have watched her career with a great deal of interest."

"She is a brilliant woman, isn't she?"

"She has been. I can't say that she is. As a girl she developed remarkable precocity. It was not so much in her literary proficiency that she displayed her qualities, as in that wide sense of [illegible] in the broad conceptions she so early entertained of the crying needs of our social system. When only eleven, she had written a striking paper on sex relationships. At thirteen, her monograph of "The True Prerogatives of Woman" had attracted wide attention. At fifteen, her essay on "The Silent Vote" marked an epoch, and when, at twenty-two, she delivered her "Motherhood of Man," it became evident that a new force had risen. What a pity that now, after all, her life should be a failure."

"But how can it be a failure? What has she done?"

"Why, the miserable thing has gone off and got married!"—New York "Life."

Might be Worse.

One day, Mackintosh, having vexed him by calling O'Coigly "a rascal," Parr immediately rejoined, "Yes, Jamie, he was a bad man, but he might have been worse; he was an Irishman, but he might have been a Scotchman; he was a priest, but he might have been a lawyer; he was a republican, but he might have been an apostate."

Curious Bits of News.

In London on New Year's Day, a burglar, having carried off five thousand pounds' worth of jewelry, all the silver, and a large sum in ready money, pinned a note on the hearth-rug wishing its rightful owners "Many happy returns of the day."

The London "Chronicle" quotes a naval officer as saying that during the War of 1812 the British Admiralty sent out to Kingston (Ont.), where the British fleet was then stationed, a large number of water-casks, in the belief that Lake Ontario was a salt water lake.

A coal-hod in the window of a New York clothier is filled with bills and coin, in which is thrust a coal shovel. Beside it is a small stove, so arranged with a red incandescent light that it appears to contain a brick fire. Near them is the legend: "We are just burning money on these $12 suits, but we need the room, and they must be moved by February 1."

In an article on "Life in Labrador" in "Blackwood's Magazine," Mr. W. T. Grenfell vouches for the following: "A friend who had a young live black bear as a pet buried it in November in a barrel under the snow. Twice he dug it up in the winter, but it showed no signs of wishing to move, so he permitted it to sleep on till May."

Odors as an assistance to diagnosis is a new branch of medical science. The "Medical Record" is authority for the statement that the odor of new mown hay is an indication of pyaemia, typhus is indicated by an ammonia smell, jaundice by a musky one, yellow fever by the odor of a gun-barrel, hysteria by a suggestion of violets or pineapples, intermittent fever by the smell of fresh-baked brown bread, and measles by one like fresh-picked feathers. It seems somewhat incongruous that the smell of the plague resembles honey.

The newest of queer religious sects is the "Association of Christian Brethren," which, according to the New York "Sun," is "sailing down the Mississippi in a modern imitation of the Ark to tell people that the millennium is surely coming in 1941." "Megiddo" is the name of the boat, and nearly one hundred persons, men, women and children, are aboard of her. The president of the sect is L. T. Nichols of Minneapolis, and he launched his craft at the end of November. He holds himself mainly responsible for the support of his followers, who are planning to live on the "Megiddo" until the day of the millennium.

Men sometimes dream of enormous wealth stored deep in the earth, below the reach of miners, but according to the statements of Professor C. R. Van Hise at the Denver meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, there is little or no ground to believe that valuable metallic deposits lie very deep in the earth's crust. Such deposits, he said, are made by underground waters, and owing to the pressure on the rocks at great depths, the waters are confined to a shell near the surface. With few exceptions, ore deposits become too lean to repay working below 2,000 feet. Nine mines in ten, taking the world as a whole, are poorer in the second thousand feet than in the first thousand, and poorer yet in the third thousand than in the second.

An article in "Ainslee's Magazine" contains this passage: "The [illegible] has never seen, and in no other part of the world is there now to be seen anything like America's [illegible] by the conditions of to-day, when more than three hundred New York establishments are engaged solely in the importation of precious stones, when agents of American dealers are searching Europe for the white gem and hopelessly endeavoring to supply American appeals for rubies and emeralds, and when six thousand men in South Africa are toiling to obtain diamonds more than half of which are to add to the beauty and happiness of the American woman. It is she that has caused the United States to become the greatest diamond market in the world. For her we have imported in a single year $20,000,000 worth of precious stones; for her, at one period we smuggled them in at the rate of $7,000,000 a year; for her we annually buy something like $12,000,000 worth of diamonds, and thus, for her sake, heartlessly leave, of the world's total output of diamonds, only some $8,000,000 worth to satisfy the vanity of all the rest of the women on earth."

When Crispi Was Lucky in Being Penniless.

THE late Francesco Crispi, the great Italian statesman, once escaped arrest as a revolutionist because he did not have a sou wherewith to buy a candle. The story is told in the "Courrier des Etats-Unis" (New York):

"On January 14, 1858, Francesco Crispi, the recently deceased Italian statesman, then a political refugee in Paris, received from an Italian friend connected with the Paris opera two gallery tickets for the performance of that evening, which the Emperor and Empress were expected to attend. Crispi and his wife were on the point of starting for the theater when the latter exclaimed: 'Francesco, where shall we get a candle?' They were in such destitution that they had neither candles nor matches, nor yet the wherewithal to buy them. Going to the opera would involve groping for their room at midnight and going to bed in total darkness. Too proud to confess their condition and to borrow a few sous they regretfully denied themselves the promised treat, remained in their room, and retired before the twilight had faded.

"On the following morning they learned of Orsini's attack on the Emperor, the police raids, and the arrest of all Italian revolutionists found in or near the theater. If Crispi had been in the house he would certainly have been among the first arrested, for he was known as an ardent disciple of Mazzini.

"The possession of a tallow candle and a match might have altered completely not only his own destiny, but also that of Italy!"

The Revolution in English Character.

IT is the opinion of Mr. Bernard Shaw, as expressed in a characteristic preface to a late volume of his plays, that the nature of the English people has, within the past ten years, undergone certain conspicuous modifications. Excitability—"theatricality" is his own word for it—Mr. Shaw believes to have been steadily mounting in force among the English, usually so solid and stolid; and this he ascribes to the pronounced romanticism of taste developed among them by the literature, the books and plays, of the past five years; a taste which has caused them to lose their true sense of the realities, with all the steadying effects thereof.

It will not be disputed that the special style of literature in vogue during a period leaves its impress upon it, nor will it be gainsaid that the demands and tastes of the period in turn determine the essential nature of its literary supply. We are hearing it said on all sides now that popular education accounts for the love of the novel of adventure. Popular education creates an enlarged reading public, but one which does not wish to have the realities of life laid before it; which, indeed, in many cases, reads, or goes to the play, just to escape reality. If one accept this explanation of certain present phenomena it is only going a step farther to find in all democratically organized, popularly educated societies an inherent inclination toward romanticism. As no countries have carried the modern experiment so far as the English-speaking countries, we ought not to be surprised to see a strong bent toward the romantic attitude showing itself, in many directions, in an English or American public; the romantic attitude here meaning any attitude betraying absence of a full perception of the realities, or disinclination to look at them.

Out of all this we seem to draw three propositions: that democracy appears to presuppose a certain sort of popular education, that without that education there would be no democracy, and yet that that education is calculated to destroy the sense of the realities. Now how is this? The very plea made for the education which, more and more, is prevailing against the classical education, is just this—that it cultivates the true perception of real things. It is a "practical" education for that precise reason, say its advocates. Why, then, asks the writer of "The Point of View" in "Scribner's Magazine," should this same generation manifest so much liking for the romantic fiction, the romantic plays, which are a means of getting away from the real conditions of existence? He proceeds to answer this question as follows: "It may very probably be that this liking is a taste of the moment, without ulterior connections or deeper significances. And, indeed, it seems to have been too much overlooked by some writers who have the love for the novel of adventure, that it is by no means the first time in the world that romance has been in high favor. It is none the less true that this subject does suggest another of far greater moment, which is the question what the "popular" education ought to be, and whether the democratic state of modern man really needs exactly that form of it which is now so insisted upon as essential to its maintenance and well-being. To perceive the realities in the high sense, and in that sense be willing to abide by them, is never, at any time, the portion of more than the few. But general education goes forward, very properly, on the assumption that all may be made in some degree to know the life to which they belong, to realize it. Realization comes, however, only in part through the development of practical efficiency. It comes also through the unfolding of the spiritual nature, the growth of moral vision, the dreams of the imagination—to none of which is the 'classical' education a stranger."

Pleasing Kind of Mal de Mer.

News comes from Honolulu that the transport "Thomas," which reached there on August 1, having on board three hundred male and one hundred female teachers, en route for the Philippines to engage in educational service under the Taft Commission, developed a veritable matrimonial epidemic. The young men and women on board represented almost every State of the Union. After the transport left San Francisco friendships were formed which soon ripened into love, and the day prior to the arrival at Honolulu Captain Buford found that thirty couples desired the nuptial knot tied. He refused to permit the ceremony on board the vessel, and the next day a clergyman at Honolulu made the thirty pairs happy by uniting them in matrimony. Prior to the sailing of the transport from Honolulu several other cases were reported. The departure from New York last week of the fifty-four Cuban girls and twenty-four men, who have been students at the summer school of Harvard University, developed the fact that they, too, had been victims of Cupid's darts, although their courtships have only reached the engagement stage. Most of the Cuban men are returning engaged and several Harvard students and professors are said to have lost their hearts to the girls from the South. Five of the ladies took home with them diamond engagement rings.

A Humane Pater.

One reads so frequently of the paternal boot as applied to the undesirable youthful suitor that it is a pleasure to chronicle the more humane method adopted by a wealthy Glasgow merchant for choking off a "follower" of his daughter. The girl was very young, as was the follower, but nevertheless he called formally on the object of his affections. The merchant and his wife entered the room, the latter bearing a glass of milk and a huge slice of bread spread with butter and jam. "Now, dear, run away to bed," said the kindly mother to her daughter; "it's time that all good girls should be in bed." Then the Glasgow merchant addressed the astonished young man: "Now, youngster, you drink that glass of milk, and take that slice of bread and jam to eat on the road home—and hurry, for your mother must be anxious about your being out so late by yourself." The young man did not call again.

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child, you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best!"

A Comic Opera Strike.

THERE is, as a rule, little that is humorous in a strike. But a recent strike in Columbus, O., is so humorous and at the same time so extraordinary that it seems almost incredible. It sounds as if it took place in Topsy-turvydom instead of in the United States of America. It would make a good libretto for one of Gilbert and Sullivan's crazy operettas.

This is the story of the Columbus strike: C. M. Jones is editor and proprietor of the Columbus "Press-Post"—that is, he was. The paper is now apparently being edited by almost everybody but the editor. It seems that Editor Jones got into trouble with his city editor. The city editor is a member of the Newspaper Writers' Union. Now it has long been a grievance among newspaper reporters that they are not so well treated as the printers, because they have no union. On the other hand, the printers have a union which is the most powerful and prosperous trade union in the country, with the possible exception of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. The reporters have attempted to form unions. But they are like ropes of sand. So they finally decided to organize under the wing of the printers.

In every union printing-office there is a body called "the chapel," presided over by a "father." The foreman represents the employer, the father of the chapel represents the printers. Whenever there is a question at issue, the printers invariably take their orders from the father of the chapel instead of the foreman. So in the office of the "Press-Post," the reporters organized as a newspaper writers' union under the protection of the printers' chapel.

Editor Jones found City Editor Marshall unsatisfactory for various reasons. First, he had criticised some court house officials who were friends of Editor Jones; and, second, he had been "scooped" by the other Columbus papers on a railroad wreck; they had run the wreck with "scare-heads," and City Editor Marshall had not run it at all. Therefore Editor Jones requested Marshall to resign. Marshall refused. Editor Jones then informed him that he was discharged. Marshall at once ordered a strike, and Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2 walked out. Editor Jones attempted to parley with them, and offered to secure another editor. They refused to return unless Marshall was replaced. Thereupon Editor Jones broke off negotiations, got ten young men from the State University as reporters, edited their copy himself, and it was sent to the composing-room. The father of the chapel walked to the imposing-stone, rapped thereon with a mallet, a chapel meeting was held, and the printers stopped their work. The father of the chapel informed Editor Jones that if the non-union copy was not removed from the hook the printers would strike. Editor Jones took back his non-union copy. That day the "Press-Post" did not come out. The next day Editor Jones sent the paper to press without any local news, filling it up with narratives of the low-necked gowns at Newport, snake stories, accounts of the shocking attire worn by the young women at Long Branch, and other refined and pleasing miscellany of the kind usually found in the Sunday supplements of great daily newspapers. Unfortunately, Editor Jones, feeling somewhat embittered over the situation, wrote with his red right hand a savage editorial on the labor question and sent it in to the printers. Not being local news, and being written by the editor and proprietor, it might be supposed that they would print it. Not so. Again the unfortunate editor was informed that he must withdraw his non-union copy, or the printers would strike. Editor Jones withdrew his editorial.

At last accounts the "Press-Post" is still running without the local news, and Editor Jones is beseeching President Lynch of the International Typographical Union to devise some means by which he may be allowed to get his paper out.

So the question may be asked, Who is editing the Columbus "Press-Post?" Is it the proprietor, Editor Jones? or is it the discharged employee, City Editor Marshall? or is it the Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2? or is it the father of the Columbus printers' chapel? or is it the president of the International Typographical Union of North America?

Expenses of Society Life in New York.

Mothers of daughters having social aspirations find it very expensive to meet all the social requirements and demands made upon them, as is shown in proceedings in the Supreme Court of New York brought by Mrs. Kate Shippen Roosevelt to have the yearly allowance of her daughter, Dorothy Quincy Roosevelt, increased from $1,500 to $3,000. Even the larger sum will not by any means be sufficient to keep this young lady in good society and meet all the various expenses incidental thereto; but Mrs. Roosevelt says she is willing to pay the additional expenses, which will amount to several thousand dollars annually, out of her own pocket. Miss Roosevelt inherited $100,000 from a deceased uncle, which is being held in trust for her until she becomes of age next year. Inasmuch as her income amounts to $5,000 and Mrs. Roosevelt proved to the satisfaction of William J. A. McKim, the referee, that $3,000 is only a reasonable amount for a young woman of good social position, the increased allowance was granted. In giving her testimony, Mrs. Roosevelt said she had six tutors for her daughter, who, among other things, was being educated in German, French, and Italian. She was also being instructed in elocution, belongs to several social dancing-classes, is a member of golf, tennis and bathing clubs, is fond of riding, and has an English governess. Mrs. Roosevelt added that the needs of her daughter were increasing year by year, that she found entertaining and traveling abroad added greatly to the cost of living, that one of her daughter's greatest incidental expenses was for hire of cabs going to and from social functions, and that a great deal of the social life which young ladies in New York see is where gentlemen are not invited, such as teas, receptions, etc.

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with us—
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, as black as soot, it strews
The streets and pavements where we go.
We tramp it under foot and hiss—
"'Tis not the snow we used to know!"

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 11, 1902.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The stores of the 57th regiment are being inspected by Lieut.-Col. Hemming, of Kingston.

—Peterborough talent took part in the entertainment in connection with the new church at Cordova, last night.

—An important meeting of the Young Men's Guild, of St. Luke's church, took place last night.

—The 57th Band will hold a matinee in the Town Hall on the afternoon of Good Friday.

—The bricklayers will soon have completed their labors at the cereal works.

—The Grand Central Hotel property has been turned into stores, which have all been rented.

—The ice on the back lakes appears to be as firm as ever. Teams are crossing as usual.

—Mr. Richard Hall incidentally mentioned to a couple of citizens the other day that he couldn't very well get along without The Times. It was as necessary as his breakfast to him.

—The action to unseat Mayor Ingl., of Lindsay, and four aldermen, was argued at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, a few days ago. Lindsay is having a peck of trouble these days.

—Sergeant LeBar will address Mr. S. R. Armstrong's class of young men at the George Street Sunday school, on Sunday afternoon next, on his experiences in South Africa.

—All the latest styles in mounts and finish are to be found at Whiten's photo studio. When you want a large crayon made from a small picture take it to Whiten's. Studio, 166 Hunter street.

—At a late meeting of the Lindsay Board of Trade, a resolution was passed asking the government to have the dredge taken from Peterborough waters and put to work on Lindsay River.

—We are now making a house to house canvass of the town for subscribers to The Times. There are comparatively few people who do not now read The Times, but those who do not, will be asked, metaphorically speaking, to come in out of the wet.

Gratefully Acknowledged.

The many friends who have shown their kind sympathy in our great sorrow will please accept the grateful acknowledgments of the Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Thompson and family through this medium.

BIRTHS.

TORRANCE.—At 251 Rubidge street, on the 9th of March, 1902, the wife of Rev. Dr. Torrance, of a daughter.

RICHARDSON.—At No. 10 Gilmour St. of Mr. G. B. Richardson, of a son.

McFARLANE.—At Peterborough, March 10th, 1902, to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. McFarlane, Gilmour street, a daughter.

Funeral Notice

The members of Diamond L. O. L. No. 90, are requested to meet at the Orange Hall, Simcoe street, the afternoon at 1.30 o'clock, p.m., to attend the funeral of their late Brother, Thomas Brown. Members of Sister Lodges cordially invited. By order, W. R. G. Armstrong, Secretary.

The First Contingent

Sergt. LeBar, who was a member of the first contingent to South Africa, has written a book entitled "From Canada to South Africa, or "Everyday Life of the First Contingent." It has not yet been published, but it is proposed to place it in the printers' hands at once. The book is cleverly written, and should sell like hot cakes.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Powell are in Cobourg attending the diamond wedding of Mr. Powell's father.

—Miss Maggie Storer, Lindsay, is in town, the guest of the Misses Hutchison, Bolivar street.

—The many friends of Mr. James Wood, of Otonabee, who had the misfortune to meet with an accident that necessitated the amputation of his arm at Nicholls Hospital two weeks ago, will be pleased to know that he is able to be about again. He will be the guest of Mr. Felix Brownscombe for a few days.

Charmingly Entertained.

The visiting hockey team from Cobourg, who are being chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Loust, together with the local lady hockeyists and a number of lady and gentlemen friends, were charmingly entertained yesterday afternoon by Mrs. J. B. Stratton to a dainty five o'clock tea. About 35 sat down at the table. Mrs. Stratton was assisted by Mrs. Ormond and Mrs. Lacy. Mr. J. Shipway was present and delighted the party with a number of choice selections.

Nervous and Sleepless

Two horrors crowded into one life, the product of poor digestion, and the poisons that are thereby formed within the body. There's just one method of cure for this terrible condition—plenty of food, but mind, food properly digested. That's the difficulty—the digestive power of the stomach must be improved. Rich, red blood formed, strength given to the organs to drive out poisons; then comes strength, vigor and endurance. Ferrozone does all this and more; it makes sick people well; weak people strong. Sow Ferrozone and you reap health. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

Gets in Its Work.

That the great masses of the people prefer a paper published in the morning to an evening sheet, is becoming more and more apparent every day. When an accident happened to a large newspaper presses a few days ago, and the paper was an hour late, dozens of enquiries came in from anxious readers of the paper. One man, who rang us up by phone, said that he couldn't eat his breakfast without his Times. Thus it is that this great family journal not only provides food for the brain, but also gets in its work on the stomach as well.

Malt Breakfast Food

Is Invaluable for Invalids and Convalescents

Not only is Malt Breakfast Food of great value as a food for invalids and convalescents, when prepared as a porridge, but it makes the most nutritious and appetising gruel and drinks.

MALT BREAKFAST FOOD GRUEL

Take one cup of Malt Breakfast Food and stir into four cups of boiling water. Cook for one half hour, then strain. Add salt to taste. Milk or cream can be added when desired. This gruel makes a very valuable food for invalids, convalescents and young children. The weakest stomach will tolerate it and it is very nutritious.

A DRINK FOR INVALIDS.

A very excellent and nourishing drink can be made in the same manner as the gruel, but take twice the quantity of water. A few drops of lemon juice will add a refreshing taste that will often be appreciated. Ask your grocer for Malt Breakfast Food.

MARK ST. CHURCH NOTES

—The pulpit was occupied on Sunday by the pastor, Rev. C. L. Thompson, who preached two forceful, earnest, gospel sermons. The morning text was John 1: 46. The evening service was largely attended.

—The Epworth League met last evening at 7.30 instead of 8 o'clock, the usual hour. Miss Nellie Wood presented the topic.

—Special services will be held on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, in the basement, beginning at half past seven. These meetings are increasing in interest and attendance. Everyone is invited to be present.

—The Sabbath school has recently purchased an excellent series of maps for use in the school, which will add much to its effectiveness.

—The usual thank-offering will be taken in this church on Easter Sunday.

SPRINGTIME AND ITS ENJOYMENT DEPEND UPON YOUR CONDITION OF HEALTH

Paine's Celery Compound

WILL REMOVE YOUR BURDEN OF DISEASE AND SUFFERING AND MAKE LIFE WORTH LIVING

In springtime thousands resort to some remedy to purify the blood and to arouse its circulation with the view of banishing diseases common at this season.

Those whose intelligence directs them to make use of Paine's Celery Compound, know just what to expect in results when the great medicine is used. They are aware of the fact that their relatives friends and neighbors have used Paine's Celery Compound in the past, and that it has, in every case, proved the ideal invigorator for the rundown, weak and suffering; it has cleansed the blood and caused the life stream to course with vigor and health to every part of the body; it has braced the nerves; it has banished the agonies of rheumatism, neuralgia and dyspepsia, and has triumphed over deadly kidney disease and liver troubles.

In the past, Paine's Celery Compound as a spring medicine has saved thousands of precious lives; to-day, its work is greater, more widespread and more commanding than ever before, because people know it better and use it more freely. Headaches, sideaches, backaches, heart troubles, sleeplessness, cold chills, night sweats and fevers are quickly banished when Paine's Celery Compound is faithfully used. No other spring medicine keeps the confidence of so many earnest men and women. Paine's Celery Compound has compelled the admiration of the medical world, and will hold its high position as the surest, best and most effective health-giver. One or two bottles used at this time will work wonders for all who are weak, rundown, nervous and out of sorts.

PETERBOROUGH WINS THE CHAMPIONSHIP

By Defeating Galt on The Round by 7 to 6

Boys to Receive a Warm Reception.

Town Runs High with Excitement When the News was Received

For we've put it over Galt,
And we've collared the cup;
Say, old woman,
Is your rhubarb up!

This was the song from a thousand throats when the good news arrived last night that our hockey aggregation had tied the Galt team on their own ice, and had won the intermediate O. H. A. championship by a total score of 7-6.

To say that the feeling ran high with the crowds who thronged George street, is to faintly express the outburst that followed the announcement of the score. In a few moments, large bon-fires were made on George street at Charlotte, Hunter and Brock sts, and for two hours they blazed forth in honor of the glorious victory.

The result of the game is most gratifying, and is a splendid conclusion to the unbroken line of victory attending the team throughout the season. It is made especially so, because of the extreme confidence of victory expressed by Galt after the game here on Friday last.

The total games scored during the season by the home team number 54, as against 25 scored by the several opposing teams. The respective games played, with the scores, were as follows, the score of Peterborough being given first in each instance:

Lindsay, at Lindsay ....4—5
(Lindsay suspended from the O.H.A.)
Port Hope, at Peterborough ...... 6—2
Port Hope at Cobourg ....4—3
R. M. C. at Peterborough ......13—1
R. M. C. at Kingston ....4—2
Newmarket at Peterborough......10—1
Newmarket at Newmarket ....6—3
Galt at Peterborough ....4—3
Galt at Galt...... ....3—3

Thus, it will be seen that Peterborough lost but one game in the season's play.

We cannot too highly commend the action of Mr. J. Alex Culverwell, President of the Peterborough Cricket Club, in sending to Rolly Glover yesterday, the following telegram:

"I will present a ten dollar share of the new Peterborough Hockey Rink Co., to each member of team of seven should they win championship tonight at Galt. Put it up strong, boys, and hold up our good name!

J. ALEX. CULVERWELL,
Pres. Peterborough Cricket Club.

It was expressive of the true sportsmanlike spirit, and showed the confidence which the citizens placed in the ability of the team to win out.

A rousing reception will be accorded the boys on their arrival by the 9 o'clock G. T. R. train this evening.

The following despatch was received by The Times from Galt last night:

Galt March 10.

Before a crowd of nearly two thousand people here to-night, Peterborough and Galt played a tie game in the final match for the O.H.A. intermediate Championship, each team scoring three goals, the game was as closely contested as the score indicates. The ice was in poor condition, but not as bad as was expected under the circumstances. The game started on time and a terrible pace was set, both teams playing with might and main. It took just twenty minutes of fast playing to tally the first goal, and it went to the locals. No further scoring was done in this half, although both teams put forth all their strength. It took a few minutes after the play play started in the second half for the teams to get going. Peterborough stayed well around their goal and drew the Galt defence out, when with a rush the whole forward line of the visitors came down the ice.

R. Armstrong did the trick for them; a minute later he repeated it, scoring from a neat pass by Morgan. Things were looking bad for the locals and half of the second period was now over. Peterborough settled down to play a defence game, but Galt got through it and C. Dietrich scored. In a minute and a half they had scored their third goal, the spectators went wild but their delight was ended shortly when Peterborough got the sixth and last game. This one was, however, disputed by the locals. Morrison had come out of the goal to stop the puck when he was checked hard by Graham, "Dutch" returned with what the referee considered a cross check and he accordingly rang the bell. The puck, however, went into the net but Galt claimed it was not a goal as the bell had rung before it was scored. Schooley, however, allowed it much to the dissatisfaction of the home team and their supporters. Galt made a determined effort to score another goal but could not in the few minutes of play left. When time was up it stood 3 to 3, leaving Peterborough the winners of the round by the narrow margin of 1 goal, they having defeated Galt 4 to 3 in Peterborough on Friday night.

The game was a fast and clean exhibition, no rough play being indulged in by either side.

President, J. Ross Robertson, Secretary, A. H. Beaton, W. A. Buchanan and Francis Nelson of O.H.A. executive were present.

The teams lined up as follows:

Galt		Peterboro.
Morrison,	Goal	Wasson.
Lane	Point	Glover
Tonkin	Cover Point	H. Armstrong
C. Dietrich	Forward	Whitcroft
Hay		Morgan
F. Dietrich		R. Armstrong
Doxton		Graham

Referee,—R. D. Schooley.

The local ladies' hockey team defeated the septette from Cobourg by a score of 8-1, at the Charlotte street rink last night. The game was very exciting, and furnished plenty of amusement for the large crowd of spectators who were present.

POLICE COURT NEWS

Magistrate Dumble had a wage case before him yesterday morning. The claim was for $12.50 and judgment was given for $12 and $2.50 costs.

Thos. Emmanuel, of Prince Edward for having been drunk and disorderly was fined five dollars in court yesterday morning.

NEW LABOR HALL.

The Old Business College Rooms Being Splendidly Fitted Up

The remarkable growth of the labour organizations in Peterborough necessitated more spacious quarters, and the old Business College on Water street is being fitted up. This will make most desirable quarters for the Labour Union. They have purchased from the 57th Band several hundred new chairs which the band brought only a short while ago. The rooms will be lighted with electricity and supplied with all modern lodge room conveniences.

A Scientific Voice Improver

Because of its strengthening influence upon the vocal chords, Catarrhozone cannot be too highly recommended as a wonderful voice improver. It almost instantly removes huskiness or hoarseness, thus insuring clearness and brilliancy of tone. Catarrhozone keeps the mucous surfaces in perfect condition, and its regular use absolutely prevents colds and throat irritation, thereby removing the singer's greatest source of anxiety, unfitness of voice. The most eminent speakers and Prima Donnas would not be without Catarrhozone, and credit in no small degree their uniform strength and brilliancy of tone to its influence. The hard rubber inhaler fits conveniently into a purse or vest pocket, and may be used in the church, theatre, any place or time. Complete outfit $1. Small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

NORTH AMERICAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY'S

Stock and It Will Make You Rich

The company owns 2,480 acres of land located in the Newhall-Acton White Oil Fields of Los Angeles County, California. Our manager, Mr. J. H. Parker, writes us under date of Jan. 15th that they have opened up two oil wells near our property, one being a gusher of white oil just as clear as alcohol, and of 52 degrees gravity. This oil is worth and is selling at $4.00 per barrel at the well, and producing better than 50 barrels per day. Our derrick is up and the machinery purchased; we expect to be drilling in a very short time. We now offer to the public 100,000 shares of this meritorious company's stock at the low price of 10 cents per share, and it is worth a great deal more money at the present time with the showing we have in the property. The demand for this oil is far greater than the supply, which is not so of the black oils of Lower California and Beaumont, Texas, that are a drug upon the market.

Regarding the officers of the company, they are all men of honor and means. There are no salaries paid to any of the officers, not even our General Manager, until our company is put on a paying basis.

INCORPORATION.

The company is capitalized for 1,500,000 shares, the incorporation having been effected under the laws of Wyoming, stock being all common stock, issued absolutely fully paid and forever non-assessable. The incorporation laws of Wyoming are peculiarly favorable to oil enterprises, and the par value of the stock has been fixed at One Cent per share in order to avoid the excessive revenue tax paid on stocks of a high par value.

LIABILITIES.

The company has no debts; all stock is fully paid and non-assessable, there are no stockholders' liabilities, and we have no royalties to pay for any purpose.

OUR LANDS.

The company's lands have been carefully selected by their engineer, Mr. J. H. Parker, who is also Vice President and General Manager, in conjunction with four of the best oil experts, who are well known throughout the state. These experts each unbeknown to the other went over our vast territory to locate a site to sink our first well; their reports are on file in the company's office, and we will be pleased to mail a copy of the same upon application, also maps of the oil fields with our property showing in the red. The directors call special attention to the maps, which have been drawn from actual surveys and personal inspection of the land and is accurate. The company's lands are distinctly shown as well as their relation to other oil lands and the location of oil wells, oil sepages and oil springs. A careful inspection of the map will aid prospective investors to judge of the oil under the company's lands.

The geological formation is perfect, the Anticlinal passing through the entire property and being unbroken by granite formations.

GUARANTEE.

The officers and directors of the company have such great faith in the proposition that they will redeem all stock sold for cash, providing they do not strike oil as designated.

TREASURY STOCK.

The company holds in the treasury over 500,000 shares of treasury stock and some money. The proceeds of sale from the 100,000 shares now offered to the public will be used for the purpose of sinking wells.

REGISTRATION.

The stock is registered with the Colorado Title & Trust Company of Colorado Springs, Colorado, which guarantees any over-issue of stock.

The company would like to employ a few good Fiscal Agents to handle any part of this 100,000 shares of stock, giving them a very liberal commission. We take pleasure in recommending this stock to the good people of Peterborough and vicinity at the very low price of 10 cents per share; considering the condition of the property the stock is worth more money than what we are asking for it.

THE ETHICS OF DYNAMITE AND THE COMING WAR

Will Blow Up England's Ships But Not Her Villages or Towns

A REVOLT MENACES THE CZAR'S DOMINIONS.

Its Growth Due to Political Discontent—Outbreak at the Universities Only Means a Revolution.

Paris, March 11.—The Morning Chronicle having accused Major John MacBride, the Irish Boer officer, recently returned from South Africa, of establishing a branch of Franco-Irish dynamitard in Paris, the latter has said:—

"When we are at war with England —I hope we soon shall be—we shall use dynamite to blow up the ships, but we do not favor its use for the blowing up of bridges or villages or the killing of innocent people.

"Our Franco-Irish organization is to prepare for the coming war. We should feel ashamed of ourselves if we did not do better than the Boers. We, a war-like race of twenty-five millions, scattered if you will, should be able to give a good account of ourselves.

"The Boer war has belittled England in the eyes of the world, and has done more to fan the flame of patriotism in young Irishmen than anything which has occurred for half a century.

"With famine in India, dissatisfaction in Canada, hatred in Malta, and revolution in Ireland, the old British hulk will soon fall to pieces. That the flower of France will be with us I am assured on all sides."

London, March 11.—Profound political discontent is general throughout Russia, and the St. Petersburg Government is alarmed by events, the gravity of which it cannot disguise. In all directions a movement clearly of a revolutionary character is spreading.

In a striking despatch to his paper, the Copenhagen correspondent of the London Daily News says reliable reports have reached the Danish capital that agitation against the Russian administrative methods has broken out even in Siberian provinces, and that the local governors have been driven to suppress all public meetings. Unrest must be indeed widespread and the propaganda of revolution must have been industriously disseminated if such remote districts as Tomsk, Barnaul and Marinsk are affected.

MOTIVE POWER POLITICAL.

It is now plain that the university movements, or "student outbreaks," which paralyse the scientific life of the country—for all scientific life has been virtually suspended in Russia during the last eighteen months—are but a means to an end, a shibboleth if you will, and that the motive power calling them forth is political. The Russian Government at last realises that the concessions made to the students will not arrest the other movements which the student agitations have set on foot.

This latter aspect of the case is the one really important—serious from the point of view of the Czar's administration, encouraging from that of the political reformer. The small minority which constituted the discontented element in 1899, has developed until to-day it includes the whole of Russian society outside of court circles.

UNREST IS WIDESPREAD

"Question peasants, workingmen, students, professors and landed proprietors," says a writer on Russian life in the Deutsche Revue, "and all will declare that the people have had enough of a Government, or rather of an administration, which seems to wish only to multiply trammels and vexations."

Lack of unity of administrative policy and of uniformity in its application aggravates the situation. The comparative liberal methods of M. de Witte clash with the Draconian rule of M. Pobiedonostcheff. The Government with one hand undoes what it has done with the other.

For instance, in a general way, satisfaction has been given to the students, but the retaliatory measures visited upon the workingmen who aided the students are terrible.

DOURO TOWNSHIP PRINTING

The Reeve Apparently Disregards the Instructions of the Council

The Times is in receipt of a letter from a prominent resident of Douro township, regarding the printing contract for 1902. Our correspondent states that Mr. Dennis Moloney, the reeve, was instructed by the Council to call on the Peterborough printers and get their prices. He wants to know if this was done, as the reeve is reported to have boasted that he had placed the contract with the Examiner, presumably for political reasons, without inviting competition.

The Times is pleased to have an opportunity of informing our correspondent as well as the ratepayers of Douro, that Mr. Moloney did not ask us for prices, although we were prepared to put in a tender for the work at a low figure. We would be sorry to believe that he has disobeyed the order of the Council for the sake of personal or political gain. We always found Mr. Moloney the soul of honor and integrity, and we are sure he will be able to explain the matter, and will be pleased to give him all the space he wants in these columns for that purpose.

Items of Interest

St. Petersburg, March 12.—Severe earthquake shocks recurred at Shamaka, Trans Caucasia, Sunday. About 13,000 persons are still destitute as a result of the subterranean disturbances which occurred at Shamaka about the middle of February.

GOOD WORK OF THE DISCOVERY.

London, March 12.—Sir Clements Markham, was enthusiastic as to the Discovery and her captain and crew in his address to the Royal Geographical Society. The ship had proved, he said, to be the best that had ever entered the Polar seas, while Captain Scott had already shown himself to be the beau ideal of the Polar commander. As to the officers and the crew, they had now acquired the only thing they needed, which was experience. Sir Clements described the voyages' first encounter with ice, always an important event in Polar voyages. Lieutenant Michael Barne was officer of the watch on a dull, snowy morning in November, and he suddenly and gleefully shouted, "Ice on the port bow!" It proved to be a piece about two feet square, and soon after passing it the good ship was christened by another piece striking her bows. In the first week a close pack of ice was reached. The first experiences with Polar conditions gave all on board great confidence in the ship, particular pleasure being felt in the way in which she forced herself through ice many feet thick. Sir Clements gave an account of the scientific work of the expedition, and told how a good ornithological collection had been made both on the ice and at Macquarie Island. At that place the explorers made acquaintance with the taste of penguin flesh. There was penguin stew, penguin roast and penguin boiled. Some liked penguin and some did not, but all realized the necessity of cultivating a taste for it. Sir Clement made an urgent appeal for funds towards the cost of the relief ship, which would have to be sent out in June.

SHIPWRECKED CREW'S EXPERIENCE.

Belfast, Ireland, March 12. — Details have just reached Belfast of the terrible hardships endured by the crew of the brigantine C. M. Reynolds, which was wrecked on the Donegal coast while on a voyage from Kilrush to Belfast. The vessel encountered fearful weather off Achill Island, and after the mast had snapped and brought down all the gear she drifted about in a helpless condition for several hours. Fortunately, however, instead of driving against the jutting cliffs, the brigantine grounded on a shelving beach near Termore, and the crew, after much difficulty, succeeded in getting ashore. They found themselves confronted by a precipitous cliff, up which two of the men, who were by this time exhausted, had to be hauled by their companions, who then started off to seek for assistance. During that and the following day they searched in vain for any sign of human habitation in the bleak, inhospitable country, but at length they met a man who guided them to the village of Ardara, where their wants were attended to. Meanwhile search parties set out to rescue the two men who had been left behind. One, Dan Morris, of Cardiff, was discovered in a very exhausted state, but his companion, John Coghlan, of Kilrush, was not found till the following day. He had been five days without food, and exposed to the bitter winter weather. He was removed to Ardara, where he lies in a critical condition.

London, March 11.—A large store of honey has been discovered in the roof of Strawberry Hall, at Tydd St. Mary. It was known that two swarms of bees had "hived" there for sixteen years, and Alderman T. W. Banks several times offered the honey to any one who would shift the bees and make the roof good again. The novel task was at last accepted by a builder, who has removed no less than 280 pounds of honey.

PRINCESS RADZIWILL ILL.

Cape Town, March 10.—The case of the Princess Radziwill, who was arrested on February 26th on a charge of forging the name of Mr. Cecil Rhodes to several notes was called in court to-day. The hearing was adjourned, however, on account of the indisposition of the Princess. At the time of her arrest, the Princess was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000.

ITALIAN CHAMBER.

Rome, March 10.—The Chamber of Deputies, met to-day, and elected Signor Biancheri President by a vote of 402 to 252. The Ministerialists were also successful in the subsequent ballots electing their candidates for vice-presidents and secretaries.

WARSHIPS TO DISPERSE.

London, Tuesday, March 11.—A despatch to the Morning Post from Berlin states that the German warships in Venezuelan waters are about to disperse in various directions. Only one cruiser will remain to meet whatever emergency may arise, although the authorities are convinced that the Venezuelan incident may be regarded as being definitely closed.

DOMINION LINE'S NEW ROUTE.

Queenstown, March 11.—The new twin screw steamer Merion, which, with her sister ship the new steamer Haverford, has been chartered from the International Navigation Company by the Dominion Line for their service between Liverpool and Boston, by way of this port, left here on Sunday afternoon at a quarter past one, on her maiden voyage to Boston from Liverpool.

SOUTH AMERICAN TREATY.

Madrid, March 11.—It is officially announced that Marquis De Prat de Nantouillet, the Spanish Minister to Mexico, complying with instructions from the Home Government, has signed an arbitration treaty with the delegates of Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Guatemala, Paraguay, Salvador, San Domingo and Uruguay. Honduras, Costa Rica and Venezuela will sign the treaty shortly.

TO VACATE MANCHURIA.

London, Tuesday, March 11.—A despatch to The Times from Pekin says that Russia, yielding to China's persistence, now undertakes to withdraw from Manchuria within eighteen months. China still insists that she do so within a year.

NO WORD OF HURONIAN.

London, March 11.—The Allan Line officials have received no news in regard to their steamship Huronian which left Glasgow February 11, for St. John, N.B., and is now about 21 days overdue.

CHOLERA AT MECCA.

Constantinople, March 11.—Cholera has broken out at Mecca.

It was announced in a despatch last week from Constantinople that cholera had broken out at Medina, Arabia, 240 miles from Mecca.

LADY TEACHERS FOR AFRICA.

Ottawa, March 11.—Over 70 applications have been received from lady teachers desirous of engaging for service in their profession in South Africa. In all 40 will be taken from Canada, and of the number 20 will be chosen in Ontario.

SPENT $7,000,000 IN CANADA

Ottawa, March 11.—The Imperial War Office has to date expended through the Department of Agriculture in food and forage for South Africa over $7,000,000.

Ottawa, March 11.—A cable to the Governor-General from the Casualty Department at Cape Town announces that Trooper Claude Lobban was severely wounded at Brandrite last Friday. His father is W. Lobban, of Chatham, N.B.

Topeko, Kan., March 11.—At Leoti, a small town on the plains of Western Kansas, a band of juveline robbers and highwaymen, has terrorised the entire community. People have been assaulted and robbed, dwelling houses have been rifled and business houses have been plundered right and left. The robbers became so bold that people were afraid to venture out of their homes at night, and those who were compelled to be out, carried guns for self-protection. Some of these were knocked down and robbed of their guns. Every store in Leoti was robbed from one to three times. No one could locate the robbers.

A few days ago a vigilance committee was secretly organized by the bravest men of the town to run the outlaws to earth. A squad of men secreted themselves in different parts of the town to watch developments. To the amazement of the people, they found that twelve boys, ranging in age from ten to fifteen years, all sons of prominent men, were the outlaws.

TEN MET DEATH IN THE FLAMES

Matane, Que., March 10.—One of the most dreadful tragedies that has been known in this part of the country occurred here Sunday morning, resulting in the loss of ten lives.

A girl passing Arthur Bouchard's grocery store and dwelling saw it in flames, and gave the alarm. Mr. Bouchard immediately jumped from an upper window, and was about to be followed by his wife, but she was evidently overcome, as she failed in her attempt to escape, and perished, together with her nine children, six boys and three girls, the eldest a boy of 14 years, and the girl, 12 years; four boys, aged 10, 9, 8, 7 years, two girls, 6 and 4, and a boy 2 years.

Mr. Bouchard, the only member of the family to escape, is almost demented with grief and cannot give a clear account of the terrible catastrophe.

Bouchard arose about 5 o'clock and lighted a fire in the kitchen, and then retired again. It is thought the fire caught in the kitchen.

SUICIDED IN THE BAY

Samuel Miller, aged 62 years, a retired Markdale farmer, who has been in the city for three months, and has failed to find employment, jumped into the Bay off Bertram's dock, near Queen's Wharf, yesterday morning, and was drowned, though Thomas Thompson and John Day, who witnessed the leap, made immediate efforts to rescue him. The body was recovered in half an hour's time, but too late for any efforts at resuscitation to avail.

Miller leaves a widow and daughter. With his family, he boarded at 321 Adelaide street west. He recently sold his farm in Grey.

On the wharf Miller left a note, giving the name and address of deceased, and an appeal to relatives in Markdale to care for his wife and daughter. There was also a statement regarding Miller's life insurance, which is left to his family. Nothing was contained in the note which would give any reason for his desire to end his existence. It is believed, however, that the man contemplated suicide before leaving his apartments yesterday, as a large sum of money, which he usually carried in his pocket, was found on the dresser. The remains were removed last night from the morgue to B. J. Humphrey's undertaking rooms, for burial.

1,000,000,000 TONS OF COAL

Montreal, March 10.— General Manager Shields of the Dominion Coal Company, before leaving for the east stated that, acting under expert advice that the Mullins seams underlay their whole area and stretched back towards Mira and Louisburg, they had on Saturday made a strike which added 1,000,000,000 tons to the known coal deposits.

Washington, March 11—It is learned at the State Department that the attitude of Mr. Leishman, the United States Minister to Turkey, is liable to be misunderstood, owing to the brevity of the cable report that he has preferred a demand upon Turkey in the case of Miss Stone.

The understanding here is that any action in that line that Mr. Leishman may have taken is rather in the line of saving all future rights rather than the submission of an unqualified demand for the punishment of the brigands and a repayment of the indemnity given to the brigands. The same sort of a caveat either has been or will be filed with the Bulgarian Government.

It is possible that the Department may be hampered in the efforts to secure reparation by the peculiar political relations existing between Turkey and Bulgaria, and the consequent inability to determine the exact measure of responsibility of Turkey for Bulgarian shortcomings, should it be found that the Bulgarian Government itself is responsible for Miss Stone's capture. The question is now being examined carefully.

All Day Sunday

She Thought About a Food that would Agree with Her.

An unnatural appetite for rich and improper food is really kept alive by the use of such foods, whereas a change to healthful, nourishing and scientifically made food will correct the unnatural appetite. A little woman up at Peekskill, N.Y., Margaret Smith, P.O. box 193, says:

"I was such a sufferer from dyspepsia that life was a burden. I could hardly keep from eating all sorts of pastry, cakes and other rich foods, although they did not agree with me, nor in fact did any sort of food. I became low spirited and discouraged, was too weak to work and very seriously troubled with palpitation of the heart.

"Drugs seemed to make me worse rather than better. A friend said one day: 'I believe Grape-Nuts food would cure you,' explaining that the food was made with great care and intended for the prevention and relief of diseases that were brought about by improper food.

"That was Saturday night, and all day Sunday I kept thinking about Grape-Nuts, and the first thing Monday morning I sent for a package. I had it in my mind that the food would look like nuts, and was disappointed when I [illegible], had to be eaten with a spoon. However, I followed the directions and made a meal of Grape-Nuts and milk, which I found to be delicious, and for the first time in months I suffered no distress after eating.

"I at once began to feel hopeful that I might be cured at last. Since that day I have used Grape-Nuts constantly, morning and night, and have steadily improved in health, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life; weigh 10 pounds more than I did a year ago, have no palpitation of the heart and can work all day long.

"At supper I have Grape-Nuts mixed with soft boiled eggs. I make my dinner on any kind of food I desire. One of the best things about this cure by proper food is that I no longer have any desire for the rich, indigestible rubbish of which I used to be so fond."

Big Doings in Peterborough Last Night.

Not since the return of our South African heroes has such a wave of enthusiasm swept over the town, as that which last night led thousands of citizens to throng the principal streets.

The hockey team were on their way from Galt, and young and old joined in the effort to accord a fitting welcome to them, and to do honor to the boys for the splendid manner in which they upheld the fair name of the seven on Monday night.

During the day, Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons had been busy decorating the line of streets from the G. T. R. depot to the Oriental Hotel, and all the principal buildings on the route displayed flags, bunting, etc.

If any individual decoration was deserving of special mention, it was that of Messrs. W. Lech and Sons, Hatters and Furriers, George street, in whose window appeared a unique display of seven hats, trimmed in the club colors, each hat bearing the name of one of the players. The Oriental hotel was most profusely decorated with flags, banners, bunting, etc.

On the arrival of the train bringing the team, a procession was formed in the following order: 57th regiment band; hose wagon, decorated; hook and ladder truck; cabs, containing "the boys" and a few of their friends; sleigh, containing lady hockeyists, and other sleighs. Bonfires blazed at the street corners, and fireworks were in evidence everywhere. The procession moved up Charlotte, and George to Hunter, along Hunter to Water, up Water to Murray, thence down George and up Hunter to the Oriental hotel, amid the continued cheers of the onlookers.

Arriving at the Oriental, a hearty reception, indeed, was tendered the victors. Dinner was served in Mr. Graham's usual good style, and over the board each told how the field was won.

(Whispers—(With apologies to the Galt Reformer.)

7—4.
All over now.
Peterborough is gay.
Galt isn't.
Verily, pride goeth before a fall.
Monday's game had but one result.

BOBCAYGEON RAILWAY

The Work of Building the Railway from Lindsay to Bobcaygeon

What is known as the Lindsay, Pontypool and Bobcaygeon Railway, is not making much progress. After a number of municipal bonuses had been voted on and carried, and government subsidies obtained, a start was made. Ground was broken at the Bobcaygeon end, and about $4,000 spent. For over a year nothing has been done.

At a meeting of the Lindsay Board of Trade, held a few days ago, Mr Kylie referred to the unsatisfactory outlook for the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon & Pontypool R. R. scheme. The citizens were in doubt as to whether they would have to pay the debentures or not, and owing to the uncertainty were not in a position to deal with an offer from any industry.

Mr. Hopkins —"We had to fix certain dates for the commencement and completion of the work. I think four years is the time limit, and I understand a proper start was made. The bonds are in charge of a Trust Co. and will not be handed over unless all the conditions are complied with."

Mr. Kylie—"I know the bonds are safe, but the promoters were bound to make a substantial beginning inside a certain date after the voting of the bonus, and I don't think that has been done."

President Flavelle—"Well, I understand from Mr. Boyd that about $4,000 has been expended."

Mr. Kylie — "But the fact remains that a proper start has not been made."

NORWOOD, APSLEY RAILWAY

The Company are Now in Legal Shape to go Ahead

The disappointment felt, particularly by our friends in the north, over the delay in getting a railway, has not disheartened them. They have faith in the projected line from Norwood, and we are pleased to say that their faith is not groundless. Mr. Pearce, the energetic President of the Norwood and Apsley Railway, does not propose to give up because the C. P. R. is not ready to proceed with the work of construction. He and those associated with him have subscribed the necessary Capital to qualify and give the Company the proper legal status in accordance with the act of incorporation.

We understand it is proposed to interest foreign capital in the enterprise, and when the necessary funds are provided, to build the road. This should not be difficult, on account of the liberal subsidies granted by both the Dominion and Ontario Parliaments.

You are Tired

Your color is not good. Restless one moment, fretful and blue the next. The world's out of joint. You're out of joint with the world. Not temper, not feeling, but weakness. Neglect is unwise. You grow steadily worse. Get good rich blood, then feel new vigor, strength, buoyancy. You'll see a dozen things to do; you will do them, too, if you use Ferrozone. It sharpens the appetite and you enjoy your food; you get color, and old-time strength comes back. That's because Ferrozone aids digestion, makes red blood. Ferrozone is strength for the nerves and vigor for the brain. Be sure of the name, Ferrozone. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

Prince Henry Goes Home

New York, March 11—When Prince Henry boarded the steamship Deutschland he found his cabin filled with flowers and other mementoes sent by distinguished persons whom he had met during his sojourn in this country. At the dock, to see him off, were Ambassador von Holleben, Consul General Buenz, Rear-Admiral Evans, Assistant Secretary of State David J. Hill and many other persons of distinction. The Deutschland is to take the shorter course across the Atlantic and is expected to arrive at Bremen by next Wednesday.

Promises Smokeless Coal

Harrisburg, Pa., March 12 — Announcement is made of the incorporation here of the Somerset Smokeless Coal and Coke Company. The new company proposes to supply a quality of coal that, when handled by competent firemen, will be almost free from smoke. The company has 125 acres of coal land near Berlin, Pa., and about 200 tons of coal a day are now being mined. The coal is being mined at 30 feet beneath the surface and is said to be of a different quality from the ordinary coal.

Triplets Have Reunion

Baltimore, Md., March 12—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob Price, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Price, of Hereford, this county, and who are believed to be the oldest triplets, all males, in this country, celebrate the forty-second anniversary to their birth to-day. Physicians say that cases of triplets of the same sex living to the prime of life are remarkable. The Messrs. Price were born in York County, Pennsylvania. There were nine children in the family, including the triplets, and all are living and enjoying health. Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Price, the heads of this remarkable family are hale and hearty and recently celebrated their golden wedding.

Catarrhal Poisons and Their Remedy

The poisonous secretions from catarrh are dangerous because they affect the stomach and bowels, giving rise to an unhealthy condition of those organs. Catarrh is the source of much ill-health and was considered practically incurable until it was demonstrated to the satisfaction of the medical profession that by the use of Catarrhozone any case of nasal or throat trouble can be permanently and quickly cured. Catarrhozone by its unusual merit has enlisted the support and endorsement of the most prominent medical authorities, who freely state that any one giving it a trial is sure to receive permanent benefit. Sold for $1. Small size 25c. At druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

THE BOERS WORE THE RRITISH KHAKI UNIFORM

Some Further Details of the Defeat of Lord Methuen's Force

NATIVE BOYS BEGAN THE PANIC AMONG TROOPS

General Delarey's Force was Three Hundred Stronger Than the British—Press Comments on the Disaster

London, March 11.—In a despatch, dated Pretoria, General Kitchener sends the following summary of the latest reports of the disaster: "General Methuen's ox convoy, escorted by half his force, started an hour in advance of the mule convoy. The enemy made a sudden flanking and enveloping attack from the rear. The first disorder was occasioned by the native boys with the led horses galloping through the mule convoy as the latter was endeavoring to comply with General Methuen's directions to close on the ox convoy. This disorder in the mule convoy communicated itself to the mounted troops, and Boers dressed in khaki, riding along with the wagons, frustrated all attempts of the officers to rally their men.

"Great confusion ensued among the portion of the mounted troops, and they and the mule wagons, galloping three miles beyond the ox wagons, were cut off in sections. The Fourth and Thirty-eight Batteries fought with great gallantry. Three hundred of the Northumberland Fusiliers and Loyal North Lancashire Regiment showed conspicuous courage in protecting the wagons, refusing to surrender until resistance was useless.

BOERS IN BRITISH UNIFORMS.

"Delarey's force were almost all dressed in our uniform, which made it impossible for the infantry to distinguish between our men and the enemy when the mounted troops were driven in on them.

"The enemy numbered 1,500 men, with a 15-pounder and a pom-pom. Delarey, Celliers, Kemp, Vermaas, Tromp, and other Boer commanders were present.

"General Methuen was seen by an agent of the Intelligence Department well cared for in his own wagon. By a private telegram I find that his thigh is fractured, but he is reported to be doing well.

"A message has been received saying the wounded will be brought to the railway to-day.

"I hope the reinforcements now arriving will rectify the situation in this area without disturbing operations elsewhere."

THE IRISH CHEERED.

The news was received in the House of Commons amid great excitement. The reading of Lord Kitchener's telegram by Mr. Brodrick was listened to in deep silence, which was broken by loud Irish cheers. Instantly there were cries of "Shame, shame!" from the Government benches. Then the Irish members seemed to think better of their outbreak, and suddenly subsided. The subsequent eulogistic references to General Methuen were received with cheers.

Lord Roberts' chivalry in taking the trouble to go to the House of Lords and pay a tribute to General Methuen when his defeat and capture were announced was appreciated, but it was suggested by a spectator that the commander-in-chief himself needed some good-natured eulogist when a British general had been taken prisoner nearly eighteen months after he had declared the war was practically ended.

There was an impression among soldiers that Lord Kitchener's concentration against De Wet had been met by a similar massing of burghers against two exposed columns in the Western Transvaal.

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

The Daily Telegraph, however, does not withold praise from the Boer leader. It says editorially: "The Boer commander in his latest, as well as in his previous, exploit of a few weeks ago near Kroonstad, has shown what no other leader on the side of the enemy has ever done,—a mastery of daring, yet severely scientific tactics, which would do credit to any professional soldier. If Delarey were steeped in Clausewitz and Jomini he could not have struck with more skill of design or certainty in action."

London, March 11.—The Times says the Irish Nationalist jubilation when Methuen's defeat was announced in the House, is strongly resented by Liberals, and is likely to drive into Rosebery's camp several follows of Campbell-Bannerman. Even extreme pro-Boers, says The Times, think it un-British to gloat over the misfortunes of soldiers doing their duty.

AMERICAN SERVILITY DENOUNCED.

Paris, March 11.—A despatch from Berlin to the Paris edition of The New York Herald says word has been sent to the newspapers to make no comment on Prince Henry's visit to the United States. News of his movements is only to be given. The Social Democratic press refuses to be bound by such an order, and roundly abuses the United States for servility to Royalty.

NEW AGREEMENT MAKES FOR PEACE

London, March 11.—A despatch from Tokio to The Times says that the principal industrial commercial associations recently gave a banquet to members of the British Legation, and Consulates, in order to emphasize the pacific of the British-Japanese agreement.

KING WISHES TO VISIT FRANCE.

London, March 11.—Referring to reports of a visit to France by King Edward, the Paris correspondent of The Times says it is able to state that the King desires to visit the south of France, but there is no immediate prospect of his doing so.

CHINESE BOLDLY OPPOSE RUSSIA

London, March 12.—A despatch from Pekin to The Times, written by Dr. Morrison, says that Russia is yielding to Chinese persistence and now undertakes to withdraw from Manchuria within eighteen months after the signature of the proposed convention. China still insists that the withdrawal take place within a year.

An Immense Addition to Rolling Stock

Montreal, March 12.—The executive of the Canadian Pacific has just compiled the annual order for rolling stock, which is one of the largest in the history of the company, and will bring its freight car service alone up to over 20,000 and its locomotives to about 1,000 engines in round numbers. Of the eighty locomotives the great majority will be of the heavy Atlantic pattern, with ten drivers weighing on an average of 100 tons. They will all be built at the company's shops on Delorimier avenue under the supervision of Mr. E. A. Williams, superintendent of rolling stock at Delorimier avenue. A few probably will be erected at the Kingston locomotive works.

Of passenger cars, the company will build 20 first-class cars of the recent heavy improved style, six combined smokers and first-class, two diners, six sleepers, two parlor, five baggage and two observation cars to be used in the Rocky Mountains.

Of freight cars there is being finished an order for 710 40-ton flat-cars, 300 40-ton coal cars, 95 standard vans, 50 30-ton refrigerator cars, 270 stock and 1,250 40-ton box-cars.

The passenger cars will be constructed at the Hochelaga shops under the supervision of Mr. W. Apps, master car builder; the freight cars and vans at the Perth shops with the exception of a small order for box cars, which goes to Rhode, Currie & Co. of Amherst, Nova Scotia.

The Grand Trunk authorities have not completed its car building programme, but it will also be a large one, both in passenger and freight cars. It has just completed an order for 500 "furniture" cars, which are attracting considerable attention. They are great carriers, giants in size, with a capacity of 60,000 pounds, 42 feet 6 inches long and weigh, light, 37,700 pounds. They were all built at the Point St. Charles shops, and are admitted to be unsurpassed on the continent.

New Thirteen-cent Stamp

Washington, D.C., March 12 — The postoffice department is preparing to issue a new stamp, designed especially for the foreign mail service. It is to be a denomination new to the postal service—13 cents. At present it is impossible to send a registered letter through the foreign mails without using two stamps, one of five cents to pay the postage, and one of eight cents to pay the cost of registration. When the 13 cent stamp is on sale this will be obviated by the use of one stamp. The new stamp will bear a portrait of President Harrison, shown seated at his desk in the executive mansion.

CHAMBERLAIN'S POWER IN THE ASCENDANT

"The Pride of Birmingham" to be Premier of Britain

HE WILL SUCCEED SALISBURY.

This Now the Talk of London—Chamberlain One of Britain's Most Remarkable Men

New York, March 12.—The World's London correspondent reported the popular belief in England that Joseph Chamberlain is the strong man of the Tory-Unionist coalition and the predestined Prime Minister after Salisbury.

A remarkable confirmation of this piece of news is furnished by a notable leader in the Review. Hailing the Birmingham statesman as the probable Premier to be—though it does not love him—the Review consoles itself with the reflection that by the next general election "Chamberlain will be verging upon his seventieth year, and though he is extraordinarily young for his age, it is not in the course of nature that he should surpass or equal his present achievements." But the four greatest Prime Ministers of the Victorian reign—Lord John Russell, Lord Palmerston, Benjamin Disraeli and William Ewart Gladstone—all held the office when they were over seventy.

Comparable only with Disraeli's conquest of the British aristocracy, and his invention of "Tory Democracy," for its paradoxical suggestions, would be Chamberlain's climax as Salisbury's successor. A plebeian by birth leading the patrician party; a dissenter and at one time disestablisher chief of the State Church party; an unschooled man at the head of the Oxford-bred side of Parliament; the champion of a radical reform of the House of Lords and the death duties—so odious to the landed gentry—and at one time of Irish Rule, to be commander-in-chief of the nobility, the first imperialist and the strongest Anti-Home Ruler of them all!

Prime Minister Chamberlain, if he happens, will surely be one of the most freakish figures in British political history.

METHUEN'S MISFORTUNE

The reverse to General Methuen, of which further particulars are given in another column, is not serious in the sense that it will make any difference to the final result of the war, but it goes to show, that there is more fight left in the Boers than had been generally believed. Lord Methuen has stuck to his post, through good and evil report, ever since the war began, receiving censure for things for which he was only technically responsible, and he had come to have the confidence of the British public. How he could have fallen into Delarey's trap will be explained sometime. Perhaps an incident like this was needed to rouse the British army out of its staleness.

BRITAIN OUR BEST FRIEND

We should now begin to hear about the duty of Canada to the Mother Country. There was a note struck the other day at the meeting of the Board of Trade in Montreal which should re-echo throughout the Dominion. It has been said — ungenerously said — that England has never done anything for Canada. Whatever may be the initial history, England organized this country and gave it institutions and a name and place among the nations. She nursed it in infancy. She encouraged its early steps towards nationhood. She lent it money. She developed its resources. And always, while in the formative stage, she supported the Dominion, which was too feeble to stand alone. What return has Canada offered? She has treated the Mother Country as an alien, taxed her goods, while demanding a free market for her own exports, and refused to supply men for the front in a war which England waged, not for her own glory or profit, but in the interests of the colonial [illegible] a war in which the Dominion had a far more vital interest than the Mother Country.

Events are moving rapidly. We cannot expect that England will continue to guarantee our independent existence unless we are willing to become a partner of the responsibilities as well as the glory of empire. We have been asking not merely for an open, but for a preferential market in England for our products, while we still tax all British goods coming into our ports, and at the same time refuse to contribute a cent to the maintenance of the power upon which we are absolutely dependent for our continued existence. This condition of things cannot continue. We must make up our minds. There are, to be sure, certain influences in this country frankly against a real Imperialism—an influence which would confine our attention and interest to internal development, without regard to the other portions of the empire, and especially without regard to the policy of England, but this influence it should be the duty of all loyal men to thwart and destroy, for it is only by being knit to the empire by the indissoluble bonds of interest and sentiment that we can hope to retain our present position. In a word, we must commence at once to become a contributor to the maintenance of the empire, which is likely to last some time longer in spite of the prognostications of Mr. Stead, who is, nevertheless, a very clever sensation-monger.

Next to England, we are the best customer which the United States possesses, yet the latter erects and maintains a high tariff wall against us, which practically excludes us from a market of seventy-five million people. It is our interest, then, as well as our duty, to draw closer the ties between England and the Dominion, for while England guarantees our independence, the Dominion, one of these days, will be supplying England with all the breadstuffs she needs, thus making her independent of foreign countries. One way to check the Americanisation of the world is for all the British colonies to rally round the Mother Country, adding to her strength by the young vigor which they can exert, by the wealth which they can create, by the manly race which they can propagate, by the high Imperialism which they can teach by song and story, and sentiment.

Character in [illegible] Smoking.

"Royal Magazine."

A MAN may possess a most secretive nature, he may have a face as destitute of meaning as a stone wall and a manner of speech absolutely non-committal; but watch him over his cigarette: note his manner of holding it between his lips or his fingers, see how he puffs the smoke out of his mouth, what he does with the ash, if he consumes the cigarette to a mere stump or throws it away half finished, and, sure as fate, you will read his character like a book. Cigarette, I said, for a cigarette, and a cigar in a lesser degree, are much better character revealers than a pipe. A man sticks a pipe into the side of his mouth and puffs away, and there's an end of it. You discover next to nothing, unless, indeed, he happens to puff very violently, which is a certain indication of a nervous, irritable temper. From the filling of a pipe, to be sure, many luminous little hints may be gathered. You see a man stuff his bowl quickly and lavishly, letting loose threads of tobacco dangle over the brim while he applies the match; if he be not good-natured, generous to a fault, careless, indolent, quick to make friends, quick to forget them, I shall be much astonished. One notices men very often taking their cigars from an upper waistcoat pocket into which they have been stuffed. Too poor to buy themselves a cigar-case? Not a bit of it, but too untidy to keep one or too lazy to arrange their cigars into one. And the same men almost invariably bite the tips off their cigars, instead of using a penknife or a cigar-clipper—a shocking habit that not merely fills the mouth with tobacco grit, but disarranges the outer leaf, often spoiling an otherwise excellent smoke.

The cigar once happily prepared for smoking, observe how your man holds it between his teeth. But stay! The operation of lighting has also its interest. The tobacco epicure grips his cigar not merely with his teeth when applying the match, but with the finger and thumb of his left hand also, and between every third puff draws the weed from his mouth and examines the glowing end, in order to make sure that it has been ignited equally all round.

The majority of men hold their cigars with the front teeth and puff the smoke out on either side of it. A large minority hold them in the corner of the mouth, so that if you happen to be walking behind them on a dark night you catch sight of the glowing end protruding just below the ear. Others, again—and these, as a rule, are persons of vivacious temperament—seldom keep their cigars for two consecutive moments between their lips. They take a few puffs, and then the cigar is given a rest between finger and thumb.

A man of determined character, energetic, pugnacious, impatient, often betrays himself by giving his cigar an upward tilt while consuming it—a favorite method with the Yankee, to whom the above epithets are distinctly applicable. The contemplative, dreamy individual will let it droop towards his chin; while level-headed persons—and fortunately they form the vast majority—hold theirs horizontally. Naturally insolent people frequently omit to remove the cigar from their mouths when speaking to you, while others of a sullen, brooding disposition chew the end into horrible pulp. And is there anything more eloquent of stinginess than the habit, largely indulged in by Germans, of sticking the stump of a cigar on the small blade of a penknife and consuming it until the glow almost touches the lips?

Expensive Loss of Temper.

Mr. D. of Boston, a devotee of the wheel, was not long ago visiting in one of the small towns of Western Massachusetts. He was taking a spin about its streets shortly after his arrival, when he was run down, as he afterward declared, by a negro, and knocked off his bicycle. The fall not only ruffled his dignity and his clothes, says "Harper's Magazine," but broke his skin and his wheel.

These combined injuries made a breach in his placidity, and he picked up a stone and threw it with accurate aim at the colored man and brother. This infraction of the peace resulted in his arrest and in his conviction in the local court of justice.

"I fine you five dollars," said the judge. "Have you anything to say?"

"Nothing," replied D., unmollified, "except that I wish I had killed the fellow."

"That remark will cost you five dollars more," rejoined His Honor.

D.'s temper was not improved by this fresh dispensation of justice, wherefore the bitterness of his rejoinder was plainly apparent.

"Conversation seems to come high in this court," he observed.

"Five dollars for contempt," promptly responded the bench. "Have you anything more to say?"

"I think not," answered the defendant. "You have the advantage of me in repartee."

Payment of the fines closed the case.

Grandma Went Skating.

One day last winter a little boy who attended a Walnut Hills school, according to the Cincinnati "Enquirer," arrived in the schoolroom not only half an hour late, but very dirty.

"Willie," said the teacher, "why are you late, and why is your face not washed?"

"Please," explained Willie, "my grandmother was out skatin' last night, and she was too tired to get up this morning and get me ready for school."

So absurd an excuse naturally excited the teacher's wrath, and she started an investigation, threatening punishment for Willie's supposed untruthfulness.

To her amazement she found that the boy had told the exact truth. The old lady, who had been an expert skater in her youth, had been tempted to join a skating party. The result was that she felt the next morning, as the boy expressed it, as if her bones were "cracking like a horse-fiddle," and it took the services of three neighbors to pry her out of bed.

A Street Scene.

Child—Oh, mother, stop; I want to look at that man just run over by the car. "Come along, do! There will be another presently a little further on."—"Life."

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone" fifty times. On the other side was written "I have went home."

Dooley on Country Life.

"I WANST spint a night in th' counthry, Hinnissy. 'Twas whin Hogan had his villa out near th' river. 'Twas called a villa to distinguish it fr'm a house. If 'twas a little bigger, 'twud be big enough f'r th' hens, an' if 'twas a little smaller, 'twud be small enough f'r a dog. It looked as if 'twas made with a scroll saw, but Hogan manyfacthered it himsilf out iv a design in th' pa-aper. 'How to make a counthry home on wan thousan' dollars. Puzzle: find th' money.' Hogan kidnapped me wan afthernoon an' took me out there in time to go to bed. He boosted me up a laddher into me bedroom adjinin' th' roof. 'I hope,' says I, 'I'm not discommodin' th' pigeons,' I says. 'There ain't anny pigeons here,' says he. 'What's that?' says I. 'That's a mosquito,' says he. 'I thought ye didn't have anny here,' says I. 'Tis th' first wan I've seen,' says he, whackin' himsilf on th' back iv th' neck. 'I got ye that time, assassin,' he says, hurlin' th' remains to th' ground. 'They on'y come,' he says, 'afther a heavy rain or a heavy dhry spell,' he says, 'or whin they's a little rain,' he says, 'followed be some dhryness,' he says. 'Ye mustn't mind thim,' he says. 'A mosquito on'y lives f'r a day,' he says. 'Tis a short life an' a merry wan,' says I. 'Do they die iv indigistion?' I says. So he fell down through th' thrap-dure an' left me alone.

"Well, I said me prayers an' got into bed an' lay there, thinkin' iv me past life, an' wondherin' if th' house was on fire. 'Twas warrum, Hinnissy. I'll not deny it. Th' roof was near enough to me that I cud smell th' shingles, an' th' sun had been rollin' on it all day long, an' though it had gone away, it'd left a ray or two to keep th' place. But I'm a survivor iv th' gr-reat fire, an' I often go down to th' rollin'-mills, an' besides, mind ye, I'm iv that turn iv mind that whin 'tis hot I say 'tis hot, an' lave it go at that. So I whispers to mesilf, 'I'll dhrop off,' I says, 'into a peaceful slumber,' I says, 'like th' healthy plough-boy that I am,' says I. An' I counted as far as I knew how, an' conducted a flock iv sheep in a steeplechase, an' I'd just begun f'r to wondher how th' las' thing I thought iv came into me head, whin a dog started to howl in th' yard. They was a frind iv this dog in th' nex' house that answered him, an' they had a long chat. Some other dogs butted in to be companyable. I heerd Hogan rollin' in bed, an' thin I heerd him goin' out to get a dhrink iv wather. He thripped over a chair befure he lighted a match to look at th' clock. It seemed like an hour befure he got back to bed. Be this time th' dogs was tired, an' I was thinkin' I'd take a nap, whin a bunch iv crickets under me windows begun f'r to discoorse. I've heard iv th' crickets on th' hearth, Hinnissy, an' I used to think they were all th' money, but anny time they get on me hearth I buy me a pound iv insect powdher. I'd rather have a planola on th' hearth anny day, an' Gawd save me fr'm that! An' so 'twas dogs an' mosquitoes, an' crickets an' mosquitoes, an' a screech-owl an' mosquitoes, an' a whippoorwill an' mosquitoes, an' cocks beginnin' to crow at two in th' mornin', an' mosquitoes, so that whin th' sun bounced up an' punched me in th' eye at four, I knew what th' truth is—that th' counthry is th' noisiest place in th' wurruld. Mind ye, there's a roar in th' city, but in th' counthry th' noises beats on ye'er ear like carpet-tacks bein' dhriven into th' dhrum. Between th' chirp iv a cricket an' th' chirp iv th' hammer at th' mills, I'll take th' hammer. I can go to sleep in a boiler-shop, but I spint th' rest iv that night in Hogan's, settin' in th' bath-tub.

"I saw him in th' mornin' at breakfast. We had canned peaches an' condensed milk. 'Ye have ye'er valise,' says he. 'Aren't ye goin' to stay out?' 'I am not,' says I. 'Whin th' first rattler goes by ye'll see me on th' platform feelin' th' peace an' quiet iv th' counthry, f'r th' turmoil an' heat,' I says, 'an' food iv a gr-reat city,' I says. 'Stay on th' farm,' says I. 'Commune,' I says, 'with nature,' I says. 'Enjoy,' I says, 'th' simple, rustic life iv th' merry farmer-boy that goes whistlin' to his wurruk before breakfast,' says I. 'But I must go back,' I says, 'to th' city,' I says, 'where there is nawthin' to eat but what ye want, an' nawthin' to dhrink but what ye can buy,' I says. 'Where th' dust is laid be th' sprinklin'-cart, where th' iceman comes reg'lar, an' th' roof garden is in bloom, an' ye're waked not be th' sun, but be th' milkman,' I says. 'I want to be near a doctor whin I'm sick, an' eat eatable food whin I'm hungry, an' where I can put me hand out early in th' mornin' an' hook in a newspaper,' says I. 'Th' city,' says I, 'is th' on'y summer resort f'r a man that has iver lived in th' city,' I says. An' so I come in."

My Love.

I love the blue and sunny sky,
And every blue bird that doth fly
Among the whisp'ring greenwood trees
Breathing forth soft ecstasies.

I love the sunny, golden beams
That dance and play o'er silvery streams;
I love the silent stars that shine,
Shedding an influence divine.

I love each broad, expansive field
That doth a golden harvest yield;
I love the clinging, clustered vine
That yields the rich and purple wine.

I love the music of the rills
That ripple down the rocky hills;
I love the violet where it grows,
In wastes that shield the wild, red rose.

I love to hear when I'm alone
The wild winds deeply sigh and moan,
And feel the ocean's great heart beat,
While white-capped waves their plaint repeat.

—Minnie Louise Thomas.

The Deacon's Exhortation.

A white minister was conducting religious services in a colored church in North Carolina recently. After exhorting a bit, he asked an old colored deacon to lead in prayer, and, according to the Roanoke "News," this is the appeal which the brother in black offered for his brother in white: "O Lord, gib him de eye ob de eagle dat he spy out sin afar off. Glue his hands to de gospel plow. Tie his tongue to de line ob truth. Nail his ear to de gospel pole. Bow his head way down between his knees, and his knees way down in some lonesome, dark and narrer valley, where prayer is much wanted to be made. 'Noint him wid de kerosene ile of salvashun and set him on fire."

Anecdotal.

George Ade, the Chicago man who writes the "Fables in Slang," hails from Indiana, which he has said is a State where a man "never goes back on—or to." The other night he met an Indiana woman who asked him if he had ever noticed how many bright people came from Indiana. "Yes," he replied, "and the brighter they are the quicker they come."

HEADACHE

Is only one form of the suffering resulting from a diseased condition of the sensitive womanly organism. The only way to cure the headache is to cure the diseases which cause it.

The use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has been the means of curing thousands of women of headache, backache, female weakness and other forms of disease peculiar to women. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures bearing-down pains.

"I think if it were not for your 'Favorite Prescription' I would have been in my grave," writes Mrs. Nicola H. Gardner, of [illegible], Plymouth Co., Mass., Box 14. "I had pain all over me and such a dragging feeling it seemed I could not do my house work. I had to sit down to wash the dishes, even. In the year 1897 I was so sick I did not care to live and prayed many times that God would take me. One day I thought I would write to Dr. Pierce. In a few days I received an answer. I decided to try his medicine, and to-day I am a well woman. I have no headache, no pain at all. I used always to have headaches previous to the monthly period, and such pain that I would roll on the floor in agony. This sometimes would occur every two weeks, and I would be very weak afterward. I was in pain all over. My feet would slip from under me when I would try to go across the room, and I could not walk any distance without being in pain. I took three bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and three of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and three vials of Doctor Pierce's Pellets, and was completely cured."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets stimulate the liver.

London, March 10.—A despatch to The Times from Dublin says that some days ago a woman who had let her house to the Government for police barracks, died in the County of Tipperary. She had been rigidly boycotted after allowing the Government to use her house. After her death no person would dig a grave, and the work was done by police. No one attended the funeral except the woman's intimate friends and a few priests.

London, March 10.—A despatch from Vienna to The Times says there are indications of a disposition in Russia to adopt stringent measures to avert the Germanisation of the Western Russian Provinces, where trade and industry have passed almost completely into the hands of German merchants. The Moscow Viedomosti says the Germans are gradually effecting the peaceful conquest of the Russian provinces on the German-Austrian frontier.

Curious Bits of News.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 266,000. The total vote of the Prohibition party in the election of the same year was 209,000.

In the bottom of a strawberry-box opened at Hutchinson, Kan., the other day, the following note was found written on the smooth wood: "I am Cora Marsh, aged sixteen, of Logan, Mo. Never been kissed."

A man in Ray County, Mo., became convinced recently that he had incipient consumption. Every time he drew a full breath he heard a crackling sound. A doctor discovered that the crackling sound was made by a small buckle on his suspender.

A curious old custom was recently revived at Great Oakley, England, where parish lands were let by "pin in candle." The local clergyman presided. A pin is inserted in a burning candle, and so long as it remains in its tallow resting-place bids are taken. The last bidder before the pin drops is declared the tenant for the year.

A Paris schoolmaster has petitioned the French Chamber against kings still reigning on French playing cards. He suggests kings should be replaced by pictures of Thiers, MacMahon, Grevy, and Carnot; and queens by equally prominent women Republicans. The Parliamentary Commission sitting on the petition has replied that the change is impossible, since it would ruin quite a number of playing-card factories.

What is probably the most extraordinary plant ever discovered has now been found by R. A. Suverkrop, of Philadelphia, who, during trips to South America, has for some years been contributing to the collection of his friend, Professor N. E. Brown, of the Herbarium, Kew Gardens, London. The amazing plant which Mr. Suverkrop has now found is an orchid that takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty by letting down a tube into the water, the tube, when not in use, being coiled up on top of the plant.

Baltimore, Md., had a bulldog until recently, that made a practice of milking cows in the fields. Just how the dog formed the habit is not known, but it is thought he acquired it by following the example of calves. He had often been seen with the many cows in pasture about Mount Washington across a cow's back while she was lying down. His appetite for milk grew so strong that he was not satisfied with part of the supply, but wanted it all, and attacked a dairymaid who went into her barnyard to milk. He was despatched by a policeman with a revolver.

The capital invested in electrical enterprises in the United States is estimated by "American Trade" at four billion dollars. We have the same authority for the assertion that these industries employ more than half a million persons. Almost half of the aggregate capital is represented by the electric railways, which, it would be safe to assume, employ a majority of the half-million persons. There were dismal predictions current ten or fifteen years ago of things that would befall certain classes of labor when electric cars came in; but the abolishment of the horse-car has probably thrown no one out of work—except the horse.

Like Tearing the Heart Strings.—"It is not within the conception of man to measure my great sufferings from heart disease. For years I endured almost constant cutting and tearing pains about my heart, and many a time would have welcomed death. Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart has worked a veritable miracle."—Thos. Hicks, Perth, Ont.—29

is "quite English, you know." It was very popular when sold under the name of "Plashwater," but never so fashionable as now.
IT IS THE GENUINE "PLASHWATER."
Other papers sold in Canada now under that name are spurious imitations. Ask for "King Edward VII." Note Paper, with envelopes to match, and you will have the authentic kind.

SANTAL-MIDY

[illegible]

Curious Bits of News.

Few persons know that an ordinary gas jet will consume as much oxygen as four human beings. It is, therefore, well to remember when sitting long in a gas-lighted room to occasionally open a door or a window for a few moments and bring in some fresh air.

"Roughly speaking, the world's consumption of sugar in the last fifteen years has doubled, while in Great Britain it has trebled per head in forty years," says the "Medical Times." "The English and Americans stand easily at the head of the list as the sugar-eating nations."

Adding to his already long list of horticultural triumphs, Luther Burbank of Santa Rosa has produced a prune without a pit, says the San Francisco "Bulletin." Years of experience, of hard, patient work on the part of the Santa Rosa wizard were required to perfect this latest marvel. The hybrid is understood to be a cross between a plum and a prune. The pit of the ordinary prune has been a great drawback to the popular consumption of the fruit. Burbank's creation has no pit, but a tiny seed that is edible and in no way requires removal.

"American promoters must take a back seat," says the "Railway Age," "while a French mining engineer outlines his project of a trans-Alaskan-Siberian railway about 4,000 miles long, besides immense steam ferries across Behring Sea, and capitalized at $300,000,000. Circle City, a charming winter resort in the Arctic regions, on the Yukon River, a couple of thousand miles or so from its mouth, is to be the southern terminus of the road, and Vladivostock, in Russia, will be the always convenient Asian end."

It is generally understood that journalism, especially "yellow journalism," is expensive, but most people probably do not realize how very expensive it is. Dr. Parkhurst and other reformers have talked about the desirability of establishing endowed newspapers, which should be independent of popular patronage. If a paper like the "Journal" were living on the interest of an endowment fund without any business income to balance its outgo, the fund would have to be over $100,000,000. The pay-rolls of the great New York newspapers run from $30,000 to $80,000 a week, and that is only part of their expenses.

A German judge cites a rather remarkable case of lese majeste, which, he says, may be called "unintentional information." A peasant woman who had seen the Kaiser's consort as a slender girl in Prein Kenau, gave blunt rustic expression to her astonishment as to how the figure looked after the birth of several children. Her outcry was mentioned in gossip at a village inn, when it struck the ear of a gendarme who happened to be present. This gendarme reported the matter. His superior prosecuted it, and the amazed and bewildered old woman was transported from her cottage to a cell.

Among the many uses to which the automobile is applied in military service is that of a new Austrian invention, called the Schweitzer Military Mill-Bakery Automobile. This will follow the regiments on the march and make fresh bread from the wheat obtained on the spot. There is mounted on an automobile car a mill with bolters and kneading-troughs, all run by the same motor which runs the automobile. The oven is drawn along in the rear. The bran obtained serves as food for the cavalry horses. By this method five thousand men can be fed daily. This mill-bakery can also render service in cases of large labor contracts which bring together numbers of workmen.

Australians have queer nicknames for different states and for one another. The Queenslanders are dubbed "banana-landers;" Western Australians, known as "sandgropers" or "gropers," now abbreviated into Westralians. The Westralians class the whole of the other states in one group, and call them "t'other siders," and the inhabitants "t'other siders." Tasmania, so much like England in climate and other characteristics, is usually regarded as a little behind the times, and referred to as "the land of lots o' time," "the land of sleep a lot," and so on. Tasmanians are called Tassies, also "jameaters," jam being one of the chief productions of the "tight little island."
